Mr. SHERLEY. Take the bald proposition as it appears in the bill: Here is an effort by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to instruct the Mississippi River Commission in its duty. Now, if that is true, there is no reason for the Flood Control Committee existing. The Flood Control Committee has undertaken by the passage of an act to provide what the Mississippi River Commission shall do with a certain amount of money. Then the Mississippi River Commission comes before the Committee on Appropriations to get the money, but in the meanwhile the Committee on Rivers and Harbors proposes to come in and tell it what to do. If they can do that, any other committee can do that and override the jurisdiction of the Flood Control Committee. It may be desirable to be done, but on the point of order I insist that it is not in order that it should be done.

Mr. DENISON. Is it the gentleman's point that the committee has not jurisdiction because of the peculiar language it uses?

Mr. SHERLEY. All I have to argue from is the language you have used, and I say as to the provision you are carrying on this bill, you are without jurisdiction to carry it.

Mr. DENISON. I differ with the gentleman.

As I understand the rule, the Chair must judge the question of jurisdiction by the language of the bill. These matters that are stated extraneously are matters that may be stated, of course, in our attempt to enlighten each other, but the Chair can not decide the question of jurisdiction of a committee by statements of fact by Members of Congress, or can not even go to the hearings, so far as that is concerned; and I say as a matter of parliamentary principle that unless it appears on the face of the provision itself that this is intended for flood control, and is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Flood Control Committee and not in the jurisdiction of the River and Harbor Committee, the Chair should overrule the point of order.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I make no pretense of possessing any peculiar knowledge, or really any knowledge, of parliamentary procedure, but upon this question of concurrent jurisdiction over the Ohio River I have been to the Supreme Court once or twice.

I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] is absolutely correct when he says the Flood Control Committee took no jurisdiction away from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The truth of the matter is, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors never had any jurisdiction over flood control. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors from its inception had to do with navigable streams for navigable purposes only, and whatever jurisdiction they exercised in the way of preventing floods overflowing the surrounding territory alongside a stream was always done under the guise that it was for the purpose of navigation, for holding the water within the channels of the stream, and washing it out, and making it deeper, and so on. That is, they exercised flood control, but not flood-control jurisdiction, by subterfuge, as you might say. Sometimes they can show that it meant some little improvement of the streams.

So the Rivers and Harbors Committee never did have jurisdiction over flood control. And the Chair must recollect that the Rivers and Harbors Committee has jurisdiction over all the navigable streams of the United States, including the Mississippi River, on matters pertaining to navigation, regardless of flood control.

Now, the Flood Control Committee reported out a bill which became a law. The gentleman seems to infer that by the enactment of that law the Flood Control Committee in some way or other has now acquired exclusive jurisdiction over the Secretary of War, over the Chief of Engineers, and over the Mississippi River Commission. If you will read the section I assert that you will see that the law does not give the Flood Control Committee jurisdiction, and the law itself does not undertake to exercise any jurisdiction over any one of these functionaries. That act says that for the purpose of flood control and the improvement of the river—that was a matter they had no jurisdiction over, but nobody objected, and it is in the law. Of course, if some one had raised the point of order, the Flood Control Committee could not have reported out a bill for the improvement of the Mississippi River, especially at that time. It says that not to exceed $10,000,000 a year may be expended under plans of the Mississippi River Commission, approved by the Chief of Engineers. The truth of the matter is that the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War can control that whole thing. They can even nullify the act of the Mississippi River Commission. And if you will read the act closely, it does not give any jurisdiction over either one of these agencies, as I want you to understand. It is merely to be expended under their direction. I say, therefore, that the Rivers and Harbors Committee have the right to report out a bill, and we are an appropriating committee. We can report a bill appropriating money, and we can call upon the Mississippi River Commission to expend it in the interest of navigation, can we not? They have acquired no exclusive jurisdiction over that commission.

This equipment, that cost millions of dollars, paid for with money appropriated by bills reported out heretofore by the Rivers and Harbors Committee, belongs to the United States. It does not belong to the Mississippi River Commission, and the Mississippi River Commission is not subject solely to the orders of the Flood Control Committee or to legislation enacted in bills reported out by the Flood Control Committee.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SWITZER. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand that this will cost some $10,000,000 a year?

Mr. SWITZER. The bill reported out by the Flood Control Committee some years ago, which Congress has passed, authorized Congress to appropriate not to exceed $10,000,000 a year up to a total of $45,000,000, conditioned upon certain things.

Mr. WALSH. And this paragraph is for that purpose, is it?

Mr. SWITZER. No; the $10,000,000 is for flood control and the improvement of the Mississippi River. There is only a small portion of this that goes for flood control. Some three or four million dollars of it goes for flood control, upon condition of the localities concerned putting up half the amount. The rest of the money, some five or six million dollars, or whatever it may be, goes for the improvement of the river, a matter that the River and Harbors Committee has exclusive jurisdiction over if it wants to exercise it. The Flood Control Committee exercised it only because no one objected in that particular authorization. Therefore it became a law. Now, if there are some five or six million dollars, or if there is one million dollars, that can be expended under the direction of this Mississippi River Commission for the improvement of the river, like revetment work on the banks or levees or deeping the channel—exclusively a matter of navigation—that money is as much under the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee as it is under the jurisdiction of any other committee of this House when it comes to directing how it shall be expended.

Money that Congress has appropriated for the improvement of a navigable river is certainly subject to the control of legislation recommended and reported by the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and the flood-control act does not authorize an appropriation solely for flood control, but for the purpose of flood control and the improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. WALSH. One further question. In view of the dispute as to jurisdiction and as to the enormous sum of money involved, does not the gentleman think that the point of order should certainly be sustained?

Mr. SWITZER. That does not get rid of the $10,000,000. I do not think the gentleman understands what is up here at this time.

Mr. WALSH. I am following the entire discussion, and I understand less about it since the gentleman has been talking than I did before. [Laughter.] I think if we can save $10,000,000 this year we ought to sustain this point of order.

Mr. SWITZER. I will say to the gentleman that, as I understand, the Appropriations Committee will likely bring in a bill here appropriating some amount. I do not know whether it will be $10,000,000; but this has got nothing to do with that. That will be met when it comes up, of course.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. I understood the gentleman to say, when he took his place on the floor, that the question of jurisdiction was one that he had given considerable study to.

Mr. SWITZER. On the Ohio River, I said.

Mr. GOOD. I want to call the attention of the gentleman, in connection with what he is saying and what he has said with regard to the study he has given to this subject, to the hearings had before his own committee from January 22 to February 5, 1918, in which, on page 8 of the hearings, appears the following:

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. DENISON, a few years ago I assisted Mr. COLLIER to get a similar piece of work done at Vicksburg under the Mississippi River Commission. I am interested in directing this Mississippi River Commission to settle this matter here, but I do not know, as to the points raised by Mr. DUPRÉ, whether we still have any jurisdiction over this commission or not. I hardly think we do, but I am not sure of it.

Now, the gentleman is very sure of it to-day.

Mr. SWITZER. I had not even read this act at that time. Since then I have read the act. I am directing the attention of the Chair to the act, and I say that the law does not acquire any jurisdiction over the Mississippi River Commission. It merely directs that a certain sum of money shall be expended according to the plans and specifications laid down by some department of the Government, which belongs as much to one committee as it does to another. Now, as to the jurisdiction over this matter, I want to make my statement as concise as possible, coming right down to the specific matter.

I contend that the Flood Control Committee and the Rivers and Harbors Committee have concurrent jurisdiction over the navigable streams, one for the purpose of flood control and the other in the interest of navigation. Does the gentleman say that the Rivers and Harbors Committee can not control the authorization for the construction of a dam within 6 or 7 miles of the mouth of the Ohio River? Certainly not, if in the interest of navigation. If we revet the banks in the interest of navigation, why should they object? Take the language of the provision objected to, which says to investigate the caving banks; the banks that have caved into the stream and falling into it are bound to affect navigation. Whether this affects navigation or not, we look to all the statements that are before the committee. For instance, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] has told you what he stated to us and that this would change the course of the stream. True, the engineer said he did not think it had much to do with navigation, but we are not bound by what the engineers say. We look at all the statements and all the evidence that is before us. I for one will always contend that on the Ohio River the Rivers and Harbors Committee has jurisdiction over the banks for the purpose of aiding navigation just as much as the Flood Control Committee has jurisdiction over the banks and can revet them to stop the floods. I think there is a concurrent jurisdiction, and under the practice the committee first taking jurisdiction retains it.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, the ruling that the Chair will shortly make on this point of order has such an important bearing on the work of the Mississippi River Commission under the flood-control bill that I ask for a few moments to discuss the matter. If, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has stated, the Rivers and Harbors Committee can come in and direct by order the work and operation of the Mississippi River Commission under the provisions of the flood-control bill, then it may absolutely destroy all the purposes for enacting that legislation. It has been stated that the Rivers and Harbors Committee were unanimous, or practically so, about the insertion of this clause in the rivers and harbors bill. I believe, as a matter of fact, many of the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee held the opinion that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] originally did, that this was a matter over which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had no jurisdiction at all. I know members of that committee were opposed to the insertion of this paragraph in the rivers and harbors bill because they felt that it was without their jurisdiction.

I want to read from the hearings before the committee on the project. After a clear statement of the situation by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], Mr. DUPRÉ, a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, asked questions which were answered by Mr. DENISON, as follows:

Mr. DUPRÉ. Do you think you have come to the right committee?
Mr. DENISON. I think I have.
Mr. DUPRÉ. Was not a law passed that authorized the expenditure of a certain amount, up to $10,000,000, by the Mississippi River Commission from the Head of the Passes up to this place?
Mr. DENISON. For flood protection?
Mr. DUPRÉ. Yes.
Mr. DENISON. Yes.
Mr. DUPRÉ. When that appropriation is made, it will be carried in the sundry civil bill; so, why don't you insert an amendment including that improvement in the funds carried in that bill? I merely throw that out as a suggestion to you.
Mr. DENISON. You mean direct the Mississippi River Commission to do the work?
Mr. DUPRÉ. Yes.
Mr. DENISON. That is why I came before your committee.
Mr. DUPRÉ. I make that suggestion because that is the committee to go to, I think; and the Appropriations Committee will report the bill to the House that will carry the appropriations for the Mississippi River Commission.
Mr. DENISON. Doesn't this committee make appropriations for the protection of places of this kind?
Mr. DUPRÉ. I do not understand that there will be any appropriation that will be expended by or under the Mississippi River Commission. Am I correct in that or am I making it too broad?
Mr. DENISON. I have not so understood it. I understand this committee has power to direct this commission.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this matter has been placed in charge of the Mississippi River Commission under the flood-control law.

The hearings continue:

For this work, the people of Cairo will get the relief which they need so badly.

On page 11 of the hearings, after reading the clause read by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], giving the language of the flood-control bill by which jurisdiction was extended up the Cache River, the Chairman of the committee, Mr. SMALL, said, after reading that:

So the question that occurs now is, as Mr. DUPRÉ suggested, whether this committee would have jurisdiction to consider any legislation commanding the Mississippi River Commission to do certain work upon the Ohio River between its mouth and the Cache River, and making an appropriation therefor which was exclusively for flood control or bank protection and not for navigation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this proposition is purely a question of saving levees for flood control. But even if it is mainly for that purpose I want to insist that it comes under the provisions of the flood-control bill. The Mississippi River Commission is charged with the duty under the law of carrying out the provisions of that bill, and if the Rivers and Harbors Committee can come to the House and take jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission, then I say that the Rivers and Harbors Committee can absolutely destroy the work that this Congress had in mind in passing the flood-control bill, and absolutely destroy the Committee on Flood Control created by the House for the purpose of taking charge of questions of flood control. It is naturally somewhat connected with navigation. If you take the speech of the Speaker of the House urging the creation of this committee it will be seen that it was a question of flood control and not a question of navigation in cases like this.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman is aware that there is no flood-control committee in the Senate?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. No; the Committee on Commerce has jurisdiction.

Mr. BOOHER. When it becomes necessary to have a committee of conference, what committee in the House would have jurisdiction? The conference committee appointed by the Speaker would come from the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and the Rivers and Harbors conferees would have jurisdiction, would they not?

Mr. WILSON of Louisana. I think that is correct.

Mr. BOOHER. That being correct, then we have got jurisdiction. Then we would have original concurrent jurisdiction with the Flood Control Committee.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I do not wish to assume that the Commerce Committee of the Senate would destroy the Flood Control Committee for the purposes of the flood-control bill. I have been at Cairo and have seen the conditions existing there, and it was at the instance of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] and on account of the enthusiastic work of the people there that this location was placed under the control of the Mississippi River Commission for the purpose of safety and protection.

Mr. BOOHER. When it goes over to the Senate and flood control comes up in the Senate, what committee of the House takes jurisdiction of it?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. No committee of the House does, but the Commerce Committee of the Senate does.

Mr. BOOHER. It gets into conference, does it not?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes; of course; but that is not giving the Rivers and Harbors Committee any control over flood control.

Mr. BOOHER. They put it in the river and harbor bill, and when it goes to the conference committee it goes to a conference committee of the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Suppose the Committee on Commerce of the Senate puts in a river and harbor bill a public building, and it goes to conference, does that give the Committee on Rivers and Harbors jurisdiction of public buildings in the House?

Mr. BOOHER. I do not think that is an illustration at all. I do not think it has anything to do with this proposition, because the Senate has a committee on public buildings and grounds and would not do a thing of that kind.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I would not swear to that.

Mr. BOOHER. The Committee on Commerce takes on the river and harbor work that ought to go to the Flood Committee, and they have no Flood Committee over there, and we take jurisdiction of it.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. If this bill should go without this clause and the clause should be inserted by the Commerce Committee of the Senate and come back to the House, and the conferees should agree on it, I do not know what would be the result, but we know that the River and Harbor Committee has no jurisdiction of the matter. That is admitted.

Mr. BOOHER. By whom?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. By practically the members of the committee, for they come in here and ask that this clause be eliminated. I can not imagine that they would do that unless they felt that they had put something in the bill that ought not to go there.

Mr. BOOHER. I do not know what authority the gentleman has to speak for anybody but himself.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. They realized that they had taken jurisdiction of something they had no jurisdiction of.

Mr. BOOHER. I believe they had jurisdiction.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. That they were encroaching upon the prerogatives of the Flood Control Committee.

Mr. BOOHER. Suppose the point of order should be sustained and they should go to the Senate and have it put in there. It is put in the river and harbor bill, is it not?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. And it goes to conference, and the conferees appointed by the Speaker on the river and harbor bill consider it?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to answer the question? It would be the duty of the House conferees to insist that the Senate recede, because the Senate was legislating outside the jurisdiction of the committee that had reported the bill in the House. If the gentleman's reasoning be right, then you can enlarge the permanent jurisdiction of any House committee by Senate action, no matter how extreme it may be, and I do not think this House is going to take the position that the Senate can make our rules for us.

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, the gentleman is getting scared.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, yes; the gentleman is pretty badly frightened. It is simply concurrent jurisdiction, and you can not get away from it. We have had jurisdiction of it, and we do not have to stand up there and say to the Senate that we will not consider it, because they have no committee over there that can consider it.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Would the gentleman say that and admit at the same time that this is primarily a question of flood control?

Mr. BOOHER. No; it is not.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Would the gentleman say that if he felt that it was primarily a question of flood control?

Mr. BOOHER. Would I say what?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Is the Chair ready to rule on this question?

Mr. BOOHER. Does the gentleman from Texas want to take us off our feet on this question? The gentleman asks me if I would consider this a question of flood control wholly.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I would not say wholly.

Mr. BOOHER. There may be flood control mixed in it. I think that whenever you permit one of these rivers to cut through and form a new channel you destroy navigation for a while; it can not be otherwise, and if the gentleman has ever seen one of these cut-offs on the Mississippi River he will realize that, and it takes years to fix it.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Was it not the contention of the gentleman who came before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in this House that this work be done in order to protect and save a levee?

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, no; it has no connection with levee work.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. That is what the hearings say.

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, no; they did not state it that way. They stated it for the purpose of preventing the Ohio River cutting across a little narrow neck of land and turning the course of the Ohio River into the Mississippi.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish the Chair would hear me very briefly, because I believe the language of the bill is so plain that unless the Chair sustains the point of order a precedent would be established that is very dangerous. It is not simply a question of whether the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction over the Mississippi River. That is not the proposition that is presented to the Chair. The proposition presented to the Chair is whether this language carried in this bill is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report. Now, I submit that if for no other reason the language is subject to the point of order because it undertakes to direct the Mississippi River Commission as to how it shall spend moneys that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has no right to appropriate for the use of that commission and is not appropriated for that purpose. If this can be done every dollar that the Committee on Appropriations may report for the use of the Mississippi River Commission, and which the House may authorize and the Congress may authorize, can then be diverted by instructions from the Rivers and Harbors Committee. They might just as well have provided that the money which is carried for the purpose of taking care of the third liberty loan shall be used by the Mississippi River Commission in taking care of this caving bank, and they would have been just as thoroughly within their rights as to undertake to divert money that was appropriated for a specific purpose. Not only is that true, but the language of the provision itself shows that it is for the purpose of protecting a bank and not for the purpose of improving navigation. There is not a line there which says that it shall report as to navigation or take such steps as to improve or continue navigation. Now, the gentleman can not read into the language what he may have intended. So far as the Chair is concerned, the decision must rest upon the plain language itself and not upon what some gentleman may say, want, hope, or wish.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman says there is nothing in the bill that shows it is for navigation. Is there anything in the provision which shows it is for flood control?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think there is.

Mr. DENISON. Tell it to the Chairman.

Mr. SHERLEY (reading)—

Protect the levee line endangered by this caving bank.

Now, the protection of the levee line is for the purpose of flood control, and not for the purpose of navigation.

Mr. DENISON. It may or may not be.

Mr. SHERLEY. It may or may not be, but that is the plain meaning of it.

Mr. DENISON. Well——

Mr. SHERLEY. But aside from that I desire to call to the attention of the Chair, and then I am through, the language which says "that such improvements must be paid for out of the funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the work of the Mississippi River Commission." Now, what moneys are appropriated for the work of the Mississippi River Commission? They are moneys carried in bills from the Committee on Appropriations. What are the limitations upon the Committee on Appropriations in appropriating such money? They are the limitations found in the act in connection with the flood control of the Mississippi. We would not undertake under the language of that act to appropriate moneys instructing the Mississippi River Commission to do something not authorized by that act. Now, if that be true, after we have appropriated within that law, the Rivers and Harbors Committee can not come and reach out and take these funds created for an express purpose, and divert them to other purposes for which they were not originally appropriated, and if it can do that, why, jurisdiction of the committees does not amount to a hill of beans.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SHERLEY) there were—ayes 41, noes 11.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill, H. R. 10069, the river and harbor bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent (on request of Mr. ASHBROOK) leave of absence was granted to Mr. PORTER for 10 days, on account of illness.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4138. An act to amend certain sections of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effective provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3802. An act authorizing appropriations made for the expenditures of the War Department, the Navy Department, or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, to be used for the purchase, condemnation, or requisition of real estate, or the use thereof, when such purpose is not specifically stated in said appropriations; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ROBERT F. BROUSSARD, late a Senator from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That a committee of eight Senators be appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. BROUSSARD, to be held in the city of New Iberia, La.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a very short letter in reference to the payment of internal-revenue taxes in installments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement about the payment of internal-revenue taxes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

THE NATIONAL HARDWOOD LUMBER ASSOCIATION,
EAST CAMBRIDGE, MASS., April 12, 1918.

The National Hardwood Lumber Association, consisting of over 900 members, representing every hardwood-producing section of the country, by its constituted authorities has unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

"Whereas the provision in the revenue laws of the United States now requires the payment, on or before June 15 of each year, of Federal taxes, including personal and corporation income taxes and excess-profits taxes of large amounts, based upon income or earnings for an entire year, and as in many cases the income or earnings from which such taxes are payable are fully absorbed in conducting the business of the taxpayer and can only be withdrawn therefrom at great burden and inconvenience to the individuals, firms, or corporations by whom payment must be made, or, if the money be borrowed from the banks, with a resulting money stringency: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the National Hardwood Lumber Association strongly recommends to the Congress of the United States that the existing revenue law be so amended as to authorize the payment of the total excess-profits taxes in four installments, on the 15th of June, August, October, and December of the year 1918 and each year thereafter."

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN M. WOODS, President.
FRANK F. FISH, Secretary-Treasurer.

Executive committee: Hon. John M. Woods, chairman, Boston, Mass.; Hon. E. V. Babcock, Pittsburgh, Pa.; T. M. Brown, Louisville, Ky.; Theo. Fathauer, Chicago, Ill.; Charles H. Barnaby, Greencastle, Ind.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. On this bill?

The CHAIR. On this bill?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. On this point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS ON MONDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar next Monday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar on next Monday be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman knows we have not made very much progress on the river and harbor bill, and we have the naval appropriation bill and other appropriation bills ready. What is the purpose of asking the suspension?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important we should pass next week the naval appropriation bill, and in order to do that we ought to have Monday to finish up this bill, and I think we ought to finish it up Monday even if we have to stay here until 12 o'clock Monday night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE LATE SENATOR ROBERT F. BROUSSARD.

Mr. MARTIN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I send the following resolutions to the Clerk's desk and move their adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of 11 Members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the committee on the part of the House to attend the funeral.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WATKINS, Mr. ESTOPINAL, Mr. DUPRÉ, Mr. LAZARO, Mr. ASWELL, Mr. WILSON of Louisiana, Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. RODENBERG, Mr. LANGLEY, and Mr. RUCKER.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. SENATE.

MONDAY, April 15, 1918.

Most Rev. Edward J. Hanna, Archbishop of San Francisco, offered the following prayer:

O God of our fathers, in whose hands are the lives of men and in whose power is the destiny of the Nation, look down upon Thy children gathered here in Thy name. In the way of Thy love Thou hast again visited this body and taken from it one whose power was our glory. Make us recognize that with Thee are the issues of life and death. Make us submissive to the decree of Thy divine providence. Thou alone can bring strength to those who mourn. Thou alone can bring peace to hearts oppressed by grief and pain. O grant that his loved ones may find strength in Thee to bear their loss. Grant that his loved ones may through their tears look up to Thee as the only source of joy and consolation.

Chosen representatives of a mighty people, we come to Thee in the most crucial day in the history of our civilization. O give us light that we may see Thy way among the nations. Give us strength that we may follow the light whithersoever it may be. Make our laws reflect Thy divine wisdom and may they direct the issues of the world unto Thy greater glory.

Give strength unto our President and to those in whose hands are the affairs of our mighty people. We pray above all things that they may have strength and power to endure and to fight to the end. Give strength to our men who in fields afar battle for our rights. Give strength to their arms that they may win victory and that through victory there may come peace. And grant, O Lord, that in the days of peace we may grow in power unto righteousness and unto the glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 123) providing for the calling into military service of certain classes of persons registered and liable for military service under the terms of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11364) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the death of Hon. ROBERT F. BROUSSARD, late a Senator from the State of Louisiana.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3980. An act to prevent interference with the use of homing pigeons by the United States, to provide a penalty for such interference, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9504. An act to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women; and

H. R. 9901. An act to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad.

DEATH OF SENATOR STONE.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, Senator STONE died on yesterday, at 4.30 o'clock in the afternoon. His funeral services will occur at the family residence at 4 o'clock this afternoon. His body will be borne to the capital of his State, arriving there on Tuesday morning. It will lie in state in the capitol building a part of Tuesday. It will then be conveyed to Nevada, Mo., for interment amidst those surroundings where he began his illustrious career.

In a few days more he would have arrived at the allotted threescore years and ten. Over half of that long period he had devoted to the public service. He now returns to his State the badge of his office, upon which there is neither blot nor stain. Dishonor never laid its touch upon the life of WILLIAM JOEL STONE. It may of him be justly said that all his mature life was devoted to his country. Possessing those great abilities which would have enabled him to achieve eminence in any position of life and to have acquired fortune, he chose to devote his talents to the public welfare and to lead a life devoid of luxury and to die without even a competency.

His love of country was so passionate as to be beyond the understanding of many men. His loyalty was so exalted that he was not always understood, for all could not rise to the sublime devotion which inspired his soul. I knew Senator STONE better than any man outside his immediate blood kin. I knew him so well that I am sure I knew his great soul—the soul of this great Missourian and great American.

Knowing him in this intimate way, I may be permitted to say that during the last three weeks constant news from the battle fields of France telling the story of how our lines were being pushed back by German hordes fell upon his heart with a crushing force. Of all the men I have known there is not one who seemed to me to feel so much the weight of anxiety for our cause, upon whose lips there was so passionate a prayer for victory for the arms of our allies and of our own soldiers. I use no extravagance of speech when I declare that could we restore to him the life that has passed out and bring him here among us clothed in health and flesh he would gladly give his life again if thereby he could serve his country's cause and bring to it a great and victorious peace.

At such a time as this and in the days that are to come, when the wounds of a bleeding world must be bound up, the Senate can ill afford, his State can ill afford, his country can ill afford, the world can ill afford his absence.

Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions, and ask for their immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 225) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM JOEL STONE, late a Senator from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That a committee of 12 Senators be appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. STONE, which will take place at 4 o'clock post meridian to-day at his late residence in this city.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect his remains be removed from his late home in this city to Nevada, Mo., for burial, in charge of the Sergeant at Arms, attended by the committee, which shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed, under the second resolution, as the committee on the part of the Senate Mr. REED, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. KING, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. FERNALD.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I submit the following resolution, and ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 16, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 15, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art supremely great, Infinite in all Thine attributes, our God and our Father; above all, through all, and in us all; make us, we beseech Thee, fit temples for the indwelling of Thy Spirit and tractable to its holy influence; that we may conceive wisely, follow the dictates of a clear conscience, and stand firm in our convictions.

Thus may we think well, live well, pray without ceasing, and be ready, when the summons comes, to pass on into the realms of the blest.

Death has laid a heavy toll upon the congressional family, leaving us to mourn, by the passing of two faithful and conspicuous Senators, the wife of a Representative of this body, and one of the oldest and most trustworthy employees of this House.

Comfort us and their several families, by the faith once delivered to the saints, through Him who said, "I am the resurrection and the life; whosoever believeth on me shall never die." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 13, 1918, was read and approved.

OUR SERVICE FLAG.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, this is the fifty-third anniversary of one of the saddest days in American history. Fifty-three years ago to-day in the city of Washington the brave spirit—the life spark—of President Lincoln returned to God who gave it. Let us all hope that in this crisis that spirit is still with us as a Nation and as a people. I have taken the occasion of this solemn memorial day to call attention to the fact that on April 7 last Gen. Pershing, in urging a large subscription to the liberty loan as an expression of confidence by the people at home in the American soldiers at the front, cabled Secretary McAdoo as follows:

Every dollar subscribed to the liberty loan is a dollar invested in American manhood. Every dollar subscribed as the result of self-denial means partnership in the hardships and risks of our men in the trenches. Every dollar subscribed will confirm the determination of our people at home to stand by its Army to a victorious end. An overwhelming subscription to the third liberty loan will be a patriotic expression of confidence in our ability as a Nation to maintain all that we hold dear in civilization.

This expression of our commanding general from the front—somewhere in France—is, to my mind, most timely and to the point, and I submit the same with the following verses in the hope that some one with poetic thought and words may give proper expression to the ideas the verses seek to convey:

OUR SERVICE FLAG.

There's a little flag—the service flag—
Which hangs in our homes to-day,
With its stars of blue or its stars of gold,
Which tell of loved ones away.

This little flag—this silent flag—
Tells more than words can say
Of the solemn pride of the folks at home,
Who can but work and pray.

O may these stars—these service stars—
Not change from blue to gold,
Yet well we know our country's pride
These boys will now uphold.

For love of that flag—that service flag—
There is work for each to do;
Let's all do our bit, let's all do our best,
Is the motto for me and for you.

For love of our homes and our native land
Let each of us here decide
We will gladly respond to our general's call
From the front on the other side.

For that service flag—that prized home flag—
With stars of whatever hue,
Means our men are guarding our Nation's flag,
The red, the white, the blue.

[Applause.]

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

DESTRUCTION OR INJURY OF WAR MATERIAL—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 487).

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on Senate bill 383, commonly known as the sabotage bill.

The Clerk began the reading of the conference report on the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the statement be read instead of the report. It is shorter, and the matter will be generally understood by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the statement of the House conferees be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the House conferees.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House striking out all after the enacting clause, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the words 'war material,' as used herein, shall include arms, armament, ammunition, live stock, stores of clothing, food, foodstuffs, or fuel; and shall also include supplies, munitions, and all other articles of whatever description, and any part or ingredients thereof, intended for, adapted to, or suitable for the use of the United States, or any associate nation, in connection with the conduct of the war.

"The words 'war premises,' as used herein, shall include all buildings, grounds, mines, or other places wherein such war material is being produced, manufactured, repaired, stored, mined, extracted, distributed, loaded, unloaded, or transported, together with all machinery and appliances therein contained; and all forts, arsenals, navy yards, camps, prisons, or other military or naval stations of the United States, or any associate nation.

"The words 'war utilities,' as used herein, shall include all railroads, railways, electric lines, roads of whatever description, railroad or railway fixture, canal, lock, dam, wharf, pier, dock, bridge, building, structure, engine, machine, mechanical contrivance, car, vehicle, boat, or aircraft, or any other means of transportation whatsoever, whereon or whereby such war material or any troops of the United States, or of any associate nation, are being or may be transported either within the limits of the United States or upon the high seas; and all dams, reservoirs, aqueducts, water and gas mains and pipes, structures and buildings, whereby or in connection with which water or gas is being furnished, or may be furnished, to any war premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States or any associate nation, and all electric light and power, steam or pneumatic power, telephone and telegraph plants, poles, wires, and fixtures and wireless stations, and the buildings connected with the maintenance and operation thereof used to supply water, light, heat, power, or facilities of communication to any war premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States, or any associate nation.

"The words 'United States' shall include the Canal Zone and all territory and waters, continental and insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

"The words 'associate nation,' as used in this act, shall be deemed to mean any nation at war with any nation with which the United States is at war.

"SEC. 2. That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy, any war material, war premises, or war utilities, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both.

"SEC. 3. That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully make or cause to be made in a defective manner, or attempt to make or cause to be made in a defective manner, any war material, as herein defined, or any tool, implement, machine, utensil, or receptacle used or employed in making, producing, manufacturing, or repairing any such war material, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title and agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

The Senate recedes from the amendment of the House striking out all of the bill after the enacting clause and substituting therefor the bill as agreed upon in the House, with certain minor changes and additions.

The definition of "war material" in the first paragraph of section 1, is enlarged so as to include live stock, stores of clothing, foodstuffs or fuel, also munitions, and any part or ingredient of the things included in the definition, and defines the use by the words "intended for, adapted to, or suitable for the use of the United States, or any associate nation, in connection with the conduct of the war."

In the third paragraph of section 1 the words "about to be" are changed to "may be" so as to make the clause limiting "war utilities" read, "whereon or whereby such war material or any troops of the United States, or of any associate nation, are being or may be transported," etc. It is further amended so as to include water and gas mains, etc., by which water and gas is being furnished or may be furnished to any war premises as well as to the military and naval forces of the United States as originally provided in the House substitute.

Section 2 of the House amendment was changed by striking out the following: "or, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities."

Section 3 of the House amendment was stricken out.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that on Saturday a week ago the House adopted a conference report embodying the Cannon amendment and the Lunn amendment, known as the labor amendments in the bill. The Senate rejected the conference report, presumably because the Lunn amendment, with reference to the right of labor to strike in order to better conditions or increase wages, was contained in the bill. The House was notified of the rejection, and a further conference requested by the Senate, to which the House agreed. In the conference that was held last Saturday the House conferees agreed to eliminate both the Cannon amendment and the Lunn amendment, and that is the report which we present to you to-day for your adoption. We felt that under the circumstances that was the best way, and certainly the quickest way and possibly the only way out of the difficulty; and there is so much of great value in the other part of the bill that it ought to be passed as speedily as possible in order that offenders may be quickly apprehended.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. WEBB. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. As I understand, the conferees decided, and have so reported, to eliminate entirely everything in reference to labor organizations?

Mr. WEBB. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman inform the House upon what principle of legislation that is based? Or, not to put it quite that way, what was the influential reason that caused the conferees to eliminate from the operations of this law one class of people in the United States.

Mr. WEBB. "One class of people" are not exempted. That is where the gentleman makes a mistake. If any laboring men or any labor organizations commit any of the numerous offenses defined in this bill as we now present it, they are just as guilty as if they were the humblest men in the land or the richest, regardless of the organization to which they belong. It treats everybody alike—rich and poor, high and low, labor and capital.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. We all understand that anybody who commits an act prohibited by the bill as it now stands is committing a crime, of course. That is not what I am asking. I am asking the gentleman why the bill does not contain some provision that will affect a certain class of activities.

Mr. WEBB. I will say that the Cannon amendment does not cover the ground sought to be covered at all. It is a very good amendment, in my opinion, but it applies simply to conspiracies to prevent the construction of war material, war premises, and war utilities. Most of those things are all in existence now and going on. What we want to do is to punish the man who, with reason to believe that it will obstruct the prosecution of the war, does any act forbidden in the bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Let me ask the gentleman one question. Does the gentleman's committee have in mind any legislation that will cover that subject which is attempted to be covered by the amendment presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and which was adopted by the House?

Mr. WEBB. The opinion of the Judiciary Committee, and I believe the opinion of the House, at that time was that we should do nothing in the way of legislation at that time with reference to labor organizations. The President has a commission dealing with these great bodies of men now, and this seems to be just a little too important a matter to handle hastily on the floor of the House without careful committee consideration. Some legislation of this character may come. I do not know about that, but at this time it seems to us unwise to inject this big problem into a bill the object of which was different from those sought to be obtained by this amendment. I will say to the gentleman that the conferees labored over it very conscientiously, and it seems to be the understanding and belief on both sides of the House that we should not attempt to cover that subject in this bill.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Does the gentleman consider that there was anything in the original bill or in the Cannon amendment that prevented strikes, even without the Lunn amendment?

Mr. WEBB. No; I do not think so.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. COX. I am not sure but that the gentleman from Illinois asked the same question that I want to ask. Is there any law on the statute book enabling the Department of Justice or any other department to lay its strong arm on men working in a munition plant or a shipyard from agreeing to a strike?

Mr. WEBB. None. The law to-day expressly gives them the right to strike, unless in doing so they conspire to violate some law of the United States.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman feel that Congress ought to enact some legislation to prevent them from striking?

Mr. WEBB. Frankly, I do not know. The gentleman may think that the time has come to enact such legislation, but under all the present circumstances it is very doubtful. We did not think that we should hold up this bill, which the Department of Justice is anxious to have passed, in order to try to get something that we might not get.

Mr. COX. I think the time has come when we ought to have some legislation to stop the men from striking.

Mr. WEBB. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois two minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the so-called Cannon amendment, as modified by the gentleman on my request and at his suggestion, I believed in when it was agreed to by three-quarters of this House on a roll call. It merely, as I recollect it, prohibited a conspiracy to strike under certain conditions. Then came the extraordinary action on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN], in which the House reversed itself and in which it was provided that nothing herein should be construed to prevent labor striking to better its condition or to increase its wages.

Now, I realize that this is a very important bill, and that there seemingly is between the House and the Senate the condition of the irresistible body and the immovable force. I think the Senate was right. I believe in the not distant future that there will come on the statute books legislation that will prohibit anybody conspiring to strike pending arbitration, and that all disagreements shall be submitted to arbitration, and that when the award comes it shall be made a judgment of the court, as the President advised when the Adamson bill passed. He said, in substance, he had the pledge of the leaders in both the House and the Senate that it would be promptly passed at the beginning of the next session. That is all I desire to say at this time, but I believe and hope that in the not distant future there will be given power to the President of the United States to prevent, by apt legislation, a striking for higher wages through a conspiracy prior to an arbitration. [Applause.]

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will yield to the gentleman to ask a question.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Illinois think that Congress has the power to pass legislation to prevent strikes, unless it would be in industries engaged in interstate commerce? I think the decision of the Supreme Court in construing the Adamson bill, not in express terms but in effect, holds that Congress might by legislation prohibit strikes of men engaged in interstate commerce, but certainly Congress could not go beyond that.

Mr. CANNON. If my colleague will allow me, Congress, as a war measure, can enact legislation that will bring into the service of the United States by a proclamation of the President or by the determination of the President, by conscription or otherwise, any kind of labor.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I did not limit the proposition to a war measure.

Mr. CANNON. We are dealing with war measures. This is a war measure, and I believe that the President has been given the power, or I hope he will be given the power, if necessary, to conscript or draft men for service on the farm and upon all industries as a war measure.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to commend the action of the conferees. The so-called sabotage bill provided punishment for certain overt acts intended or resulting in the destruction or injury of war-material utilities or transportation. An amendment was adopted in the House the effect of which was to greatly modify the legislation by inserting in it a provision relating to conspiracies. In other words, placing in the body of a bill to punish individual overt acts a provision relating to an entirely different class of acts in the nature of conspiracy. That amendment should not have been adopted as a part of the bill presented to the House. The Lunn amendment, providing that nothing contained in the bill should be construed as intended to deny the right of men to strike to better their condition, logically followed that amendment, and made it clear that by the adoption of the Cannon amendment it was not intended to deprive men of the right to attempt to better their condition by striking. It is entirely logical and proper that both amendments should go out of the bill, leaving it as was originally intended, a proper and needed measure to punish overt acts, but not a conspiracy measure. The bill is now restored to its original intent, and I think the conferees were right in the action they took and are to be commended for it.

We are at war and must adopt all the measures necessary and essential to the success of our arms. We should punish swiftly all who attempt to interfere willfully with war activities or enterprises. The Senate bill now under consideration proposes to do that, and will, as we now approve it in the conference report, do it effectively. The Senate did not consider any conspiracy provisions necessary in the bill, and none were necessary, and when the House, after brief consideration, inserted such a provision there was in the minds of many the very reasonable fear that such a provision might be construed as intended to prevent the exercise of a right clearly recognized by our laws and court decisions.

Some may think that laboring men are overcritical and suspicious of such legislation, but we must keep in mind, even in the midst of war, that certain rights have been won only after a long struggle, and that once won men do not, and should not, readily surrender them or allow them to be questioned by decisions under legislation of doubtful meaning and intent.

It will require the united strength and purpose of all our people to win this war. The men in the mines, on the railroads, and in the shops and fields, as well as the heroes in the trenches, and I am confident that the great majority of them will do their duty whatever it may be, and while the boys are fighting for democracy abroad let us preserve it at home.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any law now under which a man can be punished, under this bill or any other law, under these circumstances: If a society of the Industrial Workers of the World should be discovered in conspiracy to destroy property in an ammunition plant or a ship loading with munitions?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; undoubtedly if the bill passes, because a conspiracy to commit any offense against the United States is an offense.

Mr. DENISON. They could be punished if they had not consummated it by an overt act.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; punished the same as if they had committed the overt act.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The right to strike was specifically preserved by the Clayton antitrust law?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; and passed by a unanimous vote of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. With the Cannon amendment out and the Lunn amendment out, the bill stands as reported by the committee?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is substantially the bill asked for by the administration?

Mr. WEBB. It is a stronger bill than the administration asked for.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that the elimination of these two amendments does not affect the original proposition?

Mr. WEBB. Not at all. We practically have the bill as it was presented by the committee on the floor of the House.

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CURRIE].

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the time that he has yielded to me. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the conference report is not satisfactory, but it is gratifying to know that final action upon this measure is at hand.

It will be a great relief to loyal people the country over when this sabotage bill shall be enacted into law. For months their patience has been tried to the breaking point. They have been obliged to listen to disloyal utterances from traitorous persons who blaspheme the Government and sow the seed of sedition everywhere. They read in the daily press and even in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD itself that our aeroplane plants, shipyards, and other war industries are literally infested with spies and German propagandists, tampering with blue prints, retarding production, and doing other things to counteract and defeat our purpose and aid the Kaiser, yet going unpunished to further prey upon our tolerance.

Only last week the United States district attorney at Detroit informed me that a mechanic employed in the Liberty Motor Co. plant willfully broke a complex machine causing an actual loss in production of 13 aeroplane engines; yet there is no Federal statute under which to prosecute the culprit. It is a startling fact that in Detroit alone Federal agents and operatives of a patriotic organization have secured proof in over a thousand cases of a similar nature, yet rarely a prosecution. Almost every hamlet in the country has appealed to the Federal authorities for the suppression of disloyalty. Rare are the instances in which relief has been secured.

The great battle that may decide the fate of civilization itself now rages. We are face to face with the greatest crisis of all history and we realize it now. Americans await with breathless anxiety news from the front. The Army of the United States goes forward to the battle line. God helping them, with their brothers who are rushing forward to fight by their sides, they will turn the tide to victory and be heralded down through all the ages as the saviors of humanity. Never was there such an intense moment fraught with such serious possibilities and consequences. American people are no longer in a mood to tolerate Kaiser aids in their midst. We have already observed to our shame prominent people in a peaceful Illinois town lynch a suspected German spy or propagandist, and in explaining this deplorable incident the Collinsville mayor said:

> The lynching was the direct result of a widespread feeling in this community that the Government will not punish disloyalty, and although I deprecate the existence of this feeling, it is, nevertheless, not without some foundation. We have repeatedly reported to Federal authorities cases of disloyalty where no action has been taken, and probably could not be taken, by reason of the inadequacy of the law.

This same sentiment prevails throughout the country, and unless Federal authorities relieve the righteous indignation of patriotic people other disgraceful incidents of mob violence may occur.

It is, then a pertinent question to inquire, wherein rests the responsibility for this inactivity on the part of Federal authorities?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, speaking of the Collinsville matter—the lynching of a man with a German name, Praeger—I have had something of information in respect to it. How well founded it is I do not know, but it is asserted that Praeger was a thoroughly loyal man, and that his death came under false pretenses, due to a local condition, because he was not under the tongue of good report with a certain organization, and that they took advantage of the name to kill him and claimed he was disloyal. What the facts are I do not know.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. But this condition of mob violence usually results from the failure of Federal authorities to suppress disloyalty.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. I can not yield.

With this in mind, I recently addressed the Department of Justice, inquiring whether it was the lack of law or law enforcement, and what suggestions, if any, this department had made to Congress upon the subject. The reply was a startling revelation to me and likely will be to many Members of Congress.

Attorney General Gregory, in part, says:

> There is as yet no Federal statute, except the treason statute (which is unworkable for this purpose), under which the Government can prosecute men who attempt to destroy factories, munitions, and other stores necessary for our armies. The so called sabotage bill, prepared by this department and introduced more than a year ago, is now before your body, and I hope speedy action may be taken thereon.

The so-called sabotage bill was passed by the Senate a year ago. It is a regrettable fact that it was not acted upon in the House until nearly a year later. The House passed this bill on March 6, 1918, amending it first by adding to section 2 the so-called Cannon-Webb amendment—

> Or whoever with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utility.

And then practically destroyed that amendment by adding section 3, reading as follows:

> Nothing herein shall be construed as making it unlawful for employees to agree together to stop work or not to enter thereon with a bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment.

In my judgment, adding section 3 was a serious blunder, and I compliment the conferees that the conference report before us to-day has eliminated that amendment; and I likewise regret that the Cannon-Webb amendment, intended to strengthen the bill, was not retained. In striking it out, we have not listened to labor, which is loyal and true. We have heeded the arguments of the labor agitator. It was bad enough in time of peace for persons to come before Congress and, in substance, threaten to tie up the great transportation systems of the country in 48 hours if the Government did not grant its request. Mediation or arbitration would not suffice them. Then we were at peace; now we are at war; and every real American must consecrate himself absolutely to the winning of this war and nothing else. The greedy profiteer who thinks and acts only for gain, searching for gold in Government contracts while others are yielding their lives for him, and the strikers who would willfully and deliberately violate the provisions of the so-called Webb-Cannon amendment are in the same class—traitors to their country and to humanity.

My sympathy is with the toiler; but I have no sympathy with the man or group of men who, seeing others for a meager wage in the service, yielding their lives that humanity may survive and the ravages of the Hun be repelled while they, drawing the greatest wage ever paid in the history of the country, throw down their tools, hinder production, delay transportation, and imperil not only their own protection, but the very life of their country.

It is a startling fact that during the first six months after this country entered the war there were over 1,156 strikes, mostly in industries essential to war production. The number of days of production lost was 6,285,519 The magnitude of this waste can be best appreciated by stating that it would require a plant employing 1,000 employees to operate 300 working days each year for nearly 21 years to recoup this loss. And think of it; our Nation at war and many of these very strikers exempted because needed in war industry. If they will not work, then make them fight. If the man in the service refuses to do his part in the prosecution of the war he is court-martialed and shot; but here we are in Congress spending our time in trying to make certain that the fellow who stays home and strikes will not be amenable to this law and may conspire with others to defeat its very purpose. Ask the father and mother of the boy in the service whether we should be so solicitous for the striker, from whom no hazardous service has been requested.

My friends, every appeal by labor to Government boards has resulted in favorable decision for it. There is no tendency to be unfair with labor. If section 3 is retained in this bill it will stand forth as an invitation to all the agents of the Kaiser in America to incite and encourage strikes in our war industries, from the sawmills of the South and the West to the munition plants of the North and the East. They can do it, and will do it, with impunity unless section 3 is eliminated. We will either strike that section out to-day or righteous public sentiment will compel us to before many months more of this war. If this conference report had retained the Cannon-Webb amendment it would have given to the country the greatest war legislation since the passage of the act creating the National Army. And let us resolve here to-day that there shall be no further delay in the program of supplying necessary legislation for apprehending and punishing disloyalty and traitorous conduct everywhere it shows its head. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

APRIL 2, 1918.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: You are undoubtedly aware of the strong feeling throughout the country that our Government authorities are dealing too leniently with spies and dangerous enemies within our confines. It is commonly reported that our aeroplane plants are literally infested with spies and that blue prints have been changed, production hindered, and even the complete planes so tampered with as to render them unsafe. Inquiry at the United States marshal's office in the State of Michigan brings forth the claim that we have not sufficient laws with which to deal with this situation. It is very apparent that we either lack the law or its enforcement. I assume that the bill recently passed by the House to punish willful interference with war production was intended, in part, at least, to care for this situation. * * *

Will you please advise if any legislation is yet required, in the opinion of your department, to properly handle this situation, and whether any suggestion has been made by your department in this regard?

I am not familiar enough with the custom here to know, but in State affairs we depend a great deal upon suggestions from the departments as to desired legislation.

I realize that it is much easier to criticize than to perform, and I am satisfied that this important matter is and has been receiving the utmost consideration by you. However, I receive so many inquiries and am so intensely interested in a betterment of conditions with respect to spy activities that I will appreciate your reply.

Very respectfully,

GILBERT A. CURRIE.

APRIL 12, 1918.

Hon. GILBERT A. CURRIE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter to the Department of Justice, under date of the 2d instant, in which you refer to certain alleged activities of "spies" and state that "there exists a strong feeling throughout the country that our Government authorities are dealing too leniently with spies and dangerous enemies within our confines."

If such a feeling does exist, it is mainly caused by the lack of Federal statutes and not by any lack of activity upon the part of the prosecuting officials, for I am glad to assure you that the Department of Justice has investigated and, so far as the present laws warrant, vigorously prosecuted every case of enemy activity of which it has acquired information. The stories that dangerous spies have been paroled by this department from internment camps are unqualifiedly false in every particular. The power of internment vested in me by the President has been exercised carefully but unsparingly, and as rapidly as really dangerous enemy aliens have come to the attention of Government officials they have been apprehended and interned.

Long before we entered the war this department recognized the necessity of an efficient system for the prevention as well as the detection of enemy activities, and began at that time to strengthen and build up its Bureau of Investigation, which now for a long time has been operated on a war basis. In addition to this, the department has accepted the services and to a great extent supervises the activities of more than 200,000 citizens of proven loyalty, systematically organized throughout the country as an auxiliary to the work of the department. It is a fair statement to say that the country has never been so thoroughly policed in its history by the Federal authorities as it is to-day. You will get some idea of the magnitude of the work from the fact that the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice receives on an average of upward of 1,500 complaints per day. While most of these complaints eventually prove unfounded, all of them are carefully investigated. Work of this character necessarily has to be done with little or no publicity and, as a matter of policy, the action by the department in interning enemy aliens has also been done, so far as possible, without publicity. For example, on the night of April 6, 1917, the day of our declaration of war, this department seized in different parts of the country all of the German agents then known to it and caused them to be immediately transferred to war-prison camps, the number of enemies, for obvious reasons, being kept secret.

The public assumes that there is a great deal of enemy activity going on in this country, and it is but natural that vague rumors are magnified into definite and sensational stories. The talk of damage done by enemy aliens in causing incendiary fires is an illustration of this. Repeatedly, both in reputable newspapers and in publications gotten out by citizen societies, exaggerated statements are made as to the amount of damage. Statistics show that, considering the vastly increased value of merchandise and plants, the actual fire loss to property of all descriptions in 1917 was not appreciably larger than that of the year 1913. Likewise the report recently made by the National Board of Fire Underwriters shows, in substance, that during the past year not one fire has been clearly proven to be the work of alien enemies, and at a recent conference in the Treasury Department of all the men in all departments charged with protection of plants and supplies it was stated without dissent that no instance was known of a fire caused within the past year by alien enemies.

This does not mean that there is little danger to be apprehended from enemy alien activities. On the contrary, the most careful watchfulness is constantly necessary, but I cite this illustration to you to show you how unfounded are some of the extraordinary stories now in circulation. The very necessity for keeping secret many of the activities of the department undoubtedly contributes to the impression of which you have complained. It would be absurd to say that every hostile act has been successfully run down and the offender brought to punishment or that every enemy agent or propagandist at work in this country has been discovered. I do, however, assert that every possible effort is being made to ferret out and punish activities of this character, and that this work in other departments, as well as my own, is being done from day to day with constantly increasing efficiency.

In addition to prosecution of the work above described, this department has during the past year drawn and enforced the various regulations governing the conduct of alien enemies prescribed in the three proclamations made by the President; has devised the machinery and carried out successfully a registration of all male German alien enemies; has put into operation regulations for barring alien enemies from water-front shipping facilities and other prohibited areas; has caused to be instituted military patrol by the Army on the most important piers in all of the large seaports of the country; and has instituted a pass system to protect water-front zones from acts of alien enemies.

In connection with enemy-alien activities, you will recall that under the most conservative estimate there are in this country to-day more than 450,000 German, 600,000 Austrian, and 400,000 Hungarian enemy aliens—that is, unnaturalized males upward of 14 years of age—estimating three to a family, there would be within the United States about 4,000,000 persons who are either male enemy aliens or members of their families. If you will bear in mind that we have quite as much, if not more, trouble with native and naturalized Americans as we have with enemy aliens, you will get some idea of the magnitude of the work which daily confronts this department.

I have already adverted to the lack of adequate laws, and I take the liberty of calling your attention to this important subject. Although we have been at war for more than a year, there is as yet no Federal statute, except the treason statute (which is unworkable for this purpose), under which the Government can prosecute men who attempt to destroy factories, munitions, and other stores necessary for our armies. The so-called sabotage bill, prepared by this department and introduced more than a year ago, is now before your body, and I hope that speedy action may be taken thereon.

Most of the disorder throughout the country is caused by the lack of laws relating to disloyal utterances. Congress did not pass the original espionage act in the form in which my department prepared it, and section 3 of the law as passed by Congress has been the only weapon with which the Government could attack this dangerous evil. Although the only clause of section 3 which has been of value is the one aimed to prevent obstruction of enlistment and recruiting, my department has succeeded under that one clause in securing the conviction of more than 250 offenders in different parts of the country, and in obtaining the imposition of sentences in some cases of 15 and 20 years' imprisonment. It is earnestly hoped that Congress will act favorably upon legislation now before it which will give the Government adequate weapons with which to prevent the spread of flagrant disloyalty.

Another serious defect in the legal situation is the fact that there is no law providing for the control of departures from or entries into the United States by persons other than those who are alien enemies. The dangerous work of our enemies is not done solely through enemy nationals, and the public safety requires that a measure of control be vested in the President over the movements of all persons into and from the country in time of war. A bill to accomplish this purpose, commonly known as the "passport bill," drawn by this department, was introduced into Congress some time ago, and has the unanimous approval of the Departments of State, Labor, and Justice, and of the officers of the Military and Naval Intelligence Service. It can not be enacted into law too speedily.

I need not say that so long as the Federal Government is impotent to suppress industrial treason and disloyal utterances, just so long there will be danger of disorder, and there will be a steady increase in the feeling among the irresponsible of disrespect for legally constituted authority. Taking advantage of your courteous offer of assistance, I earnestly ask that you call the attention of your associates to the legislative situation which is above outlined. I need scarcely add to what I have said the assurance that my department will promptly, aggressively, and thoroughly investigate the cause of every hostile act or utterance which is brought to its attention, and will, so far as the law permits, continue relentlessly to prosecute those shown to be responsible therefor.

Respectfully,

T. W. GREGORY,
Attorney General.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN].

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, in this crucial time of war we should never indulge in hysterical legislation; never should pass laws in violation of the fundamental principles on which the Government is based unless conditions become so serious that for a temporary period fundamental rights may be given up for the greater purpose of national security and perpetuity.

A few weeks ago we had under consideration this very important bill, which was to enact a law necessary for the protection of our people. The bill ought to have been passed the day it was considered, and would have been passed and by this time would have been the law of the land if it had not been for the Cannon amendment. The bill as introduced by the committee had no such purpose nor no phrases that could possibly have been construed as conscription of labor. Then came the Cannon amendment. There could be no possible mistake as to the gentleman's object in introducing his amendment, judging from his remarks on the floor and published in the RECORD. The Cannon amendment was a violation, at least to my mind, of a fundamental principle. I introduced my amendment with the purpose and design of overcoming what I felt was the repudiation of a fundamental principle of our Government, which principle was to deal fairly with all classes and refuse to legislate either for or in favor of a special class.

When the Cannon amendment passed the House I am sure many of the Members voted for it little realizing its full meaning. How otherwise could they explain the immediate passage of my amendment, the purpose of which was to overcome the Cannon amendment. When the House bill went to the Senate there was loud and somewhat bitter discussion of that particular section 3, which was the Lunn amendment. Many of the distinguished Senators were opposed to the Lunn amendment for the reason that they evidently desired conscription of labor.

I have always taken the stand, and I take it now, and will always take it, that there is nothing too sacred and nothing too great in the way of sacrifice to make for American victory in this war.

If in this colossal conflict the very life of the Nation should demand that we take away temporarily certain of our rights, if it should become necessary to give much of our property or all of our property, let us act on the line of the principle which works with absolute fairness to all of our people. If the time ever comes to conscript everything, including labor, that time will mean that we should also conscript capital.

There is little excuse for strikes during the present time, when wages are high, but that is no excuse to attempt to take away a fundamental right. Capital struck a few days ago. Capital went on a strike for increased wages, and they won. They received one-quarter of 1 per cent more for their capital than they did on the last liberty loan. The first liberty loan was quoted at 3½ per cent. The capital wages increased in the second liberty loan to 4 per cent; but capital was not satisfied with this wage, so they insisted on 4½ per cent, but were granted only 4¼ per cent. In saying this I am not unmindful of the patriotic spirit of those men of great wealth who have and are devotedly serving their country in this time of national crisis. Let every honor be given to those men, rich or poor, learned or ignorant, who count life itself none too dear to give this Nation in its hour of trial.

Only under national necessity could we ever demand the conscription of labor, and then only when the necessity demanded that we conscript capital. Never could we consistently take a position that the man could be conscripted while the dollar remained in freedom; but no such emergency existed, neither did anything in the bill propose such a thing. The bill sought to deal strenuously with the men, whoever they be, who sought to interfere individually or by conspiracy with the prosecution of the war. It is necessary that we fix determent penalties on any man or men who are willfully plotting against the Government. The bill was not aimed at the mass of the American workers who are loyal to the heart in this great war, but the Cannon amendment said to working men that they would be compelled to work for private employers who might reduce their wages, or allow most harmful conditions in factories and shops, and that, regardless of how just their cause of complaint, the men would not dare to stop. Three men would not dare to talk together regarding shameful conditions surrounding their work and agree to stop, for that would be a conspiracy, and they would be threatened with 30 years to think it over. Such law is unthinkable. The House may have acted hastily on the Cannon amendment, for many of them were absent during the discussion, but when they passed the Lunn amendment, they were nearly all present and understood the real purpose of the amendment. To my mind the House acted in a spirit of fairness, not of demagogy, and not in any way hysterical. I wanted to see this bill passed quickly, and now that the Cannon amendment has been eliminated there is no occasion for the other, for with the elimination of the one goes the necessity of the other. A few moments ago we listened to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], in his tribute to the memory of President Lincoln, who passed from us 53 years ago to-day. I can not speak in too high praise of the splendid spirit of the martyred President. I recall that he based his life on great underlying humanitarian principles. He stood foursquare regarding the great mass of those who toil. In his annual message to Congress on December 3, 1861, he said:

Labor is prior to and independent of capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital and deserves much the higher consideration.

He further said in that same message:

No men living are more worthy to be trusted than those who toil up from poverty—none less inclined to take or touch aught which they have not honestly earned. Let them beware of surrendering a political power which they already possess, and which if surrendered will surely be used to close the door of advancement against such as they, and to fix new disabilities and burdens upon them till all of liberty shall be lost.

The views expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] are tremendously at variance with the views expressed by that other gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Lincoln.

When we deal with labor, we are dealing with human rights and human conditions, and we must never go on record for a form of slavery which is involved in conscription of labor unless it becomes necessary in order to save the very life of the Nation. The great mass of our workers have been patriotic. God save America if they were not patriotic, for no war can be waged when the working masses refuse their loyalty. They have not refused their loyalty, but have entered this war with the same high spirit and resolve that has characterized the rest of us. If the time comes, when, to preserve this Nation, conscription of labor is essential there must go with it an absolute conscription of capital, not some of the capital but all of the capital, and if that day ever comes I will stake my life that the great mass of labor would rise to the great occasion with a spirit that would put to shame every slacker of whatever name. [Applause.]

Mr. MCARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUNN. I would be very glad to yield if I had more time yielded me, but I can not otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

RIVERS AND HARBORS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10069, the rivers and harbors appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10069, the rivers and harbors appropriation bill, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose on Saturday last, the Chairman had under consideration a point of order made to the paragraph at the bottom of page 9 of the bill directing the Mississippi River Commission to do some work at the mouth of the Ohio River for the protection of a caving bank. I desire to discuss just one phase of the point of order and no other, and I may say at this point, as we had a full discussion on Saturday, I hope there will be no necessity for further discussion and that the Chairman may be permitted to make his ruling. The contention on the point of order which was discussed involves the jurisdiction of the Committee on Flood Control and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors as applicable to this point of order. I shall not discuss at all the facts in the case bearing upon the question of whether it is exclusively for flood control or exclusively for river improvement, but I do wish to submit a few expressions or arguments upon the general question. As to the Mississippi River Commission, that commission was created by act of Congress, approved June 28, 1879.

The act creating the commission in section 4 gave it this jurisdiction:

It shall be the duty of said commission to take into consideration and mature such plan or plans and estimates as will correct, permanently locate, and deepen the channel, and protect the banks of the Mississippi River; improve and give safety and ease to the navigation thereof; prevent destructive floods; promote and facilitate commerce, trade, and the postal service.

There has been no amendment since that date to the act creating the Mississippi River Commission which changes its jurisdiction in the respect I have indicated, so that the Mississippi River Commission in its activities may improve the river or rivers under its jurisdiction, and may also take steps to control floods.

The flood-control act, which was approved March 4, 1917, and which I have not at the moment before me, also fixes as the duties of the Mississippi River Commission the improvement of the rivers and also the control of floods. Therefore I submit to the chairman at this point this statement, which I do not think can be contradicted, that the Mississippi River Commission in its activities as defined by Congress may engage in river improvement and flood control.

Again, from 1883 until the Committee on Flood Control was created the Committee on Rivers and Harbors took jurisdiction, and almost every river and harbor act passed since that time contains some legislation either directing the activities of the Mississippi River Commission or making appropriations for its activities, or both; and I shall, with the consent of the committee, ask leave to incorporate in the RECORD some excerpts from past river and harbor acts. Until the flood-control act was passed on March 4, 1917, the River and Harbor Committee directed its activities and made appropriations for the commission.

Now as to the two committees: The Committee on Rivers and Harbors under the rules of the House has jurisdiction of subjects relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and that jurisdiction has been well defined. Whatever legislation seeks to improve the channel of a river or harbor for purposes of navigation and commerce is admittedly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

In the amendment to the rules creating the Committee on Flood Control the jurisdiction of that committee is fixed in this simple language; that is to say, that it has jurisdiction of subjects relating to flood control, and there is no disposition on my part or upon the part of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in its collective capacity to dispute or to cavil about the jurisdiction of the Committee on Flood Control.

One other thought. There may be improvements of rivers which at the same time affect control of floods. I can well conceive of such.

There has been, and may be in the future, legislation intended for the improvement of a river for navigation, the work of improvement at the same time tending to control floods, so that it may well be and will occur that concurrent jurisdiction will rest with each of these committees. As to which committee would have jurisdiction under a condition of that kind, would probably depend upon the committee which first assumed jurisdiction.

Now, in conclusion, what is the duty of the Chair in the consideration of the point of order made against this paragraph? In order for the Chair to hold that the point of order should be sustained and the paragraph go out, the Chair must of necessity hold that it is exclusively for flood control. It is within the province of the Chair to determine preliminarily that question of fact; and if the Chair holds upon the issue of fact that only flood control is affected by this paragraph I concede that the Committee on Flood Control has jurisdiction. And, further, to express it in another way, I submit that the Chair must hold upon that issue of fact that only flood control is affected by this paragraph in order to sustain the point of order, because if it happens to be a work or an activity authorized which affects both improvement of the river and flood control, then I assume as a matter of parliamentary law that this committee, first having assumed jurisdiction, would hold jurisdiction.

So with that statement, Mr. Chairman, upon what I think are the controlling issues of parliamentary procedure applicable to this point of order, I shall be content to leave the matter with the Chair, except, however, to make this general statement in behalf of the committee and not to precipitate any argument: In the opinion of the committee the work proposed in this paragraph was meritorious. In the opinion of the committee there seemed to be no other committee of Congress which would take jurisdiction and afford Cairo and its immediate vicinity the relief which the committee seemed to think they required. I mention that only as bearing on the merits of it, and not as bearing on the point of order which the Chair has before him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] makes a point of order against the paragraph on page 9, lines 17 to 25, inclusive, and which reads as follows:

The Mississippi River Commission shall forthwith make an examination of the caving bank on the right bank of the Ohio River below the mouth of the Cache River and shall make such plans and take such steps, to be approved by the Chief of Engineers, as may be necessary from time to time to protect the levee line endangered by this caving bank, such improvements to be paid for out of any funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the work of the Mississippi River Commission.

This point of order was very fully and very thoroughly discussed on Saturday, and since the session of the committee on Saturday the Chair has read the arguments then made, as they appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and has also given the matter some thought and consideration; and such thought and consideration as the Chair has been able to give it have confirmed the opinion of the Chair as to the views entertained at the previous session of the committee with reference to the point of order. It is not necessary, of course, to say that, in passing upon the point of order, the Chair has not given any consideration whatever to either the merits or the demerits of the proposition contained in the paragraph.

The point of order is made on two grounds. First, that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has no jurisdiction of the subject matter of the paragraph as an original proposition, and second, that even if it be conceded that it has such jurisdiction, it is not authorized to report it as a part of the pending appropriation bill, which under the rules of the House has a privileged status.

It is insisted that the subject matter of this paragraph comes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Committee on Flood Control, the rules of the House providing that all proposed legislation relating to flood control shall be referred to that committee. In the opinion of the Chair, under the plain language of the rule, this view is clearly correct, if the paragraph does not also relate to the improvement of a river or harbor. Whether or not the fact that an improvement of a river or harbor results as a mere incident to the main purposes of controlling flood waters would serve to give jurisdiction to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the Chair does not feel called upon at this time to decide. The rules of the House do not clearly define the difference in the jurisdiction of these two committees, and as the Speaker of the House has heretofore remarked there may be cases where their jurisdiction overlaps. It seems clear to the Chair that under the present rules of the House cases may arise where the jurisdiction of the two committees would be in a sense concurrent, or where one committee might acquire jurisdiction of a subject matter which as an independent proposition would belong to the other.

But the Chair does not feel called upon to pass upon the question of the jurisdiction of these two committees, in view of his opinion as to the second ground of the point of order. If the paragraph has for its primary object and effect the improvement of the river, then, in the opinion of the Chair, it is properly included in the bill, even though the control of flood waters shall result to a greater or less degree as an incident thereto; for it must be borne in mind that the river and harbor bill is not one of the general appropriation bills within the meaning of clause 2 of Rule XXI, and it is not therefore subject to their restrictions as to legislation. There is an abundance of precedents which might be cited to this effect. Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, sections 3897 to 3901 and section 4219.

It does not follow, however, that any subject matter of which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors may acquire jurisdiction is a proper subject of consideration in the rivers and harbors appropriation bill. Such a bill is a privileged bill under the rules. The committee may at any time, under the rules, report a bill relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and it may be called up as a privileged matter under the rule. It is a bill which is reported originally by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and not a bill which has been referred to that committee by the House. It follows, therefore, that anything in the bill which the committee has not the authority to report as a privileged matter under the rules is subject to a point of order.

If, therefore, the conclusion of the Chair is sound, then it is only necessary to inquire as to whether or not the language of the paragraph relates to and has for its primary object and effect the improvement of a river or harbor. It provides in substance that the Mississippi River Commission shall make an examination of the caving bank on the right bank of the Ohio River below the mouth of the Cache River and directs it to make such plans and take such steps as may be necessary from time to time to protect the levee line endangered by the caving bank. It will be observed that these steps are to be taken not to protect the caving bank of the river for the purposes of navigation, but to protect the levee line. Now, the Chair thinks that without doing violence to reason or parliamentary practice, judicial notice can be taken of the fact that levees are built to prevent destruction to life and property by overflows, although in some cases an incidental benefit to navigation may result therefrom. In this particular case the Chair is fortified by statements and admissions made from the floor in argument on the point of order, and also by both the majority and minority reports of the Mississippi River Commission, which were made in 1880.

The attention of the Chair has been called to the fact that the flood-control bill, which was passed at the last term of Congress, authorized and directed the Secretary of War to carry out the plans of the Mississippi River Commission not only for the controlling of floods of the Mississippi River but also for continuing the improvement of that river, and also the Ohio River, from its mouth to the mouth of the Cache River. But this, in the opinion of the Chair, need not be considered in a decision of the question now before it. This paragraph directs the commission to do a specific thing, and that is to protect the levee line, and makes no reference to the improvement of the river.

The Chair is aware of the fact that heretofore propositions relating to the flood waters of the rivers in the United States have been referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but this was before the establishment of the Committee on Flood Control, to which now, under the rule, all proposed legislation relating to flood control must be referred. But, as stated, for the purpose of passing upon the point of order the Chair does not feel called upon to pass upon the question of jurisdiction between the two committees. It is sufficient to say that the Chair is constrained to hold that the paragraph in question does not relate to the improvement of the river and hence, in the opinion of the Chair, it is not within the authority or jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report it as a part of the bill now under consideration. For the reasons stated, the point of order is sustained and the paragraph will be stricken from the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri River to Minneapolis, Minn.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $500,000.

Mr FREAR. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FREAR. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the paragraph has been stricken from the bill, I wish to make a brief statement.

After many years of discussion Congress finally arrived at the conclusion that the proper way to take care of the floods of the Mississippi River was to create a fund, turn the fund over to the Mississippi River Commission, composed of engineers from the Army, engineers from civil life, and engineers from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and to have this improvement and flood control in accordance with plans and specifications which that commission might adopt. This particular part of the Ohio River is subject to overflow from the floods of the Mississippi River. For many years the bank has been caving at Cairo more or less rapidly, though within the past 10 or 15 years not very rapidly. The people interested have endeavored to get the Rivers and Harbors Committee to revet this bank to protect it; but every report made by the engineers who were instructed to inspect the work was to the effect that it was not in the interest of navigation, and therefore it was not undertaken. So when the Flood Control Committee was created and this limitation which had hitherto proven a strait-jacket for the Rivers and Harbors Committee, by limiting them to matters touching navigation, was removed and the Flood Control Committee was given jurisdiction under the law to make improvements through the Mississippi River Commission, without reference to their relation to navigation and solely in the interest of flood control, the Cairo people came before our committee and asked that the jurisdiction of the commission be extended up as far as the Cache River, so that they could get the benefits of the act; and the committee, after the hearing and after visiting Cairo, decided to do that.

I have asked the opportunity to make this statement because I did not want anybody interested in Cairo to get the thought that I or the Committee on Flood Control were at all opposed to this project. Last fall interested parties from Cairo went before the Mississippi River Commission and asked that this work be undertaken. I will read from the official records of the commission to show just what happened, because this is going to be taken care of, and taken care of just as soon as it would have been if this item had stayed in the bill. There is not any doubt about that.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. The fact, then, that the chairman of the Flood Control Committee has made this point of order which has been sustained does not signify at all that the chairman of the Flood Control Committee is opposed to this needed improvement? Personally I am very anxious to see this work done, and think it is very necessary.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Not a bit in the world, and that is the reason I wanted to take the floor, because I did not want that impression to get out.

Now, here are the facts: We have already agreed to create a commission, to give it a fund, and to let the commission exercise its judgment in improving the river as a whole. Why, Members of this House who have been here for many years remember that we created a commission on the Missouri River and appropriated money, but one Congressman would secure an amendment providing that so much of this money must be expended in his district, and another Congressman would secure a provision that so much must be spent in his district, with the general result that Congress very soon arrived at the conclusion that if we were going to create a commission and then not permit the commission to exercise its own judgment, we were doing a useless thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. So Congress thereupon refused to appropriate any money for that commission and abolished it.

And so as to the Mississippi River Commission. When I first came to Congress there was a bad habit that prevailed for a number of years of providing that so much of this money may be spent here, there, and about. One of these provisos related to the city of Greenville, Miss., my home town. Mr. Burton was then chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. He took the matter up with me and said, "This is not the way for us to do this. If we are going to create a commission and give them money, we should permit that commission to go on and exercise its best judgment and spend the money where it really ought to be spent, having in view the general improvement of the river." I agreed with that, and upon my motion my own home city was stricken from the bill, and the commission was given the authority to do the work where, in the judgment of the commission, it ought to be done. Once or twice since then provisions of the same sort have been proposed here, and I have always opposed them. I opposed them at Vicksburg; I opposed them at Memphis, right next door to me. I have opposed such provisions anywhere. But in certain instances we could not help ourselves. The Senate put on these unwise provisions. I remember on one occasion the Senate put on a proviso that a part of the money should be taken away up the Arkansas River and spent there. We could not help ourselves. The Senate would not pass the bill unless we permitted them to mar it, so we submitted, but the House has universally adhered to the proposition that the commission ought to be permitted to exercise its own judgment.

The flood-control bill is a new thing. There has been only one appropriation made under it. These gentlemen went before the Mississippi River Commission last November, and I read now from the records of the commission:

> Parsons, George, chairman Cairo drainage district: Letters transmitting copy of agreement between trustees of Cairo City property and the Cairo & Vincennes Railroad Co., and requesting aid from the commission. Copy of agreement and blue-print map accompanying. (Nov. 15, 1917.)
> It was moved by Mr. Ockerson that the president reply to the Cairo drainage district stating that all the plant belonging to the commission is occupied on other and more urgent work and nothing can be done along the Ohio River front between Cairo and the mouth of Cache River at the present time. Carried.
> It was moved by Mr. West that the first and second districts engineer be directed to make, after the next high water and before the next working season, further examination, and submit a report giving an estimate of cost of an adequate revetment protecting the caving banks on the Illinois bank on the Ohio River below the mouth of Cache River and also an estimate of cost of building a new levee along the caving front. Carried.

So you will see that the Mississippi River Commission, without any instructions from Congress, have ordered the survey which this bill provided, and there is no sort of question that when Congress makes the appropriation this year in the sundry civil bill, as it will make a liberal appropriation, this work will be done at Cairo.

This contingency, of course, is always to be taken into consideration that there is a possibility of some development upon the river, a caving in of banks, where the work would be of more urgency in the opinion of the Mississippi River Commission than at Cairo, which is improbable. Of course, if that were true, the House would all agree that the work ought to be done at the place where the needs are the most urgent.

Now, in the northern part of my own district—and gentlemen will see the embarrassment that comes to every Congressman who lives on the river if this sort of legislation should be enacted—in the Yazoo Delta there is a pressing need caused by a threatened caving in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. My constituents have come to me and with just as great urgency as it is possible that anybody else's constituents could have, and insisted that we direct the commission to go there and revet the banks before they caved in and overflowed the Yazoo Delta which comprises some 7,000 square miles of very fertile territory with numerous small towns and small cities. I have told them that I would do nothing of the sort, that we had turned the money over to the commission and instructed the commission to look over the entire river, treat it as a whole, and spend the money where, in the judgment of the commission, it should be spent. I take it that nobody can take exception to any such a proceeding.

Now, I do not hold this up as an example for others to follow, but I have been in Congress 15 years. Ninety-five per cent of my district is subject to overflow. My home, my house that I live in, in the city of Greenville, is 15 feet below the level of the Mississippi when it is at flood tide, and only five blocks away. Yet I have refused persistently and consistently for 15 years even to go before the Mississippi River Commission when they held their annual meetings to determine where the money should be allotted. I have told my constituents that I would not go before the commission and attempt to influence them in the slightest. I believe I ought to keep faith with my colleagues, when we agreed that we would appropriate a lump sum, turn it over to the commission, direct the commission to spend it where in the judgment of the commission it ought to be expended; that I did not think that I ought to try to influence the commission to do anything that was not absolutely consistent with its own judgment and initiative.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman knows that Congress did do that in the last rivers and harbors bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; the Senate put on the last bill a provision with relation to the bar formed in front of the city of Memphis, and said it must be removed. It was destroying the harbor there. It was put on the rivers and harbors bill, and it related solely to navigation and not to flood control. They have done some things like that. The Senate put on a proposition to go up the Arkansas River fifty-odd miles and revet the banks that had no relation to navigation but solely to protect private property. But the House has never done it on its own initiative, and I have always fought it on the floor of the House.

Mr. DENISON. Did not Congress do something of that sort at Vicksburg?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is an entirely different matter. Vicksburg was outside of the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission. The controversy there arose as to whether or not Vicksburg should be put back under the Mississippi River Commission, and I think that was very properly done, because Natchez, New Orleans, Cairo, and other places were under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. Has not the Senate put in a provision and Congress enacted a law that the commission should do certain things?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; several times.

Mr. SWITZER. And that violated your principle.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. And the gentleman thought it was right.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I voted against the Vicksburg proposition and I voted against it everywhere. Now at Memphis—we are getting entirely off from the subject and going into matters relating solely to navigation—but at Memphis a bar formed in front of the city that threatened to destroy the harbor for several hundred yards. That related solely to navigation and had nothing on the face of the earth to do with flood control.

Mr. SWITZER. Did not the gentleman go before the Senate committee and use his influence to get that provision put in the bill giving relief to the city of Memphis?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I could truthfully say no, but it would not be the whole truth. I never went before the Senate committee, but I spoke to Senator SHIELDS and told him I thought it was a perfectly proper thing to do.

Mr. SWITZER. And did not that violate the principle that the gentleman is advocating?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It did not, in my opinion, for it only related to navigation; and the jurisdiction of the Senate Commerce Committee over matters relating to navigation has never been questioned, not in the slightest. We designate harbors and rivers all over the country to be specifically provided for, but I submit that there is no question at all that this House would overwhelmingly sustain the position that when we create a Mississippi River Commission giving it $45,000,000 to spend according to its judgment where it ought to be spent, having in view the general control of the river, there is no doubt at all that the House will say that that is right, and they will vote down any proposition to violate it and substitute the uninformed judgment of the House of Representatives for the opinion of the engineers.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word in regard to this provision of the bill that has gone out, and somewhat in reply to what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has said. After I became a Member of Congress some three years ago, my attention was invited to the condition of the Ohio River just above the city of Cairo. The Ohio River was changing its course, and gradually moving over toward the Mississippi River, just above the city of Cairo, and the people there felt they were very much endangered and were uneasy about it. They went before the Mississippi River Commission to get relief, and they could not get any. The Mississippi River Commission would not listen to them or pay any serious attention to them, practically. Then when I came here I began to see if we could not get some relief through Congress. I consulted with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], because he had been influential in matters of this kind for some time. The trouble at that time was that the Mississippi River Commission only had jurisdiction of the Mississippi River, and had no jurisdiction whatever over the Ohio River, and this work could only be done by the Mississippi River Commission, because it is revetment, and the Mississippi River Commission has charge of the machinery that is necessary for putting in revetments. So the first thing we had to do in order to get this relief, if we could get it at all, was to get the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission extended up this part of the Ohio River some 5 or 6 miles, so that they would have authority to do the work up there. About this time the Flood Control Committee was created and began consideration of a bill to prevent floods and improve the Mississippi River.

I went before that committee and we got a provision in the bill for controlling the floods of the Mississippi River and the Sacramento River, extending the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission up the 5 or 6 miles of the Ohio River. That bill passed the House and went over to the Senate and remained in the Senate for about a year, as I remember. I think it passed the House in May, 1916. There was some thought or fear that that bill would not pass the Senate at all. In the meantime the river and harbor appropriation bill came up in the House, and, after consultation with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], and upon his advice, I went over and took the matter up in the Senate with the Senate Commerce Committee in order to get a provision of that kind inserted in the river and harbor appropriation bill extending the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission up this part of the Ohio River for the express purpose of getting this work done. I did not do it without consulting with the Chief of Engineers. The Chief of Engineers, Gen. Black, furnished evidence to the Senate Commerce Committee, and upon a presentation of the necessity of this work to the Senate Commerce Committee both by representatives of the people at Cairo and by the Chief of Engineers' office the Senate inserted a provision in the river and harbor appropriation bill of 1916 conferring jurisdiction on the Mississippi River Commisson over this part of the Ohio River; and, as I say, it was done for the purpose of giving them authority to go up there and do this work, which was recognized as urgent. That bill became a law and extended the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission over this part of the Ohio River months before the flood-control bill ever became a law.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. For a question.

Mr. WHEELER. No part of the $45,000,000 appropriated for Mississippi flood control can be expended for a retaining wall along the Ohio River that the gentleman speaks of?

Mr. DENISON. It can be now.

Mr. WHEELER. Must it not all be confined strictly to the Mississippi River?

Mr. DENISON. No; it can be expended upon this part of the Ohio River as well as the Mississippi River. Afterwards the flood-control bill did become a law; I think in 1917. That contained a similar provision to the provision which the river and harbor bill had contained the year before, so that both bills gave the Mississippi River Commission this jurisdiction. The flood-control bill simply gave it jurisdiction so that the commission could expend whatever part of the $45,000,000 they might think was necessary to do the work, but their jurisdiction had already been extended for that purpose by the river and harbor appropriation bill of the year before.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That amendment taken from the flood-control bill which passed the House in May prior?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; it had passed the House, and it had hung up in the Senate for nearly a year, and we did not think it would go through; and because we did not think it would, we got the provision put in the river and harbor appropriation bill in July, 1916. Notwithstanding their jurisdiction has been extended over this part of the Ohio River so that they could do this work, the commission still would not do it. We could not find out why they did not; but finally they disclosed the reason why they did not, and that reason was that certain officials of the Mississippi River Commission had the impression that it was the duty of the railroad company to prevent the changing of the bed of the Ohio River, and they seemed to think it was not the duty of the Government to do it. Their contention was absolutely without foundation. They never had looked into the records, but they had that impression; and notwithstanding it was a meritorious proposition and the work ought to be done, they would not do it because they thought the Big Four Railroad Co. would have to do it. Finally we got the Chief of Engineers' office to look into the merits of the question, and they found that the railroad was under no obligation to do this work and could not do it. Then the office of the Chief of Engineers took it up with the Mississippi River Commission with a view of having them do it, in substance, but did not, of course, like to give any specific directions to do it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. For a question.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The Chief Engineer's office, in a letter which I put in the RECORD, says that their opinion on the merits of the proposition was never requested by the commission, and they had never expressed any opinion, but did express the opinion before the Committee on Appropriations the other day that this was, as it was expressed, a bad item, that they ought not to understake to direct the Mississippi River Commission, but ought to leave it to their judgment.

Mr. DENISON. Well, I am going to say I do not know what has been done by the commission before the Appropriations Committee, but I know what has been done by the Chief of Engineer's office. Now, last year after the commission got jurisdiction to do the work and got their appropriation the people of Cairo went before them and asked them to come up there and do this work, and their reply was that their funds had been exhausted in other places, which may be true. But the point I want to make is this, that this work has to be done. It is a matter that is threatening Cairo and the people in the vicinity of that city, and is going to have to be done sooner or later, and it ought to be done now, because it can be done for a great deal less money than it can be done hereafter. And the question now arises whether or not the people of Cairo must sit still and wait for the Mississippi River Commission to do the work in its own good time, or whether Congress has the right to direct them to go and do it now, before there is a disaster.

Now, I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] as to the general principle that this commission ought to be left to its own discretion to do its work; but when the commission is laboring under a false impression, as it has been so for a number of years, and because of that false impression has refused to do work that ought to be done, I think that Congress is superior to the Mississippi River Commission and ought to direct them to do it. Now, when we came to look into the precedents for that I found that last year Congress directed them to expend money in making certain improvements at Memphis, and it has heretofore directed them to spend money at other places. I think if Congress could direct the Mississippi River Commission to expend money at Memphis, at Vicksburg, and at other places, then certainly there is justification for asking the Rivers and Harbors Committee for legislation that will direct them to expend money here where it is needed at Cairo.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman understands Congress never directed money to be expended at Vicksburg, but authorized it.

Mr. DENISON. It has directed them to spend money at Memphis, I understand, with the gentleman's approval, and at other places. There is no one who doubts the merits of this proposition. The people at Cairo and its vicinity have been spending money for years and years building levees, and the river has encroached upon those levees until it is going to destroy them, and it will be impossible for the people there to replace them. They can not do it. The loss and suffering that will result can not be estimated. They must have aid from the Government, and they ought to have it now. I regret the gentleman from Mississippi made the point of order against this provision of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I was content to remain silent after the point of order had been disposed of, but in view of the discussion I think I ought to make a brief statement. The Mississippi River Commission and its activities embrace not only the Mississippi River, but from time to time its jurisdiction has been extended. The river and harbor acts in past years have usually made appropriations for the activities of the commission of the Mississippi River from the Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio, but also for other rivers within its jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission has been extended to Cape Girardeau, above the mouth of the Ohio, and also to Rock Island, Ill., which latter point is 449 miles above the mouth of the Ohio, both of which are in the river and harbor act of 1916. In 1913 it was authorized to do work at the mouth of the Yazoo River and the harbor at Vicksburg, and in the last river and harbor act to remove a shoal opposite the city of Memphis. The matter of the danger of flood waters at Cairo was brought to the attention of the committee, primarily by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON]. Other proof, however, was submitted. The committee were impressed by what they regarded as the acute situation at Cairo which demanded attention. It was represented to the committee that the Mississippi River Commission had for several years been importuned by the people of Cairo to make a survey and to take steps there to protect a caving of the bank of the river, to all of which they had given no favorable response. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] first came before the Rivers and Harbors Committee at this session we sent him to the Committee on Flood Control and advised him to confer with its distinguished chairman, Mr. HUMPHREYS.

He came back and reported that the chairman of the committee stated that his committee would do nothing about the matter, or, to put it perhaps in entirely courteous terms, could do nothing, and nothing was to be done, so that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors were confronted with this situation, that unless that committee acted there would be no legislative relief afforded at this session to this critical situation at Cairo. After our committee had completed the river and harbor bill the Committee on Flood Control, through its chairman, protested so strongly against the inclusion of this paragraph in the bill the committee reconsidered the matter and decided, in deference to the Committee on Flood Control, desiring to have no unseemly controversy with it as to jurisdiction, to eliminate it from the bill, and authorized the chairman to make the motion to strike it out. Now, that is the status of its relationship to the Rivers and Harbors Committee in its deliberations during this session. Now, I would like to say something else about the Mississippi River Commission. The Rivers and Harbors Committee will at all times in the future endeavor not to trespass upon the jurisdiction of the Flood Committee, but it must be remembered that the Mississippi River Commission have activities which are within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, because they affect the improvement of rivers, and whenever conditions arise which in the wisdom of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors justify them in proposing legislation to the House to direct the activities of the Mississippi River Commission so far as it affects the improvements of rivers, they will without hesitation submit it to the House. One other thought. The Mississippi River Commission constitutes an agency of Congress. They are not superior to the Congress, and I take it that this House will not admit at any time that they are immune from direction involved in legislation proposed by the House.

And I wish to say, with all deference to the distinguished members of the commission, that I think they are playing in too large a degree the rôle of autocrat. Congress in the last river and harbor act inserted a clause in this language:

The Mississippi River Commission shall forthwith make an examination of the Memphis Harbor, on the Mississippi River at the mouth of Wolf River, and at the earliest practicable moment make such plans and take such steps, to be approved by the Chief of Engineers, as will remove the large sand bar in front of Memphis to such an extent as may be necessary in the interest of navigation at that point, such improvements to be paid out of any funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the work of the Mississippi River Commission, not to exceed, however, the sum of $250,000 for the current fiscal year.

Mr. FISHER, of Tennessee, represented——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. FISHER, of Tennessee, a member of the committee, represented to us that both he and others, since the last river and harbor act was approved, August 8, 1917, had gone before the commission insisting that they should discharge the plain mandate of Congress; that up to that time, which was about 10 days or two weeks ago, they had taken no steps whatever to comply with the direction of Congress. Now, I can speak judicially minded about this matter. My district is located hundreds of miles from the great Mississippi Valley.

I have no prejudice whatever against the improvement of the lower Mississippi River for flood control, or for any of these other rivers which have been placed under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission. But when Congress places the Ohio River, from its mouth to the mouth of the Cache River, within the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission, I say that that amounts to a direction to the commission to take care of flood conditions there when they are acute and urgent just as well as when conditions are acute and urgent at other places. I will do the gentleman from Mississippi the justice to say that he does not think that this condition at Cairo is as urgent as at other places. We were impressed differently. He may be right about that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. In half a minute. But as long as this paragraph has been stricken from the bill we may now have an opportunity to determine the relative urgency of these improvements on rivers within the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman stated that I did not think the work at Cairo was as urgent as at other points. I do not think that is exactly accurate. I said that the Mississippi River Commission decided that in their opinion it was not as urgent. I just read it. It was not an opinion of mine. The only reason I wanted to discuss the matter at all was to put into the RECORD the fact that I am in entire sympathy with the people of Cairo and have no hostility in the world toward them, and hope that the work will be done. I have not the remotest doubt that it is going to be done, but I want it to be done in order.

Mr. SMALL. Well, I hope it will be done, and I hope its urgency will be impressed on the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I hope the gentleman indulges that same hope as to Commerce Landing, in my district, and as to Panther Forest, over in the district of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. SMALL. I do.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I said "Commerce Landing, in my district, and Panther Forest, in the district of the gentleman from Arkansas," and up in the district of the gentleman from Missouri as well, and the Tensas front, in the district of the gentleman from Louisiana. In other words, I want to bring all within the blessing of that benediction that the gentleman from North Carolina has just pronounced.

Mr. SMALL. At a future time I shall seek the genial companionship of the gentleman from Mississippi, and we can commune together on that subject.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. And when that comes to fruition the gentleman from North Carolina will leave to the Mississippi River Commission the responsibility of selecting the points to be improved.

Mr. SMALL. The Mississippi River Commission is the creature of Congress and subject to its direction, and when Congress places these different rivers under its jurisdiction it expects that commission impartially, justly, and fairly to give attention to such rivers as are placed under its jurisdiction. Congress has the right at any time to direct its activities when, in its opinion, it is not pursuing its activities in a fair manner.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As I understand from the arguments and remarks that have been made here, the Mississippi River Commission is limited to the Mississippi River?

Mr. SMALL. Oh, no. Its activities embrace the Mississippi River up as far as Rock Island, and the Arkansas River; and it has taken jurisdiction heretofore of the Yazoo River and harbor at Vicksburg, Miss., and also a part of the Ohio River. You might say "the Mississippi River and some of its tributaries."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How about the Missouri River? That is subject to overflow, and a great many acres there are subject to inundation. Is there any commission to look after that?

Mr. SMALL. There was a commission, but that has been abolished, and now the Missouri River is under a general project of improvement.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. FREAR. I do so in order to introduce into the RECORD a letter received this morning from the Shipping Board in reference to the proposed Goltra contract, which was mentioned on the floor on Saturday. I desire to introduce this letter with an accompanying statement, and also with a brief comparison of the shipments and appropriations for the harbors and rivers taken from the minority report. I will state that the letter from the Shipping Board says in effect that the Army engineers have been given this sum of money, $3,360,000, and it is under their control, and any contract made with Col. Goltra, of St. Louis, must be made with the engineers. I suggest that this is in addition to the $500,000 which was appropriated by Congress and which they have had for experimental purposes for eight years.

There is another suggestion made in this letter that a mistake was made as to the amount proposed for the Black Warrior, for the building of barges and other vessels. The press statement was $21,000,000, and that was quoted in the speech the other day on that press authority. In this letter it is stated that that amount is just 10 times too large. The amount set apart is $2,100,000, which has been proposed for these Warrior River boats.

I ask unanimous consent to put this letter into the RECORD at this particular point, together with the statement of explanation; but before that is inserted, and prior to that, for the purpose of affecting the standing of this bill in the House, I ask to have read from the Clerk's desk a letter that I received from the Secretary of War upon this bill.

The letter from the Secretary of War is self-explanatory, and has governed the action of a majority of the Rivers and Harbors Committee in the preparation of this bill. The committee has confined expenditures to those recommended by Army engineers and those recommended by the Secretary of War for war purposes. Many expenditures recommended by Army engineers are of doubtful value, but they are linked in with war measures, impossible to separate or change in an omnibus bill, and the bill as a whole is supported because we are in war and can not stop at extravagance in some quarters when necessity demands immediate harbor improvements for carrying on the war.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 3, 1918.

Hon. JAMES A. FREAR,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FREAR: I have your letter of January 29, with regard to river and harbor legislation.

It is the President's wish and mine that the bill of this year be limited to the maintenance of existing projects, and that if any new projects be introduced that they be such only as are of immediate value in the prosecution of the war.

I have not been able personally to follow the pending bill through the committee, but no doubt it follows fairly closely the suggestions of the Chief of Engineers made in accordance with the policy I have above outlined.

I shall be very happy indeed to comply with your suggestion and to aid in restraining the introduction of new projects for which a clear and cogent war reason can not be given. So far no such project has been brought to my attention.

Cordially, yours,
NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. FREAR. Now, Mr. Chairman, my purpose in introducing that letter of the Secretary of War is to briefly indicate to the House that the Secretary of War and the War Department have recommended the particular new projects which they think are necessary at this time for war purposes. There have been one or two projects that have been proposed here on the floor—one, particularly, has been placed in the bill—and the committee has been overridden in its efforts to sustain the bill as recommended by the Secretary of War. There are projects and there are items of appropriation in this bill that I do not believe can be justified; but they have been recommended by the Army engineers, and for that reason, as long as they are coupled with war projects, I do not believe there is anyone on the floor that will vote against the bill that contains these necessary war projects for harbors. I ask to have these other letters printed from the Shipping Board in connection with the letter of the Secretary of War

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. The following correspondence presents the facts according to attached letter regarding the proposed contract with Col. Goltra, wherein Col. Keller's statements to the River and Harbor Committee, found on pages 20 and 21 of the hearings, were quoted. Therein it was stated by him that—

The authority given by the Shipping Board to construct the fleet for Mr. Goltra is especially limited to that case alone.

It was assumed that Col. Keller, a representative of the Army engineers and also inland waterway committee, who appeared with Col. Goltra, spoke for the Shipping Board through the committee. It appears he spoke for the Army engineers, who have been given $500,000 for experimental work on the Mississippi River without any tangible result. It is the Army engineers who propose to spend $3,360,000 in building a fleet of boats to be used by Col. Goltra, of St. Louis, for his private business at a nominal rental, not for war purposes but for Col. Goltra's steel plant at St. Louis, as was disclosed from the hearings. It is also true, according to Col. Goltra's statement, that he is not a practical riverman, has had no experience on the river, excepting on the one trip to St. Paul last year, when he lost over $10,000.

Responsibility for this expenditure for boats of an experimental new type, according to Col. Goltra's statement on page 46 of the hearings, is now shifted from the Shipping Board to the Army engineers. The Army engineers have expended nearly $170,000,000 on the Mississippi River, with a loss of 95 per cent in river commerce during that period, and after failing to make any experiments of value, with $500,000 placed in their hands, the burden is to be shifted to Col. Goltra, a novice in waterway transportation, who is to lease the Government boats for his own use exclusively. It is an interesting situation.

The second proposition is that a statement in the minority report and in debate as to building of boats for the Warrior River is a mistake in amount. This is unfortunate, because no misstatement was intended. The information was gained from several press clippings, all to the effect that $21,000,000 was to be given for building boats for the Warrior River. These statements were not publicly denied or corrected so far as noted. The amount is only $2,100,000, in addition to an annual maintenance fee of $1,453,800, according to the letter herewith.

As a war measure, this proposition can not be measured by ordinary rules of governmental expense, but it is noted that after spending nearly $12,000,000 to make the Warrior River a perfect canalized stream with a completed project, Army engineers have succeeded only to the extent of fastening a present maintenance charge of $200,000 a year on the Government Treasury in addition to a half million dollars annual interest charge without producing any noticeable commerce by ordinary business activities. The river is almost as deserted as the Mississippi, and the Government is now required to build boats and operate them under well-known methods of Government extravagance. Such contracts in ordinary times would be subject to close scrutiny, but if any use can be made of these rivers during war times the expenditures, however large, may be justified.

That is beyond the province of our committee to determine, and was called to the attention of the House because of the enormous expenditures reported to be authorized for Warrior River craft in addition to the Muscle Shoals project in that same neighborhood, and Goltra boats on the Mississippi, all at Government expense.

It is further noted that whereas our own committee has endeavored to confine this bill, under recommendations from the Secretary of War, to a war basis, that the proposed Goltra contract and Warrior River expenditures may take several years to complete, although the predictions, as usual, are for early construction at a time when boat builders are in great demand for Government ships.

The letter and attached memorandum is self-explanatory. The following is the letter from the board:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, April 12, 1918.

Hon. JAMES A. FREAR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FREAR: In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 5, page 5074, in the course of your discussion of the river and harbor bill, you were quoted as stating in effect that the sum of $3,360,000 had been "given by the Shipping Board to Mr. Goltra for his own private interests" A little further on in your speech, on the same page, you state that Mr. Charles Montecon—evidently meaning Mr. Charles Bontecue—and Mr. A. J. Mason, special examiners for the Shipping Board, had recommended an expenditure of $21,000,000 for the construction of barges on the Warrior River.

Appreciating your desire for accuracy, I am taking the liberty of calling your attention to certain evidently unintentional misrepresentations in connection with these two statements.

Last December, upon the recommendation of the Department of Commerce and the Department of War, after the proposal had met with the approval of the legal authorities, the Shipping Board made an allotment of $3,360,000 to the Board of Engineers of the War Department for the purpose of constructing tugs and barges on the Mississippi River.

The Shipping Board has no contract, agreement, or understanding with Mr. Goltra, and, apart from making the allotment for the proposed construction, at the request of the two departments named, the Shipping Board has left the entire matter in the hands of the engineers of the War Department.

With regard to the statement that the special examiners of the Shipping Board had recommended an expenditure of $21,000,000 for barges and towboats for the Warrior River, I am inclosing you herewith a copy of the Mason-Bontecue report. Whatever may be your judgment in respect to the force of the argument presented, you will note that the recommendation, instead of being $21,000,000, is for $2,100,000, or exactly one-tenth of the figures which you name.

It occurred to me that you might like to have these facts for your information, if not for the record.

Sincerely, yours,

FRANK B. LORD,
Assistant to the Chairman.

Attached hereto is a brief statement taken from page 3 of the minority report, and gives much light on comparative expenditures and results achieved by the Engineering Corps on inland waterways. I am in favor of developing these waterways if to be used, but they ought to be used, and that was the purpose of making the $500,000 appropriation for experimental purposes which was placed in the engineers' hands eight years ago:

Amazing comparisons of water-borne commerce and cost.

Ferriage and sand hauled from 1 to 2 or 3 miles, on the average, unaffected by new river improvements, is deducted, because no justification exists for including such items. Three Wisconsin harbors handled about sixteen times as much actual freight and hauled it twenty-seven times as far on the average, compared with traffic on the three greatest rivers, or, expressed differently, the total ton mileage was four hundred times larger at these three harbors than on the three rivers.

Government expenditures furnish equally important comparisons.

Why should it cost the Government twenty times as much to furnish waterways for about 4,000,000 tons of actual commerce floated 28 miles compared to 70,000,000 tons floated 800 miles?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise in opposition to the motion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, but I do wish to comment upon the letter from the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman pardon an interruption?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. We are proceeding now by unanimous consent, and of course I do not want to take the gentleman off his feet, and will not do so; but I simply wish the committee to understand that we are proceeding by unanimous consent and that we would like to proceed with the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to aid the gentleman.

Mr. SMALL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of five minutes we proceed with the reading of the bill. The gentleman can get recognition on another paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman wants to have a paragraph read, I will come in after that paragraph. I want to see the committee make progress.

Mr. SMALL. Will that be agreeable to the gentleman?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Entirely agreeable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mississippi River between St. Paul and Minneapolis, and between Brainerd and Grand Rapids, Mississippi and Leech Rivers, and reservoirs at headwaters of Mississippi River: Completing improvement of Mississippi River between St. Paul and Minneapolis, $80,000; completing improvement of reservoirs at headwaters, $32,000; in all, $112,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] has had read into the RECORD a very important and interesting letter from the Secretary of War, in which he speaks also for the President of the United States. The effect of that letter is to suggest to the Congress that its action on this river and harbor bill shall be limited to those projects reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I take it that means that such projects as the East River 40-foot channel, which has been voted into the bill, and which I approve, and the Key West Harbor project, which has been voted into the bill, are not at this time receiving the sanction of the Secretary of War or of the President.

Mr. MADDEN. And what about Charleston?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But it leaves the very important item of Charleston in the bill, because that item has the approval of the Secretary of War. This whole matter is extremely important at this time, because the river and harbor bill presented to us is presumed to be a war measure. From my point of view it is one of the most important of all the war measures, excepting those which actually prepare for the equipment of the Army and the Navy and the sending of our boys to the front. The river and harbor bill is a bill to promote transportation within the United States; not to promote it in France or in any other country, but to promote it in the United States, where, if transportation is needed anywhere on earth, it is surely needed at the present moment.

The railroads, as we all know, were incapable of handling the business of the country, and broke down under the strain, particularly the strain of war business; and we know that the waterways, if improved, would relieve that situation. The President knows this, the Secretary of War knows it, and every Member of Congress knows it—that if we put the waterways in working order and make them work they will be the most serviceable auxiliaries to the overdone railroad transportation of the country.

The introduction of the Charleston project at 40 feet, at the instance of the Secretary of War, makes it reasonable that the great port of New York should ask for 40 feet to get through the East River to Long Island Sound and to connect with the 40-foot Ambrose Channel to the sea. It makes it pardonable also for our friends from Key West to come in and ask that their channel at that important port be improved. I was one of those who wanted to agree with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in reporting this bill. But New York was voted into the bill against the protest of the committee. Charleston went into the bill at the instance of the committee. That being done, I thought Key West should also go into the bill, because I know something of the Key West project, and I am satisfied that at this particular time it is a war emergency. I believe that every channel capable of bearing vessels of war to or from a harbor is now a war measure of the first importance. Key West is such a harbor, and its channels are such channels if kept in order; but at the present they are not as they should be, because vessels of war, as well as vessels of commerce, have been going aground at Key West. I do not want to be understood as arguing the case of Key West. I am simply saying that if it is reasonable that Charleston should go into this bill for 40 feet, as the Secretary of War suggests, it is reasonable that New York should go in for 40 feet, and it is reasonable that Key West should go in, and perhaps that other worthy projects approved by the Army engineers should go in. We may find ourselves in great distress if the war reaches our shores and some of our rivers and harbors and channels that connect them up are found inadequate to the demands of our Army or Navy or to meet the requirements for transporting troops, munitions, and supplies.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I should like to know what effect the 40 feet for New York and for Charleston and Norfolk will have upon Philadelphia and Baltimore with only 35 feet?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is going to have a serious effect upon those two ports. I would like to explain that situation, and hope I may be able to do so intelligently. With Charleston given 40 feet and New York given 40 feet and Boston given 40 feet, what becomes of the other great ports along the Atlantic seaboard? The people of Philadelphia and the people of Baltimore must wake up to the situation that confronts them. We have a wonderful river in the Delaware——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman proceeding for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have a wonderful river in the Delaware, giving probably as much service to the war to-day as any other single factor in the manufacture of ships, in the manufacture of war munitions, and in the employment of the other agencies of war. Up at Philadelphia, where the navy yard is, we are 100 miles from the sea, well protected against any enemy, and we have the finest fresh-water navy yard in the world, where the ships of the fleet can be taken care of at all times, with the least loss and the least waste.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. How much would it require to make 40 feet in the Delaware? How long a channel would have to be improved?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We are now working on a 35-foot channel project, for which we contended for years, over a length of 63 miles. It was authorized in 1910. According to the original estimates of the engineers it should have been completed in six years. It should be completed now, but it is not now more than 50 per cent done. Yet, with this great river upon which more than 45 per cent of the warship building of the United States is now going on, we are put behind New York with 40 feet, behind Boston with 40 feet, and behind Charleston with 40 feet, as now assured at the instance of the Secretary of War. Norfolk perhaps is in better shape as to channel depth than we are, and Baltimore also, although the approaches there are somewhat similar to those at Philadelphia.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. FESS. That is one of the things that it seems to me ought to be pressed, that where the commerce and the defense is so necessary, like New York and Philadelphia, and perhaps Baltimore, I do not think we ought to hesitate at all to do that, but I have always had a question of making it a condition of doing work at other places.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. The people in the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware should be warned, and I warn the people of Maryland also to get busy and look after their respective port interests. I warn the Nation, and particularly in this time of war, not to minimize the importance of this great national asset in the Delaware River. It may not be wise to concentrate all the business of the country, all the international business at least, at one or two or three ports. The creation of 40-foot channels at one or several ports to the exclusion of others raises that question.

In providing 40 feet for Charleston you may be prejudicing other southern ports and you may be disturbing business along the coast. In giving New York 40 feet to the exclusion of other northern ports you certainly aided the congestion which hampered the management of the war during the past winter.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SEARS. I would like to call attention to the fact that this letter is dated February 3, more than two months ago, and that Secretary of War Baker has been out of the country two months.

Mr. FREAR. But that was written at the time we were in committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have no quarrel whatever with the Charleston project. I am very glad to see Charleston get 40 feet. I am glad that somebody had sufficient influence with the Secretary of War to have him write a letter in support of Charleston, but I want the committee and the House to know that while we give 40 feet to one port on the north coast, and then to one on the south, and forget to bring the other ports up to par, we may be doing an injury to the entire country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How long would it take to make the harbor at Philadelphia 40 feet deep?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, we started with a 35-foot project in 1910 and it is 50 per cent completed now.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask for two minutes to answer the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I was wondering if the gentleman had given consideration to the fact that all the deep-draft ships carrying commerce across the seas would naturally go into the port most convenient to enter, with the shortest possible trip to make, and would not that preclude the possibility of such ships going to either Philadelphia or Baltimore?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; because the facts do not warrant any such supposition. The facts are that New York is the first port along the Atlantic coast, so far as international trade is concerned, and Philadelphia is the second port; its river is easily navigable. The thing lacking at Philadelphia—it was originally the first port of the country—was depth of channel. We had 30 feet only up to 1910. Now we are giving assurance to the whole world that we have 35 feet at high tide, which is the fact, and the international trade can come freely. We passed a vessel up the river a few days ago drawing 34.9 feet of water.

Mr. MADDEN. The proportion of ships that require a 40-foot channel, in proportion to the whole, entering American ports is very small is it not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The proportion that goes to New York that might not go to Philadelphia because of the draft is less than 1 per cent. The question is, are you going to construct every port channel 40 feet deep to accommodate less than 1 per cent of ships in international trade? That is a question for the Congress of the United States, and it is a serious one. I once introduced a bill which set a limit to the draft of vessels, and it was regarded as a freak bill. Its enactment would have meant that we would not attempt to deepen every port channel in the country to accommodate one or two big ships. The Panama Canal is supposed to limit the draft of vessels to 40 feet. That might settle the problem for our country. But I wish to say, in conclusion, that the sills of the Kiel Canal are 5 feet lower than those at Panama, so you may expect a continuance of deep-draft ships. You must also expect a demand for increased channel depths so long as you continue to increase the draft of your ships.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I introduced the letter from Secretary Baker supposing the purpose was understood, to show that the committee had been attempting to confine itself to these war projects and the projects recommended by engineers, and to show how carefully we have been trying to hew to the line. The argument just made is what has been said in the past of many other projects and many other ports undertaking to acquire ship improvements. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the House that he has not suffered very much, nor has his port in the past. In this bill there is over one million and a half dollars for the Delaware River and the Schuylkill at Philadelphia. That immediate locality has had over $25,000,000 for its improvement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I challenge that statement as to the 35-foot channel. That applies to the river since the beginning of time.

Mr. FREAR. Here is the statement right here on page 2158 of the Army Engineers' Report of 1917. The appropriations for Philadelphia Harbor are $25,210,373.46. I am speaking of what has been put in the channel, and it has been a tax on the people the same as every other tax.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I want to make my statement first. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman speaks of the Delaware River. Admiral Benson came before our committee and he stated, as members of the committee will remember, in a hearing last year that the Delaware River to-day is floating the largest battleships that are needed at the navy yard. The finest channel of any navy yard on the Atlantic coast is my recollection. That was his statement. I think he said that it was the best waterway they had for the navy yard on the coast.

We have given quite liberal appropriations, but the Secretary of War or the Army engineers have made certain recommendations for war purposes in this bill, not for the Delaware River, because it was not needed for that river. If it is necessary to come in here on the floor and drive home projects day after day, in order to influence the House in opposition to the report of the Army engineers, or to the War Department, that may be all right for those who engage in it, but it seems to me that the moment you do that—insist on amendments to the bill—you are breaking down the whole force, because every community believes its own interests are paramount. Each community desires to have its own river or harbor or creek, if necessary, placed in this bill.

We endeavor to proceed upon a logical basis by accepting the Secretary of War's recommendations for war purposes, supplemented by the reports of the Army engineers as to such places they claim are necessary for commercial purposes, and with which some of us do not agree in respect to their importance. We have left out new projects and new surveys, and in attempting to do that that we have reported this bill in the way in which it is reported, and we desire to stand by it. It is unusual for us to stand together. I have not done so generally, but this war is on; we are in the midst of war; and you can not break down this measure in an effort to get a larger appropriation for Philadelphia Harbor or other harbors, when the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War say it is not necessary at this time. We can not do that for New York or elsewhere unless it is necessary. As far as the New York proposition is concerned, it was simply changing the effect of a word, and I do not think it was very material. The Charleston proposition was recommended by the Assistant Secretary of War, and notwithstanding the Army engineers made a statement that it was sufficiently deep at the present time to carry ordinary vessels up to that navy yard. So far as the Key West proposition is concerned, we had no basis or recommendations from the War Department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question. If there is merit in a 40-foot proposition at Charleston to go to a navy yard, why can not the gentleman see merit in a 35-foot proposition at Philadelphia to go to a navy yard?

Mr. FREAR. I thank the gentleman for the inquiry. I took the floor when the Charleston project was being considered and read from the Army Engineers' Report that it was necessary to put that 40-foot channel in. A 30-foot channel was sufficient. I was opposed to that 40-foot project because I believed from their report it is not necessary at this time, but if it be a war measure I shall accept it, because the Secretary of War has so called it a war measure, but I concede to the gentleman that I can not see any reason for this 40-foot project for Charleston.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

St. Croix River, Wis. and Minn.; Minnesota River, Minn.; Lake Traverse, Minn. and S. Dak.; Red River of the North, Minn. and N. Dak.; Warroad Harbor and River, Zippel Bay, and Lake of the Woods, Minn.: For maintenance, $6,000.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I quite agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] when he says that Philadelphia and Baltimore will be put to great disadvantage, so far as the other large seaboard cities are concerned, when they have only 35 feet of water and the others have 40. Boston on high tide, or not quite high tide, will have 40 feet. New York has been provided with 40 feet, and the other day we voted her 40 feet through Hell Gate, to give entrance to Long Island Sound. Norfolk is provided 40 feet, and Charleston with 40 feet. Baltimore and Philadelphia, it seems to me, will not be touched by the large boats when they can go to ports where they have the deepest water. That fact will be advertised not only in this country but throughout the world, and every chart will note the fact. Baltimore Harbor has been gradually deepened to 35 feet. It has not been an expensive proposition. The total expenditures for the deepening of the Baltimore Channel to 35 feet, including the upkeep, has been about $9,200,000. Baltimore had 17 feet of water when the work started, and for $9,200,000 the Government has deepened it to 35 feet and kept it dredged and in shape, all for that entire sum. It costs only $40,000 or $45,000 a year to keep the entire channels to Baltimore dredged. That includes 11 miles in the Patapsco River and 4½ miles in Chesapeake Bay in what is called York Spit Channel. The channel there is 1,000 feet wide.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has introduced a bill for a 40-foot channel to Baltimore?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes; some time ago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much dredging would have to be done over the 35-foot area to obtain 40 feet?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Eleven miles in the Patapsco River and 4½ miles in Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that the Delaware River from Philadelphia to the sea would require probably 63 miles of dredging, so that that would be a much more difficult and prolonged operation.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes; but when we come to think of the millions of dollars we are expending for railroads and everything else in the country and consider what it would save to have these ports deepened to carry this traffic, I can not see that the expense of it is a matter of the most serious consideration.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to put one inquiry into his statement that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] would not permit me to put into his? Inasmuch as the port of Philadelphia in normal times produces about $21,000,000 of revenue, is it unreasonable that in more than a hundred years $23,000,000 or so should have been expended upon its improvement?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Oh, I do not think it is at all unreasonable. Almost every mile on your Delaware represents some great industry established there. I think the work ought to have been completed long ago. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] says that every community thinks that its project is the most important.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. WELLING. It was Mr. FREAR.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Perhaps I am wrong. It was the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] who said that. This question of harbor improvement is not a matter of mere local concern. Take the harbor of Baltimore, for instance, in which I am most deeply interested. That is the nearest seaboard harbor to the Central West, and when you deepen that harbor you benefit the great cities of the Central West, just as you do the locality of Baltimore. It is 200 miles closer to St. Louis than any other seaboard city, and the entire Central West can ship its products cheaper to Baltimore and send them to the ports of the world than it can to any other port by reason of its nearness to that section. It is extremely near to western Pennsylvania and western New York. Why, the city of Buffalo is 18 miles closer to Baltimore than to New York City, and so I say it is not merely a community question but it is a question which concerns the entire Nation, and upon that basis I have always voted for harbor improvements——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Now, I voted the other day to give New York 40 feet through Hell Gate, because New York is a great port. It drains an immense section of the country; it is the greatest port perhaps in the world, and it ought to have 40 feet through Hell Gate, and I voted for it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I desire to ask the gentleman if the possibility of getting a 40-foot channel at Baltimore on account of 40 feet at New York had anything to do with the gentleman's vote?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Not at all. Hope springs eternal in the human breast, and I have always hoped for 40 feet at Baltimore, and I believe Congress will eventually see the necessity of making these ports on the Atlantic seaboard, which are the gateways to the world, of sufficient depth to accommodate with perfect safety the largest vessel that comes to this country. I am glad to see New York have these 40-foot channels, and I want Boston to have them, and I want to see Norfolk a splendid port, and Charleston also; and I say, when you are expending money on those ports, you ought also see that the port of Baltimore, another gateway to the world, be deepened for the benefit of our commerce and that of the vast section of the country it serves.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman says this is an emergency measure?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I did not say that the matter of Baltimore was an emergency measure.

Mr. SNYDER. I was wondering whether the gentleman was figuring upon this being an emergency measure for this war or some other war?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I did not say it was an emergency measure. I say it is a matter of commerce, not a matter of war emergency. Let me say, however, that Hell Gate, N. Y.; Charleston, S. C.; and Norfolk, Va., none of them can be dredged within five years, and I pray the war will be over long before that.

Mr. SNYDER. Then the Baltimore proposition is not a war-emergency proposition pertaining to this war?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Of course it is not, and I have never contended it was, but I think it is absolutely necessary to be fair and just to all, and that we ought to have 40 feet.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The German submarine Deutschland came to the port of Baltimore?

Mr. LINTHICUM. It did.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it came in because Baltimore had deep water. Does not the gentleman think, therefore, that the port of Baltimore itself is a war measure and that the deepening of the channel is of war importance?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think, of course, that would be a means of defense, because I think if we had 40 feet we could protect it better and at the same time be of vast service to the country in shipping troops and war materials. Baltimore and its environs is a great beehive of war industries and troop training. In that respect a deeper channel is of inestimable benefit to the Nation in war emergency.

Now, in connection with defense, let me say that at the entrance of the Chesapeake Bay there is a great fort provided, and nothing, practically, has been done upon that work, and upon that depends the safety of the Capital of the United States, Baltimore, and Norfolk, and all those places along the bay, and I am not surprised that the channel at Philadelphia has not been completed, because work moves so slowly. Let us look upon these seaports as great assets of the Nation, not as local concerns. Let us be just and fair to all alike. No money can be better spent than in the improvement of our harbor facilities. The South American Republics realized this long ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words only. I have consumed very little of the valuable time of this committee, but before I conclude I desire to direct some remarks to those who habitually talk and do nothing but waste time.

There is no longer any doubt among all well-informed people of this country that the entrance of the United States into this great war was unavoidable. Every person who has kept up with the progress of the war knows that our great President exhausted every means known to diplomacy to keep us out of it. For nearly three years before war was declared he almost begged the German Kaiser to let our people alone and permit them to live in peace. He made it clear to the rulers of all belligerent nations that this country desired to remain at peace with them all. Time and again he implored the Imperial German Government to respect our rights upon the high seas and desist from destroying our commerce and firing upon our flag, but Germany would listen to none of these appeals, and slowly, but gradually, we were dragged into the most stupendous and horrible war in the history of the world.

At first there was some opposition to the plan adopted by Congress for raising an army, but after Congress overwhelmingly voted for the selective-draft law all are now agreed that it is the only fair and equitable way an army could be raised. There was some objections at first to the plan of enforcing this law, but these have been met and overcome, and so far as I can learn the law is giving general satisfaction.

It is the purpose of the Government to levy the burdens of this war as evenly as possible upon its people, who everywhere are beginning to realize that we are actually at war with the greatest military power in the world. They at last realize that great sacrifices must be made, not only in money but in lives. The giving of money is the least sacrifice that we can make. Most people thus far have shown a willingness to lend their money to the Government and to pay the taxes required of them for the purpose of raising revenue to carry on the war, but whether they do it willingly and unwillingly, the money must come.

Some in and out of Congress are constantly criticizing this department and that department of the Government for inefficiency, and suggesting this remedy and that for the evils complained of. There can be no objection to honest criticism—to criticism made in good faith—with a view to helping and improving the situation. That sort of criticism is to be welcomed at any and all times; but a nagging, fault-finding criticism, made for the purpose of embarrassing the administration in the prosecution of the war, is unpardonable and a little less than criminal. Yet we see it indulged in on this floor, and, judging from newspaper reports and from the speeches printed in the RECORD, it is constantly indulged in at the other end of the Capitol. This is no time for faultfinding and idle speculation. This is a most serious business we are engaged in. The final results of this most awful conflict will change the map of the world and will decide the destinies of millions of human beings yet unborn.

For the most part politics has had no part in these debates, but as election time approaches it is becoming more in evidence. A Member of this body is not expected to lay aside his political convictions because we are engaged in war, but personal preferment and selfish ambitions should be subordinated to the exigencies of war and every effort should be put forth by us all to unify and coordinate all the resources of the country for the purpose of winning the war. As the great battle rages in France the Premier of England is calling upon this Government to send more help and send it quickly. From now on we must rush our preparations and hurry to the front with all possible dispatch. The steel men must work faster; the carpenters should be kept busy; munitions workers ought to work overtime; airplane manufacturers must work night and day. Congress should waste no time; every line of red tape should be cut; and every man, woman, and child living under the protection of the Stars and Stripes should do his whole part of the great task before us—the overwhelming defeat of the German Army and the crushing of the Kaiser.

From the very beginning of this war some people realized that a tremendous task confronted this Nation, but by far the larger portion of our population did not comprehend the magnitude of the undertaking. Day by day and week by week it has dawned upon us, and there are now but few who realize that our ultimate destiny for weal or woe depends upon the fortunes of the war we are waging for liberty, justice, and freedom of mankind. We have staked all upon the issue. The result of this war will decide whether we shall forever remain a free people or become the subjects of a foreign ruler.

It is true, money, munition, and men have been supplied without stint by this Nation. Every demand upon Congress by the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy has been met, not as promptly in some instances as should have been done, perhaps, but the people's representatives have not hesitated to give to the President ample authority and all the means necessary for prosecuting the war, and the people themselves will indorse what has been done. They are willing to make the necessary sacrifices. They will give more money and more men, but they want results. Delays will not longer be tolerated; the useless consumption of time is becoming tiresome. Only last Saturday the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the able chairman of the Appropriation Committee, said what we must do is to get down to business and quit wasting time. The country is impatient, it wants less talk and more action in Congress. The distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], chairman of the Committee on Rules, recently warned the House that unless more work and less talk was done a special rule would be brought in to cut off debate. I for one will welcome such a rule, and the majority will welcome it and vote for it. The time is wasted by the few who constantly occupy the floor. By an examination of the daily record of this House it can be readily seen that two or three dozen Members are responsible for the wasting of time the distinguished gentlemen from Kentucky and Tennessee referred to in their recent remarks.

Our boys are going to the front in large numbers in answer to their country's call, and the fathers and mothers of these noble boys demand that we waste not a minute of the time that is so precious when the lives of their boys are being offered up for the perpetuity of our Government and for the safety and security of those who remain at home. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Missouri River: For maintenance and continuing improvement with a view to securing a permanent 6-foot channel between Kansas City, Kans., from the upper end of Quindaro Bend, and the mouth of the river, $500,000.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is one item which should be stricken from this bill. I would like to compare the Missouri River with the Illinois River, both being about the same size. Two large cities are located on the Missouri River—Kansas City and St. Louis—whereas the Illinois River has St. Louis and Peoria. Kansas City has three times the population as Peoria. There has been expended on the Missouri River about $22,000,000 and on the Illinois River less than $2,500,000, yet the Illinois River carries in one year about nine or ten times the amount of freight as is carried on the Missouri River. No improvements are needed on the Illinois River at this time, and perhaps for some time to come; and if the Government would destroy the three dams and locks—the one at Kampsville, the one at La Grange, and the other at Copperas Creek—it will be a saving of about $20,000 a year. On the Missouri River, as I say, the Government has expended $22,000,000, or near that amount, and we are continually appropriating every year. I think we should quit appropriating money for the Missouri River, particularly at this time, as it is not a war necessity and it is not a good business proposition, and the improvements you make there this year may be of no value the following year, owing to frequent changes of the channel in the river. Not a year passes but what some place in the stream of the channel changes. Every dollar you expend on that river is money absolutely frittered away. These three objections should be sufficient to strike this item out of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ohio River: Continuing improvement by the construction of locks and dams with a view to securing a navigable depth of 9 feet, $5,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to modify the project for the improvement of the Ohio River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1695, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby requested to investigate and submit to Congress on or before the first Monday in December, 1918, a report showing (a) the status of water terminals at cities and towns along the Ohio River between Pittsburgh and Cairo, inclusive, and whether owned by municipalities or some other public agency, and whether the same are satisfactory as to location, construction, and equipment; (b) the names of cities and towns where an interchange of traffic exists between the water transportation lines and the railroads; (c) a list of the water transportation lines existing and proposed on the Ohio River with a description of the number and type of boats in operation and under construction or to be constructed and as to whether the same are appropriate and suitable for the traffic; (d) the names of cities and towns where no adequate public terminals exist, together with a statement of any prospective plans for water terminals and the status of same; (e) any recommendation for the development of transportation on such river.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a point of order against the proviso of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The point of order is this: In 1910, I think it was, Congress adopted a project for the improvement of the Ohio River by building locks and dams from Pittsburgh to Cairo, Ill. It was proposed to construct those locks and dams and finish the canalization of the Ohio in a period of 12 years. Now, the proviso to this section authorizes the Secretary of War to modify the original project of improving the Ohio River, which I do not think can be done upon an appropriation bill. It is new legislation changing the whole project of the Ohio River, and for that reason I do not think it is in order on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair has had occasion to say heretofore a river and harbor appropriation bill is not one of those general appropriation bills to which restrictions as to legislation apply.

That has been held in numerous cases. The Chair undertook to recite a few of those cases in a ruling that was made at the beginning of the session to-day. Therefore the Chair thinks that the proviso is in order, notwithstanding the fact that it is legislation, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Therefore I move to strike out the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. BARKLEY: Page 11, lines 1 to 5, inclusive, strike out the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to modify the project for the improvement of the Ohio River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1695, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, in the year 1910 Congress pledged itself to the canalization of the Ohio River, with a view to obtaining a 9-foot channel for the benefit of navigation during the entire year.

At the time this project was begun Senator Burton, of Ohio, was chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, and the project contemplated the construction of 52 locks and dams between the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Cairo, Ill. Ever since this project was begun money has been appropriated in the neighborhood of $500,000,000 and $600,000,000 and $700,000,000 a year for the purpose of carrying on the work. The War Department has gotten down to Lock and Dam No. 48, which is just below Henderson, Ky. After having completed the locks and dams, at least to such an extent as to insure navigation in the neighborhood of Pittsburgh and Cincinnati and Louisville and other large cities along the Ohio River, the project now is to eliminate the six locks and dams in the lower part of the Ohio, and the report of the Board of Engineers on the Ohio River puts it up to the Secretary of War to determine whether, instead of building these last six locks and dams to insure 9 feet of navigable water during the entire year, they will engage in channel-dredging work.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, not only did the Congress of the United States pledge to the people of the Ohio Valley to complete that canalization by the year 1920, but the project also took into consideration the canalization of the Cumberland River. Logically, the project to canalize the Cumberland River contemplates seven locks, A, B, C, D, E, F, and G, from Nashville, Tenn., to the mouth of the Cumberland River at Smithland, Ky.

Some few years ago the engineering corps decided that, because of the fact that one of these locks and dams on the Ohio River—I believe No. 52—was to be constructed just below the mouth of the Cumberland River, it would be able to back up water of the Cumberland River as far as Lock G, and now the Cumberland River project contemplates, instead of six locks and dams, only five locks and dams, and F is the last one they expect to build. That was based on the completion of the project for the canalization of the Ohio from the harbor of Pittsburgh to the mouth of the Ohio River at Cairo.

Now, if this project is modified, as this bill authorizes the Secretary of War to modify it, by the elimination of these six locks and dams, it means that after having gone to the expense of creating a 9-foot channel below Henderson, Ky., for the rest of that river, some hundreds of miles to its mouth, there will be no lock or dam, no channel of 9 feet, no yearly navigation of 9 feet, because it is impossible, as I believe, for the War Department to dig and dredge around in the Ohio River to get an open channel of 9 feet throughout that interval of 150 miles.

Moreover, in addition to that, after the Government has purchased sites for every one of these locks and dams, if these are to be eliminated, after constructing a warehouse in the city of Paducah, Ky., where they will store materials and tools for use along the entire river, now they propose to abandon all these six locks and dams because somebody in the Ohio Valley has deemed it better to dredge the Ohio River instead of building these six locks and dams; and if that is true as to the last 150 miles of the river, why is it not equally true of the rest of the river? If they could dredge for 9 feet throughout that last stretch of 150 miles of river, they could also do it in the rest of the river.

I think it is not keeping good faith with Congress and with the cities on the lower Ohio River—Cairo and Hickman and Metropolis and Paducah, Ky., and other places on the Ohio River near the mouth of the Cumberland and Tennessee River, where there is a possibility of greater commerce in the future than on any other inland river almost anywhere in the United States.

It seems this proviso ought not to be contained in this bill. This is a new proposition. Heretofore we have gone on and appropriated this money. Steamboat men along the Ohio River have hoped for years that these locks and dams would be completed, and now, without giving them an opportunity to appear before the Board of Engineers, or to appear before the committees of Congress, six of these locks and dams are to be eliminated from this project, and they will receive no benefit from the canalization of the river.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have some information as to the comparative cost of the two methods. Would the gentleman explain what would be the difference in cost between dredging the channel along the distance he describes and building the locks? And if the locks are built, would it be necessary to dredge between the locks? What would be the annual average expense for that purpose after the locks are constructed?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not prepared to give the gentleman a comparison between the cost of dredging and the cost of building the locks, because I have no figures upon the dredging, for the reason that it has never been engaged in to any extent or degree in the lower Ohio.

But, aside from the cost of the dredging or the cost of the locks and dams, during more than half of the year the Ohio River down below Lock 48 is not navigable for steamboats of any size; and one of the reasons why its commerce has been driven from the lower Ohio is because men are not willing to invest their money in an enterprise that can operate only six months in the year.

Not only that, but during the winter season when the water is high bars of sand accumulate in the channel of the river, because there is no defined channel for water that is sufficiently rapid in its flow to wash these bars of sand out of the way; and after the locks and dams are completed and the 9-foot channel is completed I do not believe it will be necessary to do any dredging, practically, except possibly a little here and there, just as is done in any other river that is locked and dammed.

Mr. MADDEN. Then the gentleman's contention is that it will not be possible to maintain the channel unless we build the locks?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not believe it can be successfully maintained unless these locks and dams are completed; and every city on the Ohio River has prepared itself and looks forward to the completing of these locks and dams, and capital is waiting for the investment in boats because of the fact that they have been promised the building of this 9-foot channel.

The Cumberland River will be navigable from Paducah to Nashville after the locks are completed, and upon the completion of the system of locks and dams on the Cumberland River above Nashville it will open up a great coal field, a great agricultural field, and a great lumber field, and will make navigable the Cumberland and Ohio Rivers out to the Mississippi River and down to St. Louis.

Mr. MADDEN. How much money has been expended on the Cumberland River so far?

Mr. BARKLEY. The last appropriation was $243,000, and that was sufficient to carry on the work on locks D, E, and F during the present year, and, according to the engineers, during the next fiscal year. In other words, the last appropriation is sufficient to carry on continuous work on these last three locks, D, E, and F, for the next fiscal year. Therefore, no appropriation is contained in this bill for work during the next fiscal year.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman just one further question.

Mr. BARKLEY. The clerk of the committee tells me that the total for the Cumberland River is $5,300,000.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to ask whether the improvement of the Cumberland River and the construction of locks, which the gentleman has so well described in connection with that improvement, had in contemplation the improvement of the Ohio River as a canalized waterway?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Would it be possible to complete the Cumberland River improvement if we abandoned the canalized Ohio?

Mr. BARKLEY. It will not. As I said in the beginning, the site for lock 52, just below the mouth of the Cumberland River in the Ohio, has already been purchased by the Government, and the reason why they eliminated the last lock in the Cumberland project is because the lock below the mouth of the Cumberland River in the Ohio, lock 52, was intended to affect not only the Ohio River but also the Cumberland River back up to the lock lettered F. Unless this lower Ohio improvement is completed, and these locks are built, then the Cumberland River will not be navigable the year round, according to the original project. It confuses and disrupts the whole plans of the lower Ohio River Valley, the Tennessee Valley, and the Cumberland Valley to eliminate these six locks and dams which are contemplated in this bill, and I hope the amendment to strike out this provision will be voted down, in order to keep faith with these people who have looked forward to the completion of the Ohio River project.

Mr. FREAR. I rise in opposition to the motion, and more particularly to discuss briefly some statements made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who has just taken his seat. He states that the cities along the river have been preparing themselves for this improvement. I wonder if he means that seriously, because that is a statement made upon the floor of the House which means what it says, I take it. I desire to read into the RECORD the official report, to show what preparation the cities along the Ohio River have made after an appropriation of $59,000,000 for the improvement of that river.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. No; not until I state this. The gentleman says that Congress has pledged itself to go on with this improvement. Let us see. After we have appropriated $59,000,000 for the Ohio River, as we have, what do we find? Maj. John Stewart, Army engineer, says in his report dated December 22, 1917:

> There are no municipal water terminals along the Ohio River. All terminal facilities are privately owned and are inadequate to properly provide for water transportation of any magnitude and are not constructed or equipped for joint rail and water transportation.

Again, he says:

> The towns and cities have sold the privileges of their water gates for a very low rental—some for nothing. In a number of cases the business of the water carrier has been shut off by the municipalities granting unrestricted franchises to the railroads to the right of way along the river front.

And we have gone along, year after year, appropriating millions of dollars for that river, and not a single waterway terminal has been put in, notwithstanding the gentleman says—and I took down his words here—"every city has been preparing itself." You have not prepared a single terminal, according to the statement of the Army engineer who makes that report.

Now, just a word on the other. I do not want to take up the time of the committee unnecessarily.

This proposition is left to the Secretary of War:

> The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to modify the project for the improvement of the Ohio River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1695, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session.

I do not believe the Secretary of War will arbitrarily take any action that will not be fair and just to the people of Kentucky, of whom the gentleman has just spoken. I am sure that he would not. But if all the money we have been expending on the river has not brought any return, if they can see that the modifications are better for the people at large than for the people on the Ohio River who have not taken advantage of conditions—if he can see that it is proper and better for the public at large—why should not the administration as it stands to-day have the right to consider the question of modifying this improvement? Surely all parties will be heard before the War Department and before the Board of Engineers. I can not see any harm; and if it is going to be economy for the Government and it will be of advantage to the public, I can not see any question but that it is the proper course to pursue.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to disabuse the gentleman's mind of the impression that I intended to convey the thought that the cities on the lower Ohio had built any terminals. I was speaking of those below Lock 48. There is no use of building terminals until there is navigation, but they are preparing themselves commercially for the increased traffic.

Mr. FREAR. Not along the Ohio from the head to the foot, according to the report of the engineers, has a single municipal terminal been provided for. He says that the cities have sold their rights along the river. That is the point I am making.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not necessary for the city to own terminals in order to have commerce.

Mr. FREAR. No terminals to take care of such commerce as you have.

Mr. BARKLEY. The reason is that we can not have the commerce until we have the improvements.

Mr. FREAR. The Mississippi River runs from 8 to 9 feet in depth from St. Louis to New Orleans, but we have not the traffic. Why? Because conditions do not invite it. The commerce does not go on the river. It has lost 95 per cent of what was there before the improvements were begun.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the gentleman is not quite correct. In regard to Cincinnati, the city owns a considerable portion of the water front.

Mr. FREAR. They may own the water front; they own the street fronts; but they have no improvements that reach down to the water's edge.

Mr. LONGWORTH. They have docks down there and barges.

Mr. FREAR. But they are privately owned.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; the city owns the river frontage.

Mr. FREAR. The engineers' report speaks for itself.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman will yield, the city of Paducah, with 32,000 inhabitants, owns the entire water front and wharfage on the Ohio River at that place, which does accommodate traffic, not only of the Ohio but of the Mississippi, Cumberland, and Tennessee, and when the navigation is completed they will have ample commerce.

Mr. FREAR. Again I say the Engineers' official report is in evidence, and it is clear as to conditions on a river where over $50,000,000 has been expended by the Government.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky and also at this time I wish to put on record my dissent from the report of the Army engineers as to the terminals along the Ohio. I think in most places there have been sufficient terminals for the traffic that exists on the Ohio River. The great traffic on the Ohio River, the large tonnage, is coal, and it can only be handled, in the main, by private-owned terminal facilities. That is, you dump it from the mine tipples into the barges in the river. Of course, they are privately owned. Who would develop a coal mine and want the public to run into their tipple. They must necessarily be privately owned. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I have no doubt the greater part of the Lake tonnage—iron ore and coal—is handled by private-owned terminals. I believe that most of the coal at Toledo is loaded and iron ore unloaded from barges by private-owned terminals. I agree that they ought to keep pace with the progress of improvement on the river, and wherever traffic or prospective traffic justifies it public terminals should be constructed. As to the recommendation of the Rivers and Harbors Committee having in view a modification of the Ohio River project, I want to assure the gentleman from Kentucky that I do not think the Army engineers want to do anything injurious to the people living on the lower part of the Ohio River. I live on the upper part and we want 9 feet of water at the mouth of the river. If the engineers can be allowed to change the method they may procure 9 feet without the necessity of spending eight or ten million dollars on expensive locks and dams. Recollect that this is a mere try-out proposition. The construction of the dams on the lower Ohio are held in abeyance while they are constructing the dams above Cincinnati, and if they find by the dredging of the river below dam 48 for the next three or four years that they can procure 9 feet depth and maintain it by dredging cheaper than you can maintain it by locks and dams, and they can get 9 feet of water without locks and dams, you will have a channel unobstructed. Recollect that locks and dams impede to some extent navigation. I would prefer that the Ohio had 9 feet of water from my city, Gallipolis, to Pittsburgh without a lock or dam in it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman, under the language of this proviso, after the Secretary of War has authorized a modification of the original project, how is he going to remodify it so as to complete the locks and dams?

Mr. SWITZER. He is directed to merely hold the matter in abeyance until they try out this proposition of dredging there, and if they can not procure 9 feet in that way necessarily they will go on and construct the dams. Originally there were to be 54 dams, but one has already been eliminated and nobody has objected. If they can eliminate 10 or 12, they may still give the people the original proposition of 10 feet of water.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I was wondering whether the proviso means what the gentleman says. It provides—that the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to modify the project for the improvement of the Ohio River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1695, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session.

That gives him absolute power to do the thing, does it not?

Mr. SWITZER. No; it is according to that report, is it not?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. That report provides for the elimination of all locks below Lock 48. This is what he says:

In view of the possibility that the project depth below this lock [Lock 48] may be made available by dredging at reasonable cost the Ohio River Board recommends that work on the project below this lock be held in abeyance for the present.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The iniquity of the language used, if I may be permitted to so express myself, in the rivers and harbors bills is that they all refer one back to a document that nobody reads. The law itself ought to state the facts; that is, it ought to state what is intended to be done. I am afraid that the language employed here in this proviso is a little too broad.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the language of the proviso is broader than the language in the document.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The canalization of the Ohio when completed we think will produce more commerce.

Mr. SWITZER. We hope so; yes.

Mr. FESS. Every time that there is any objection made to it, it is upon the ground that we have not the commerce.

Mr. SWITZER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. If you change the plan, how much time is going to be required and how much interruption in getting the river in shape so that it can be used?

Mr. SWITZER. If the proposed dredging method appears to be successful, the river, of course, will be put in condition from the head to the mouth; that is, there will be secured a 9-foot channel from the head of the river to the mouth, within five or six or seven years sooner than it will be if we have to construct those locks and dams on the lower part of the river. It is going to take three or four or five years to construct some of those dams.

Mr. DIXON. The interpretation of the gentleman from Ohio of this provision is that it is simply to give them an opportunity to test the question as to whether it can be dredged successfully.

Mr. SWITZER. Yes; and I do not want them to have any more authority than that. If we are giving them too much authority, I want to modify it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWITZER. I will say this to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], that I do not want anything in the bill that at this time can be construed as a provision that we have already decided to eliminate those locks and dams. If it does anything more than we think it does, I would like to have it modified.

Mr. BARKLEY. The report of the engineers simply suggests that they go ahead with channel work for the next few seasons, to determine whether it can be done successfully; but the bill authorizes the Secretary of War to modify the project.

Mr. SWITZER. If I could have the attention of the chairman of the committee and suggest that if this language is likely to be so construed, that we find at this time the necessity for modifying the project, and that we propose to eliminate these dams, I shall not favor it.

Mr. SMALL. There is not the slightest danger of the language being construed by the Chief Engineer as modifying the project, other than the recommendation.

Mr. SWITZER. What objection would there be to changing the language somewhat? Why not say that it is modified according to this report?

Mr. SMALL. We have already said that. The language is this:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to modify the project for the improvement of the Ohio River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1695, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session.

Mr. SWITZER. Why not say that the construction of these dams be held in abeyance until they try out this proposition?

Mr. BARKLEY. They have already been held in abeyance, and they can go and do channel work without putting anything in the bill at all. It is not necessary to authorize the War Department to do channel work. Why can not this proviso be left out until they determine whether they can do channel work successfully?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say, with all due respect, that the amendment to strike out here is without the slightest merit. The report is known as House Document No. 1695, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, submitted to Congress December 7, 1916. This report, which we are adopting by this proviso in the bill, simply provides for three modifications, first, that movable dams 1 and 2 have substituted for them one fixed dam, located at the head of the river, near Pittsburgh; that the Secretary of War be authorized to substitute fixed dams for movable dams in the river wherever it may appear to be best for the navigation of the river; and, third, that he be authorized to substitute open-river improvement for movable dams below Lock and Dam No. 48, if that should appear to be advantageous. What the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] objects to is that last recommendation. The report says that Lock and Dam No. 48 is the lowermost lock on which construction has been begun, and I may add, by way of parenthesis, that Dam 48 is 804⅕ miles below Pittsburgh, 164 miles from the mouth, and 6 miles below Henderson, Ky. That will give information as to the relative location of Dam 48. I quote from the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to whom this matter was referred:

4. Lock and Dam No. 48, 804.1 miles below Pittsburgh, is the lowermost one upon which construction has begun. Consideration is given by the Ohio River Board to the question of maintaining the desired channel depth below this dam by dredging instead of by the completion of the slackwater system. Experience indicates that the estimates for the locks and dams on the lower river are too low; also that the unit cost of dredging is higher than on the Mississippi River and that apparently there is not a sufficient flow of water in the Ohio at its lowest stage between No. 48 and the mouth of the Tennessee River to maintain a dredged channel of project depth. Below this tributary conditions are more favorable for maintaining an open channel, and it appears probable that the 9-foot depth can be successfully and economically maintained by dredging below the mouth of the Tennessee. Whether dredging or locks and dams will be the better between No. 48 and the mouth of the Tennessee is a question which can be determined only by further experience, and it is proposed by the Ohio River Board to conduct such dredging operations below No. 48 during the next few seasons as will permit a determination of this question, the work to be carried on under the existing project for open-channel improvement.

5. In conclusion, the Ohio River Board recommends:

"(a) That the Secretary of War be given authority, if the same is not already possessed, to cause fixed dams to be built in the Ohio River wherever such fixed dams would be more advantageous than movable dams, and that such authority be secured by the first bill in Congress to which its enactment would be germane.

"(b) That a fixed dam at or near Emsworth, Pa., be built at an early date to take the place of existing Dams 1 and 2.

"(c) That the question of number and location of other fixed dams be left open at present pending information gained by experience with the first fixed dam.

"(d) That the question of the construction of dams below No. 48 or the maintenance of the channel in this part of the river by dredging be held in abeyance and allowed to await decision from the data obtained by the time that the matter of construction of these dams in serial order would arise."

6. The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors is in general accord with the views of the Ohio River Board. It therefore recommends the following modifications of the existing project for the improvement of Ohio River; that a fixed dam be authorized at or near Emsworth, Pa., in place of the existing movable Dams Nos. 1 and 2; that the Secretary of War be given authority to substitute fixed for movable dams wherever in his opinion they may be desirable and to substitute open-river improvement for movable dams below No. 48 should this appear to be advantageous.

The final report or conclusion of the Chief of Engineers is always controlling. In this report the Chief of Engineers concurred with both the Ohio River Board and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. I now insert the report of the Chief of Engineers in full:

2. The existing project for the slackwater improvement of the Ohio River, adopted by the river and harbor act of June 25, 1910, contemplates the improvement of the entire river to a depth of 9 feet by the construction of 54 locks and movable dams and the widening of the Louisville & Portland Canal, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 492, Sixtieth Congress, first session, or such modification thereof as in the discretion of the Secretary of War may be advisable. Under the authority granted the Secretary of War, the project has been modified to provide for the widening of the Louisville & Portland Canal and Lock from 170 feet to 200 feet and from 85 feet to 110 feet, respectively, and for the omission of Lock and Dam No. 42, reducing the total number to 53. It has been found that in the upper river, where the run-off is more rapid than below, fixed dams would have some important advantages over movable dams, particularly in maintaining permanent pools in which tows may be made up conveniently and in affording better conditions for the establishment of industrial plants along the banks. Dams Nos. 1 and 2 were constructed many years ago and were originally designed for a depth of 6 feet, being subsequently modified for a depth of 9 feet. They are now in poor condition and will require reconstruction in the near future. In the opinion of the Ohio River Board it is advisable to substitute for these two dams one fixed dam located at or near Emsworth, and it recommends that the Secretary of War be given authority, if the same is not already possessed, to cause fixed dams to be built on the Ohio River wherever such fixed dams would be more advantageous than movable dams. Lock No. 48 is the lowermost lock on which construction has been begun. In view of the possibility that the project depth below this lock may be made available by dredging at reasonable cost, the Ohio River Board recommends that work under the project below this lock be held in abeyance for the present. The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors is in general accord with the views of the Ohio River Board.

3. After due consideration of the above-mentioned reports, I concur in general with the views of the Ohio River Board and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and therefore recommend legislation authorizing the construction of a fixed dam at or near Emsworth, Pa., in place of the existing movable Dams Nos. 1 and 2, and authoizing the Secretary of War to substitute fixed for movable dams wherever in his opinion they may be desirable, and to substitute open river improvement for movable dams below No. 48, if this should appear to be advantageous.

W. M. BLACK,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

These six locks and dams below Lock No. 48 will cost at a minimum $12,000,000, and, judging from later estimates, the cost of those six locks and dams will, in all probability, largely exceed the sum of $12,000,000. Now, the only effect of adopting this report is to authorize the Chief of Engineers to make an experiment with open-channel work to see if the project depth of 9 feet can be maintained without locks and dams, and if it can be maintained, who would wish to involve the Government in an expensive construction of locks and dams?

Mr. MADDEN. I think it ought to be maintained if it can.

Mr. SMALL. And if it can not be maintained by open-channel work, of course——

Mr. MADDEN. Can not there be some way of expressing it in words in the bill which will make certain that it is not intended to do more than experiment, as it were, and not give the Secretary of War the power to say later on that it meant something quite different?

Mr. SMALL. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the gentleman. There is no difference as to the purpose we have in view. I was simply contending that by the uniform method of construing reports, when they are referred to or when an authorization is made in accordance with a certain report, is to construe it as if the recommedations of the Chief of Engineers was a part of the act itself; and when, therefore, it is made a part of the act, it appears entirely to be a matter of experiment to determine whether the 9 feet can be maintained. I do not wish to be considered as obstinate, and if the gentleman from New York can suggest anything to carry out the purpose of the bill, I would be very glad to hear it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Let me suggest that you strike out the word "modify" and insert in place thereof the following: "hold in abeyance for the present"; and, after the word "river," insert "while experimenting with open-channel work to gain the desired depth of 9 feet instead of lock construction." That is what the committee is trying to do, and I think that expresses it in very clear language.

Mr. BARKLEY. That might include all locks and dams, and not below No. 48.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Well, say project for the improvement of the Ohio River below Lock 48——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will not the gentleman pass this by for the present time?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not like the words "held in abeyance"——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman to pass it over and see if we can agree on something. If we can not, of course we will accept what the committee has.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, in deference to the request of the gentleman from Illinois, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph for the Ohio River be passed over temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the paragraph under consideration——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does that mean the paragraph?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Just this proviso——

Mr. WALSH. You can not pass the proviso; you have to include the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the request of the gentleman applied to the entire paragraph?

Mr. SMALL. The entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment and ask its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, after line 25, insert as a new paragraph the following: "Marais des Cygnes River, Kans.: For improving and maintaining banks, $25,000."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. I will reserve it if the gentleman wants to say something.

Mr. LITTLE. I would rather have it disposed of if the point of order be valid. What is the point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. The amendment provides for preserving the banks of the river, and not for navigation.

Mr. LITTLE. It does not do that—does not say it is not to aid navigation.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood the amendment to say that. Will the Clerk again report the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment, without objection.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. SMALL. I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois reserve the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I would rather have it passed on, as I do not care to take up the time of the committee unless it is in order, and that is what I want to find out. If it is in order, I shall urgently request the House to include it in the bill, as it is a just and useful measure.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to be heard?

Mr. LITTLE. I do not see anything in the amendment that would sustain a point of order. The gentleman tells us that there are certain conditions about it, but that is no part of the amendment.

Mr. SMALL. I assume the gentleman makes the point of order because it does not involve an improvement of a river.

Mr. FOSTER. I do. It is not a matter of navigation. While the work may be very beneficial and probably ought to be done, yet there are thousands of streams in the United States which come under that same head.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very clear to the Chair that if the amendment provides for the improvement of the river it might possibly be in order, but the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas provides for improving and maintaining the banks of the river to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. LITTLE. But what I called to the attention of the Chair is the fact that it does not say that it is not done for the purpose of navigation. The improvement of the bank might be for purposes of navigation.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair can readily see how a bank could be improved and at the same time it would be no improvement of the river.

Mr. LITTLE. I do not see how you can improve the bank without improving the navigation of the river, if it had any navigation.

The CHAIRMAN. Not necessarily.

Mr. LITTLE. As a matter of fact, as the gentleman suggested, it is a very desirable thing to have done, and it should have been done a long time ago. We have been trying to find a place to work it in. If it is in order, I would like to have it go in. Every year vast crop losses occur there, and the crops saved any year would pay for the improvements, I should say. The Flood Control Committee has not had a meeting this Congress and does not intend to expend any money on flood control during the war. Here appears to be our only chance to get it in.

The CHAIRMAN. In its present form the Chair thinks it is not in order, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Allegheny River, Pa.: For maintenance by open-channel work, $5,000; continuing improvement by construction of locks and dams, $500,000; in all, $505,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the item as read by the Clerk is "For maintenance by open-channel work, $5,000; continuing improvement by construction of locks and dams, $5,000." The bill which I have on the second item says "$500,000." I assume that it may have been a misprint.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct. It is stated correctly in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. May I be permitted to ask the chairman of the committee if this river is at all affected with the plague of water hyacinths?

Mr. SMALL. I am happy to report that the water hyacinth does not thrive on the Allegheny.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think it is a matter of congratulation that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania who has championed so well the cause of river and harbor improvement for a great many years has not had to combat this frightful evil in his own great State, and that no part of this $505,000 carried in this item is going to be used in exterminating that somewhat troublesome weed.

I am very sorry that I was called out of the Chamber when the two items for the eradication of this weed in the present bill were up for discussion, because I desired to ask some questions with reference to the sum of $416 that had been received from the sales. I wondered whether they were selling the blooms as flowers for weddings and floral decorations, or whether there were any chemical properties about the weed which make it valuable for fertilizer.

I understand that another great committee of this House some few years ago had submitted to it a project that the Government buy a troop of hippopotami and turn them loose in those rivers in Alabama and Louisiana, and they were given assurance that these animals would clean the rivers of that weed. I notice, in referring to the report of the engineers, that they are unable to continue the use of arsenic in spraying these plants because the cattle getting into the rivers to drink or feed are poisoned. I wondered, it having been intimated and insinuated, not in the Official Bulletin, but in other official publications, I think, that this was to be a rather poor year for circuses in view of the Government controlling the railroads, whether or not the distinguished chairman of the committee might not prevail upon the owners of some of these beasts to permit them to try browsing about in these rivers in these two sections. [Laughter.] Their upkeep, I assume, would be but slight, and I doubt not but that they could be kept within a very restricted area because of the profusion of the water hyacinths.

I observe that we have expended $170,000 in one State in seeking to eradicate this weed, and in another State I think nearly $400,000. The activities in seeking to wipe it out lasted in one year from the 7th of July to the 21st of August, and during that time I assume that the great water commerce in that vicinity was tied up along the banks while the work of extermination by log beams and dredges was going on.

It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman—and I intended to offer a proviso to this paragraph if the Allegheny River and the dwellers along its beautiful bank were unfortunate enough to be troubled by this weed—that the local authorities ought to contribute to work such as that; that when commerce is in such a condition that the water hyacinth, growing in profusion, can obstruct it, it is not of such an interstate character that we ought to spend money year after year, running up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, in seeking to exterminate it.

With these few uninteresting observations I will now ask the chairman of the committee if he can tell me for what the $416 was received?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. Will not the gentleman let the chairman of the committee answer my question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Massachusetts has had the floor for full five minutes without any one assuming to dispute with him what he has said.

Mr. WALSH. I know that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania can answer it, but I would prefer to have the answer of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SMALL. I do not understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to attempt to quote from any report of the Chief of Engineers any statement to the effect that $416 had been received from the sale of water hyacinths. The probability is that it was the sale of some discarded material, which is frequently sold.

While the gentleman is looking for his data I may say that my regard for his intelligence forbids my accepting his remarks as being made seriously. My regard for him would rather induce me to say that he is speaking facetiously, and if he is speaking facetiously I beg to remind him that some of his distinguished predecessors in past Congresses, when river and harbor bills were under consideration, have played the rôle of ridicule and irony and facetiousness with much greater success than has the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Laughter.] I would advise him to read up the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in order that he may brush up and amend his facetious remarks about the water hyacinth and improve them, so that he may have them ready to expend upon a gaping and waiting House at the next regular session of Congress when the river and harbor bill is under consideration. We shall be distinctly disappointed if he does not, and if he should not be inclined to do so, that he will find some other Member who will assume the rôle. The consideration of no river and harbor bill would be complete without some merriment over the water hyacinth.

It would be distinctly disappointing to have a hiatus at the next session when the water hyacinth shall not be paraded before the House in all its odoriferousness and glory. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, of course I would not attempt to be facetious in the absence of a quorum, and I did not make the point of order that there was no quorum present. But I would like to state to the gentleman that the report of the Board of Engineers discloses——

Mr. SMALL. What page is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. WALSH. On page 176, in connection with the Withlacoochee River—that the total expenditure, not including receipts from sales, amounted to $416. Now, on page 946 we are told——

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will not. We are told that receipts from sales amounted to $1,823. My question was prompted by the desire to ascertain seriously if this weed, or lily, or root, or herb, had any chemical properties which might make it valuable as a fertilizer. As the gentleman well knows, along the rock-bound coast of New England there is gathered seaweed, kelp, and rockweed, which is valuable for its fertilizing qualities, and I wondered whether or not this water hyacinth contained any substances——

Mr. FOSTER. Of medicinal value.

Mr. WALSH. Potash, or ammonia, or anything of that sort, that might make it useful for fertilizer.

Mr. SMALL. I have no information on that phase of the hyacinth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did the gentleman from North Carolina speak in his own time or mine?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania yielded to him.

Mr. SMALL. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have five minutes, and after the gentleman concludes it is my purpose to move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeding for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would not have risen except that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], in the kindliness of his soul, made special reference to me during his inquiry about the water hyacinth. If I recall his remarks correctly, he inquired whether the water hyacinth grew in the Allegheny River in western Pennsylvania. I can say to the gentleman emphatically and positively that the water hyacinth does not grow in the Allegheny River. If the gentleman from Massachusetts would travel about the country a little, he would learn something about rivers and harbors; some things, I would say in all kindness, that he does not now seem to know. The water hyacinth is indigenous to certain Southern States. That may account for the fact that the gentleman from Massachusetts, who is an arboreal artist in other respects, may not understand the situation. The water hyacinth grows in the rivers and streams of Florida and along the Gulf coast over to Louisiana. It is of perennial growth. It is just as necessary to make appropriation and provision for its removal as it is to make provision for the maintenance of a channel concerning which I recall the gentleman from Massachusetts inquired during one of the earlier days of the consideration of this bill. Gentlemen have asked about the necessity for appropriations to maintain a channel, and have asked it just as ingenuously as the gentleman from Massachusetts asked this question about the water hyacinth. The water flows up and down a tidal stream, back and forth, and the water flows in from tributary streams, and sometimes a tributary stream carries silt, dirt, and mud along with it, and that settles in the main channel. Sometimes it carries logs and timber and brush, particularly in times of freshet, and if they settle they help to fill up the channel for which appropriations were made in preceding years. It is just as important that a channel should be swept and kept in order from year to year as it is that a good housewife should take her broom and remove the dust from the floor and the cobwebs from the wall every day. It is just as natural, just as proper, and just as necessary if the channel is to be kept clean and kept serviceable. It is one of the conditions that confronts all the waterways of the country.

Now, the growth of the water hyacinth in its particular locality must be given the same consideration that the maintenance of a channel must be given elsewhere. The trouble with the water hyacinth is that it grows on the top of the water. It does not grow out of the soil. And it packs together until in some streams it is so thick and becomes so firm that it would almost bear the weight of a man crossing over. Of course such a mass of matter on the top of a stream will impede navigation, and the purpose of these small appropriations from year to year is to cut through this covering and to prevent this great mass of sea weed, or hyacinth, as it is called, from floating into the navigable portions of the streams where it endangers navigation.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] asks his questions somewhat facetiously, I am sure; but with regard to the utilization of the hyacinth I assure him that efforts are being made to grind it into fertilizer. Experiments are being made, I am informed, and to a certain extent they are successful. That answers that question. As to the propriety of the appropriations to remove the water hyacinth the gentleman should be consid erate, for in his own State of Massachusetts, indeed along the whole New England coast, that rock-bound coast from which he is proud to come, while they do not have the water hyacinth, they have water grasses of one kind or another, they have sea weed, and even the periwinkle. God help the small boat whose propeller gets tied up in any one of these natural grasses that are indigenous to the New England coast. I do not recall that we have made many appropriations for the purpose of removing sea grass from the streams of the Northern States, but I do know that folks up yonder have made complaints to the Government, and they have made complaints to individuals down here in Washington, with respect to the effect of this grass growing in the streams upon such navigation as they have there. Rivers in Maine are affected by sea grass, rivers in Massachusetts, even the Merrimac, have difficulty in navigation with regard to these grasses. It is no uncommon thing for a farmer using his motor boat, or for some one in larger craft to find his propeller clogged. In such a case he must reverse the engine in order to get the grass off. The trouble with the water hyacinth is that it is a great deal more "cussed" than the ordinary sea grass of the Northern States. I hope this explanation is satisfactory to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I request unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD two letters—one from the Attorney General and the other a reply—in regard to broken glass, poisoned water and poisoned court-plaster, and other complaints of that kind. I will withhold the reading. I would have liked to have read it if we had had an opportunity.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know whether the gentleman will put this in the back of the RECORD.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; I will ask to place it in the back of the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I have no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I do not think you can grant a request to put it in the back of the RECORD; it ought to go in where it is offered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that this is a matter that has nothing to do with rivers and harbors. It is a communication from the Attorney General with respect to the rumors about ground glass in food. I think it is just such a communication as Members would wish to read at this time.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10069, the river and harbor appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MCLEMORE, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

TUESDAY, April 16, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast placed reverence to Thy name the first of the great commandments. Thou hast taught us, both by revelation and by experience, reverence for Thy holy name as the first obligation of human life. We pray that we may be enabled to measure our responsibilities and duties in the light of Thy revealed truth. While we abhor that which is low and mean and sensual in life, grant that sacred things may be placed first in our thoughts and that God's name may be above every name. We reverence Thy name and worship Thee, and pray Thee to guide us this day to Thine own honor and glory. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

FRAMINGHAM, MASS., April 14, 1918.

We request that this be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Senator LODGE.

OLIVE MILLS BELCHER,
State Chairman.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the National Hardwood Lumber Association, of East Cambridge, Mass., praying for the payment of excess-profits taxes in installments, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present a petition from King County Pomona Grange, No. 13, of the State of Washington, representing 1,500 farmers, containing some very pertinent facts bearing upon the regulation of prices. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF WASHINGTON,
KING COUNTY POMONA GRANGE, NO. 13,
OFFICE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE,
Kent, Wash., April 5, 1918.

To the honorable ladies and gentlemen of the Sixty-fifth Congress, United States Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., greetings:

The farmers of my State in general and of my county (King) in particular have been watching the daily proceedings of your honorable body for the past few months with intense interest, hoping, day by day, that some representative of the farmer would bring forth for discussion some method of relief from the intolerable, unjust condition governing his business to-day, but we have looked in vain.

Since March 15 you have faithfully and earnestly discussed one branch of farming, and a very important one we admit; but after having passed Mr. GORE'S amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill, guaranteeing $2.50 wheat, we fail to see wherein you have assisted the wheat farmer to any appreciable extent, inasmuch as you have failed to provide any protection from exploitation by the producer of raw material, manufacturer, and distributor of the supplies necessary to the production of wheat. Of what use to the wheat farmer is the extra 30 cents per bushel when you permit the implement and supplies to consume it? And does this consumption help us in any way to win the war? If so, we have nothing more to say; but we question the validity of such thought.

In your deliberations and discussions you seem to have overlooked the fact that there are probably 25 citizens engaged in other branches of agriculture to one engaged in wheat raising. We admit that wheat comes first from an efficiency standpoint at this time; but what about milk, butter, cheese, poultry, eggs? From the standpoint of food value, do they not merit your second consideration? Dairy and poultry farmers have much more money permanently invested per acre than has the wheat farmer, and their land is not suited to the production of wheat, but is far more valuable commercially, and is therefore taxed two and three times as much as the wheat lands.

You have taught the dairyman and poultryman to breed pure-bred stock, and they have responded until millions of dollars are tied up permanently. You can not sidetrack such a business, nor can these farmers kill off this stock and try to produce wheat. This is a permanent business, and you, ladies and gentlemen of Congress, have got to give it some protection, and that quickly, or this Government will have upon its hands thousands of bankrupt farmers and millions of unfertilized acres lying idle before we have whipped "Old 'Kizer' Bill." These farmers only ask the same right of existence you extend the shipbuilder and miller. They are of the most loyal of our citizenry and do not seek profit at this time, but they insist that you stop this excessive profiteering of their product to the extent that they be permitted to make both ends meet.

You have guaranteed the miller a certain profit per barrel for the flour he manufactures, and you have overlooked the by-products thereof, viz, bran, shorts, middlings, screenings, etc., and which forms the leading dairy and poultry feeds, and which said miller is using to exploit the farmer. The dairyman nor the poultryman care what price is paid for their product, if the cost of production is regulated to meet it.

Many of you have admitted on the floor of your respective assemblies that "price fixing has proven a failure" and that the "law of supply and demand should control." Permit me to disagree. President Wilson stated correctly, "The law of supply and demand has been supplanted by unrestrained selfishness." There has been no honest law of supply and demand for the past 25 years, and especially so for the past 10 years. The commission man and the broker have created a fictitious supply and a fictitious demand at will and have absolutely controlled prices for their profit alone.

You have a right to exclaim that the partial price fixing done has been a failure and detrimental to the last degree. In the name of justice and fairness to your constituents in all lines of business you must now go further and place a price upon all commodities produced by capital or labor.

I am authorized to write you this letter by the grange of King County, State of Washington, representing 20 local organizations with a membership of 1,500 and approximately 1,000 farms of an average acreage of 40 acres; hence 40,000 acres of as rich and productive soil as will be found anywhere in this United States is now appealing to you for a square deal.

Permit me to cite you a few facts. At our regular meeting held Thursday, March 28, figures were presented by different investigating committees and individuals concerning the cost of production of milk. The lowest actual cost of production was $3.125 per 100 pounds; the average cost of production, $3.431. The price received by producer on February 28 was $3 per 100 pounds; March 1 to 15, $2.90; March 15 to April 1, $2.75; and another drop due in April. You can appreciate the result.

Will you delve into this matter immediately and produce some remedial legislation before it is too late? If you seek personal evidence, it will be forthcoming.

Yours, very truly,
C. R. COTTRELL,
Chairman Congressional Committee.

Mr. SHIELDS. I present a resolution from citizens of Knoxville, in meeting at Knoxville, Tenn., on the subject of equal suffrage, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved, That we, citizens of Knoxville, in meeting assembled at Knoxville, Tenn., this 13th day of April, 1918, congratulate Senator MCKELLAR on his progressive stand on the Federal suffrage amendment and urge Senator SHIELDS to work and vote for this measure granting political liberty to 20,000,000 American women at a time when they are called on to serve and suffer in a war for democracy abroad; and be it further

Resolved, That we call upon the United States Senate for the immediate passage of the Federal suffrage amendment, that political justice may be done to the women of this Nation; and be it further ACCEPTANCE OF DECORATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 143) to permit any and all members of the military or naval forces of the United States serving in the present war to accept decorations from the Government of any of the countries concurrently engaged with the United States in the prosecution of said war, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 395) thereon.

PUBLIC HOUSING FOR WAR NEEDS.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 10263) to authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs, and I submit a report (No. 394) thereon. I will ask that the bill and report be printed, and after the bill is printed with the amendments I may try this evening to see if I can not get consideration of it. I want to give Senators who are interested in the bill an opportunity to have a copy of the bill and the report of the proposed amendments. It can be printed with the amendments in a few hours, I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

ENLISTED MEN TRAVELING ON DUTY.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9163) to provide for reimbursement of actual expenses or flat per diem for enlisted men traveling on duty under competent orders, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Oregon please explain the bill and whether it differs from the Senate bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is exactly the same as Senate bill 3691, which passed the Senate on March 23. It is to reimburse enlisted men when they go off on other duties than the regular service in the line. It has already passed the Senate and the committee reports the bill as it came from the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter under such regulations and within such maximum rates as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War enlisted men may be reimbursed for actual expenses of travel, including subsistence and lodging, incurred while traveling under competent orders and not embraced in the movement of troops, or they may be paid a flat per diem therefor in lieu of such reimbursement.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEMPORARY PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9902) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917.

I will state with reference to this bill that it is in the exact language of Senate bill 3801 which passed the Senate on the 23d of March, 1918. The House bill in the meantime had passed the House, and it has come over here and the committee ask that the House bill be passed.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last sentence of section 8 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Vacancies in the grades of the Regular Army resulting from the appointment of officers thereof to higher grades in the forces other than the Regular Army herein provided for shall be filled by temporary promotions and appointments in the manner prescribed by section 114 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, except that such promotions and appointments may be made by the President alone when such vacancies are in grades not above that of colonel; and officers appointed under the provisions of this act to higher grades in the forces other than the Regular Army herein provided for shall not vacate their permanent commissions or be prejudiced in their relative or lineal standing in the Regular Army."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OUTPUT OF COAL.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to read without any comment three very short clippings from papers of recent date. The first is entitled "Miners warn chaos means fuel famine":

MINERS WARN CHAOS MEANS FUEL FAMINE—STABILIZATION OF PRICE AND DISTRIBUTION URGED AS VITAL.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., April 13.

Declaring that the present coal production in the United States is far below the Nation's lowest possible estimated requirements, the international executive board of the United Mine Workers of America, in a telegram to Federal Fuel Administrator Garfield, urged the immediate stabilization of prices and distributing agencies to prevent a recurrence of the crisis of 1917.

The telegram declares that mines in the States of Iowa, Oklahoma, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, and West Virginia are working less than half time, and that in many mining towns large producing mines are actually shut down. Miners are leaving the mines in industrial centers where the car shortage shows no signs of improvement, the committee states, and adds: "If this exodus of miners to other lines of employment is permitted to continue, full car supply and most satisfactory distributing facilities provided later will be destined to failure."

The committee reiterates its pledge of full cooperation to all agencies of the Government to the end that the maximum coal production may result.

The second clipping is entitled "Soft coal production less":

SOFT COAL PRODUCTION LESS—1,500,000 TONS DECREASE IN WEEK ENDED APRIL 6, REPORT SHOWS.

That a serious coal shortage is impending is shown by the report of the Geological Survey made public yesterday. The decrease in production of bituminous for the week ended April 6 was 1,500,000 tons, or 14 per cent, as compared with the preceding week. The total production of bituminous coal, including lignite and coal made into coke, is estimated at 9,395,000 net tons.

The average per working day for the week ended April 6 was 1,566,000 tons, as compared with 1,833,000 tons for the week ended March 23. Bituminous shipments on 123 roads fell off from 197,415 carloads for the week ended March 2 to 161,500 carloads for the week ended April 6.

The last clipping has no headline and it appeared in an obscure portion of the paper.

One day Lee Thurman happened to be Acting Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield being out of town. It also happened that a lighthouse inspection steamer ran out of coal.

The Department of Commerce sent to the Coal Administration for an order for the steamer's fuel, and Acting Secretary Thurman signed the order. Back it came.

"We can't take orders from subordinate officials," said the Fuel Administration with its head in the air; and do you know, because of that stupid bit of red tape the lighthouse inspection steamer hung around in port for one week.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I happened to see a recent report of the Geological Survey in regard to coal which shows a great diminution in the production of coal, as the Senator has shown in the clippings. Is that not due in large measure to the fact that people are not buying coal as recommended by the Fuel Administration?

Mr. THOMAS. The reasons assigned by the executive committee of United Mine Workers and also in a statement this morning which I did not read in the RECORD—I do not state them in the order of their importance perhaps—are, first, coal-car shortage; second, interference in prices, lack, in other words, of stabilization of prices sufficiently reasonable to admit of fair profit. In my judgment the latter is the more serious of the two, for the reason that interference with prices by frequent changes and the probability of the continuance of that policy introduce the element of uncertainty in the business so great as to make it difficult for the producers to hold their organizations together or to assure their men of constant work. The two things together threaten the country with a coal famine quite as serious as or more serious than the one of last winter which resulted, as we have good reason to recollect, in the temporary paralysis of American industry.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not true that there is an effort being made to reduce the prices to railroads?

Mr. THOMAS. I am unable to answer that question. I understand that an effort is being made—and it is a very proper one if not carried to an extreme, to supply all industries engaged in the production of war material with such coal as they need.

Mr. LODGE. I did not mean precisely that. I mean is there not an effort being made to compel mines to sell coal to railroads at prices below those fixed by the Fuel Administration?

Mr. THOMAS. I understand the Senator's question. I am unable to answer it. I have no information on that subject.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to ask the Senator just one question. My information may be wrong, and I would like to be corrected if it is. It is that the output of the mines for 1916, both of bituminous and anthracite, was the greatest in the history of the country, and that for 1917 there was an immense increase in the bituminous and anthracite output?

Mr. THOMAS. That is my information.

Mr. FLETCHER. And that the price now at the mines is much greater than it has been heretofore?

Mr. THOMAS. The latter statement I can not concur in. I do not think that is true. I feel very sure it is not the case in my State.

Mr. LODGE. The Fuel Administration has recently fixed certain prices and given it to be understood that they were to continue during the year. I have heard that there is an effort being made to compel mines to sell coal cheaper to the railroads, and therefore the railroads are holding off in buying, and as they consume a quarter of the production the result will be if that is done that the difference will have to be made up either out of the private consumer or by a reduction in the wages of labor.

Mr. THOMAS. That is unquestionably true, but I have no information, as I said before.

Mr. LODGE. I have not the details of it. I only heard that, and I thought the Senator might know.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not posted on that subject.

Mr. LODGE. I was told that the consumption by the railroads in the Senator's State would have a great effect in taking certain kinds of coal which could not be stored.

Mr. THOMAS. If the decrease in production continues for any considerable length of time I fear that when the general shortage comes, even in the great coal section where I live, they may find it necessary to obtain a part of their supply from other sources. I hope that will not be the case. The two fundamental causes of the present distressing situation are lack of stabilization of prices at reasonably remunerative rates and the possibility of further reductions, coupled with an undoubted shortage of cars.

ARTICLE BY ANDREW FURUSETH.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I present an article by Andrew Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union of America, entitled "American Sea Power and the Seamen's Act." I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to having it made a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so referred.

NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present an article from the Official Bulletin of April 1, 1918, a report and recommendation of the War Labor Conference Board, and another from the Official Bulletin of April 10, 1918, being the President's proclamation appointing a National Industrial Conference Board. I ask that it may be printed without reading, and following that an article prepared by James A. Emery, of the National Industrial Conference Board, referring to those two documents, which I also ask may be printed without reading.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD IS RECOMMENDED BY COMMISSION; PROGRAM OF ACTION OUTLINED—REPORTS TO SECRETARY WILSON—REPRESENTATIVES OF EMPLOYERS AND EMPLOYEES AGREE ON STATEMENT OF POLICIES AND PRINCIPLES TO BE FOLLOWED—NO STRIKES OR LOCKOUTS.

The following report and recommendations are presented by the war labor conference board, representing employers and employees, in accordance with the suggestion of Secretary of Labor William B. Wilson, to aid in the formation of a national labor program for the period of the war:

WASHINGTON, March 29, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM B. WILSON,
Secretary of Labor.

SIR: The commission of representatives of employers and workers, selected in accord with the suggestion of your letter of January 28, 1918, to aid in the formulation, in the present emergency, of a national labor program, present to you, as a result of their conferences, the following:

(a) That there be created, for the period of the war, a national war labor board of the same number and to be selected in the same manner and by the same agencies as the commission making this recommendation.

FUNCTIONS AND POWERS OF BOARD.

(b) That the functions and powers of the national board shall be as follows:

1. To bring about a settlement, by mediation and conciliation, of every controversy arising between employers and workers in the field of production necessary for the effective conduct of the war.

2. To do the same thing in similar controversies in other fields of national activity, delays and obstructions in which may, in the opinion of the national board, affect detrimentally such production.

3. To provide such machinery by direct appointment, or otherwise, for selection of committees or boards to sit in various parts of the country where controversies arise, to secure settlement by local mediation and conciliation.

4. To summon the parties to the controversy for hearing and action by the national board in case of failure to secure settlement by local mediation and conciliation.

PROVISION FOR UMPIRE.

(c) If the sincere and determined effort of the national board shall fail to bring about a voluntary settlement and the members of the board shall be unable unanimously to agree upon a decision, then and in that case, and only as a last resort, an umpire appointed in the manner provided in the next paragraph shall hear and finally decide the controversy under simple rules of procedure prescribed by the national board.

(d) The members of the national board shall choose the umpire by unanimous vote. Failing such choice, the name of the umpire shall be drawn by lot from a list of 10 suitable and disinterested persons to be nominated for the purpose by the President of the United States.

(e) The national board shall hold its regular meetings in the city of Washington, with power to meet at any other place convenient for the board and the occasion.

MAY ALTER METHODS.

(f) The national board may alter its methods and practice in settlement of controversies hereunder from time to time as experience may suggest.

(g) The national board shall refuse to take cognizance of a controversy between employer and workers in any field of industrial or other activity where there is by agreement or Federal law a means of settlement which has not been invoked.

(h) The place of each member of the national board unavoidably detained from attending one or more of its sessions may be filled by a substitute to be named by such member as his regular substitute. The substitute shall have the same representative character as his principal.

(i) The national board shall have power to appoint a secretary and to create such other clerical organization under it as may be in its judgment necessary for the discharge of its duties.

(j) The national board may apply to the Secretary of Labor for authority to use the machinery of the department in its work for conciliation and mediation.

HOW ACTION MAY BE INVOKED.

(k) The action of the national board may be invoked in respect to controversies within its jurisdiction by the Secretary of Labor or by either side in a controversy, or its duly authorized representative. The board, after summary consideration, may refuse further hearing if the case is not of such character or importance to justify it.

(l) In the appointment of committees of its own members to act for the board in general or local matters, and in the creation of local committees, the employers and the workers shall be equally represented.

(m) The representatives of the public in the board shall preside alternately at successive sessions of the board or as agreed upon.

(n) The board in its mediating and conciliatory action, and the umpire in his consideration of a controversy, shall be governed by the following principles:

PRINCIPLES TO BE OBSERVED.

There should be no strikes or lockouts during the war.

RIGHT TO ORGANIZE.

1. The right of workers to organize in trade-unions and to bargain collectively through chosen representatives is recognized and affirmed. This right shall not be denied, abridged, or interfered with by the employers in any manner whatsoever.

2. The right of employers to organize in associations of groups and to bargain collectively through chosen representatives is recognized and affirmed. This right shall not be denied, abridged, or interfered with by the workers in any manner whatsoever.

3. Employers should not discharge workers for membership in trade-unions nor for legitimate trade-union activities.

4. The workers, in the exercise of their right to organize, shall not use coercive measures of any kind to induce persons to join their organizations nor to induce employers to bargain or deal therewith.

EXISTING CONDITIONS.

1. In establishments where the union shop exists the same shall continue, and the union standards as to wages, hours of labor, and other conditions of employment shall be maintained.

2. In establishments where union and nonunion men and women now work together, and the employer meets only with employees or representatives engaged in said establishments, the continuance of such condition shall not be deemed a grievance. This declaration, however, is not intended in any manner to deny the right or discourage the practice of the formation of labor unions or the joining of the same by the workers in said establishments, as guaranteed in the last paragraph, nor to prevent the War Labor Board from urging, or any umpire from granting, under the machinery herein provided, improvement of their situation in the matter of wages, hours of labor, or other conditions as shall be found desirable from time to time.

3. Established safeguards and regulations for the protection of the health and safety of workers shall not be relaxed.

WOMEN IN INDUSTRY.

If it shall become necessary to employ women on work ordinarily performed by men, they must be allowed equal pay for equal work, and must not be allotted tasks disproportionate to their strength.

HOURS OF LABOR.

The basic eight-hour day is recognized as applying in all cases in which existing law requires it. In all other cases the question of hours of labor shall be settled with due regard to governmental necessities and the welfare, health, and proper comfort of the workers.

MAXIMUM PRODUCTION.

The maximum production of all war industries should be maintained, and methods of work and operation on the part of employers or workers which operate to delay or limit production, or which have a tendency to artificially increase the cost thereof, should be discouraged.

MOBILIZATION OF LABOR.

For the purpose of mobilizing the labor supply with a view to its rapid and effective distribution, a permanent list of the number of skilled and other workers available in different parts of the Nation shall be kept on file by the Department of Labor, the information to be constantly furnished:

1. By the trade-unions.

2. By State employment bureaus and Federal agencies of like character.

3. By the managers and operators of industrial establishments throughout the country.

These agencies should be given opportunity to aid in the distribution of labor, as necessity demands.

CUSTOM OF LOCALITIES.

In fixing wages, hours, and conditions of labor regard should always be had to the labor standards, wage scales, and other conditions prevailing in the localities affected.

THE LIVING WAGE.

1. The right of all workers, including common laborers, to a living wage is hereby declared.

2. In fixing wages, minimum rates of pay shall be established which will insure the subsistence of the worker and his family in health and reasonable comfort.

[From the Official Bulletin, Wednesday, April 10, 1918.]

PRESIDENT APPROVES CREATION OF NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD; OUTLINES ITS POWERS AND DUTIES.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, in January, 1918, the Secretary of Labor, upon the nomination of the president of the American Federation of Labor and the president of the National Industrial Conference Board, appointed a War Labor Conference Board for the purpose of devising for the period of the war a method of labor adjustment which would be acceptable to employers and employees; and

Whereas, said board has made a report recommending the creation for the period of the war of a national war labor board with the same number of members as, and to be selected by the same agencies, that created the War Labor Conference Board whose duty it shall be to adjust labor disputes in the manner specified, and in accordance with certain conditions set forth in the said report; and

Whereas, the Secretary of Labor has, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the report of said War Labor Conference Board dated March 29, 1918, appointed as members of the National War Labor Board Hon. William Howard Taft and Hon. Frank P. Walsh, representatives of the general public of the United States; Messrs. Loyall Z. Osborne, L. F. Loree, W. H. Van Dervoort, C. E. Michael, and B. L. Worden, representatives of the employers of the United States; and Messrs. Frank J. Hayes, William L. Hutcheson, William H. Johnston, Victor A. Olander and T. A. Rickert, representatives of the employees of the United States;

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby approve and affirm the said appointments and make due proclamation thereof and of the following for the information and guidance of all concerned:

The powers, functions, and duties of the National War Labor Board shall be: To settle by mediation and conciliation controversies arising between employers and workers in fields of production necessary for the effective conduct of the war, or in other fields of national activity, delays and obstructions which might, in the opinion of the national board, affect detrimentally such production; to provide, by direct appointment or otherwise, for committees or boards to sit in various parts of the country where controversies arise and secure settlement by local mediation and conciliation; and to summon the parties to controversies for hearing and action by the national board in event of failure to secure settlement by mediation and conciliation.

The principles to be observed and the methods to be followed by the National Board in exercising such powers and functions and performing such duties shall be those specified in the said report of the War Labor Conference Board dated March 29, 1918, a complete copy of which is hereunto appended.

The national board shall refuse to take cognizance of a controversy between employer and workers in any field of industrial or other activity where there is by agreement or Federal law a means of settlement which has not been invoked.

And I do hereby urge upon all employers and employees within the United States the necessity of utilizing the means and methods thus provided for the adjustment of all industrial disputes, and request that during the pendency of mediation or arbitration through the said means and methods there shall be no discontinuance of industrial operations which would result in curtailment of the production of war necessities.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia, this eighth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eighteen, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-second.

[SEAL.] WOODROW WILSON.

By the President:

ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State.

WAR LABOR BOARD FOR INCREASING PRODUCTION—BODY JUST FORMED WILL ENDEAVOR TO MAINTAIN HARMONY BETWEEN EMPLOYERS AND LABOR IN ORDER TO SPEED UP WORK OF AMERICAN INDUSTRIES.

[By James A. Emery, of the National Industrial Conference Board.]

Without attracting proportionate attention or comment, a remarkable social experiment of critical interest to our country is about to be made. A representative committee of employers and organized labor will undertake, through machinery jointly devised, to secure uninterrupted maximum production of war necessities and conciliate, mediate, or arbitrate inevitable differences as to hours, wages, and working conditions by the application of standards of mutual conduct which they agree ought to govern the employment relation for the duration of the war.

The joint committee which fathered these proposals was appointed by the Secretary of Labor January 28, 1918, and consisted of five representative employers nominated by the National Industrial Conference Board, and five officers of international unions named by the American Federation of Labor. Each group then selected a representative of the public to participate in the conferences. The employer representatives nominated ex-President Taft; the union representatives Frank P. Walsh, head of the old Industrial Relations Commission.

This joint committee, after repeated conferences at Washington, made recommendations to the Secretary of Labor on March 29 suggesting the creation of a war labor board, to conciliate and finally adjust labor disputes affecting war production, and offered certain principles and policies to govern the administration of the proposed board.

With the approval of the Secretary of Labor, the President of the United States, by Executive proclamation on April 9, adopted the proposals of the joint conference and appointed the same representatives of employers and unions to constitute the National War Labor Board. The President further urged "upon all employers and employees within the United States the necessity of utilizing the means and methods thus provided for the adjustment of all industrial disputes," and requested "that during the pendency of mediation and arbitration through the said means and methods there shall be no discontinuance of industrial operations which would result in curtailment in the production of war necessities."

The need for devising an effective means of preventing the continuously increasing interruptions of our war production has become steadily greater. So far as it has been and is being caused by agents of the public enemy it has been and will be the subject of increasingly drastic legislation and police administration, but so far as it has been due to economic differences intensified by the circumstances of war production, agitation, and suspicious discontent it is but partially and ineffectually met by existing agencies or the experimental policies of the Government.

Soon after the declaration of war labor-dispute adjustment machinery was created by agreement between the Secretary of War and Mr. Gompers in relation to cantonment construction, by the Shipping Board, and the international officers of the craft unions involved, while the Department of Labor and various temporary committees and commissions, including the President's Mediation Commission, undertook the investigation, mediation, or arbitration of general classes of employment controversies. Despite these various agencies, none of which were coextensive with the field of industrial production, from our entrance into the war strikes steadily increased in number, extent, and intensity.

An investigation of strikes between April 6 and October 6, 1917, made by the National Industrial Conference Board, showed during that period a verified loss of 6,285,519 production days. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor, in its December, 1917, bulletin reported for the preceding month of September 171 strikes involving 147,349 persons, whose average loss of time indicated a minimum labor loss of more than a million workdays.

The same bulletin, reporting from official statistics of the German Empire, indicated that the United States lost through strikes in the single month of September, 1917, more workdays than the German Empire from the same cause in the whole year 1916. Whether we prefer the conclusions of a private body predicated upon painstaking inquiry or the comparisons afforded by official figures, either indicates an actual and threatened loss of production through labor disputes, with their social reaction upon national unity of thought and action, constituting a tragic menace. Whatever the motive of those who stop, or threaten to stop, the production of ships or supplies for ourselves or our allies, they consciously or unconsciously perform the work of the public enemy.

Great Britain met this condition by the famous treasury agreement of March, 1915, between the Government and the representatives of all the British trade-unions. The unionists were asked to abandon every restrictive shop practice or custom threatening the maximum output of munitions, to agree that there should be no strikes affecting such production, that a dilution of unskilled, female, and unorganized labor be accepted, with a compulsory arbitration of all differences. In return for this the Government assured a limitation of employers' profits and the restoration, without prejudice to the unions, of the customs and practices which they abandoned for the period of the war. In other words, highly organized Great Britain became an open shop to win the war, for organized British labor accepted the proposal, and has kept its pledge with magnificent loyalty.

American labor conditions as we entered the war were substantially those which Great Britain reached by agreement. There from 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the war industries, including shipbuilding, were highly unionized. Here the reverse was the fact. The Naval Consulting Board which examined and classified plants available for munition production reported, prior to our entrance into the war, 18,654 establishments, of which 1,867, or slightly more than 10 per cent, were union shops. We therefore possessed, as a matter of fact and law, upon entering the war, a condition which Great Britain sought and established as a national policy through negotiation and after learning its necessity by costly experience.

Our industrial circumstances are, therefore, not only unlike those of our great ally, but the establishment of the War Labor Board presents an essentially different method in principle of fixing standards of conduct and methods of adjusting disputes. Great Britain sanctioned the Treasury agreement by enacting its industrial policy and the Government's pledge into the munition acts of 1915–16. We have undertaken to accomplish the same purpose without legislation through representatives of employers and unions directly recognizing and declaring for the imposition of specific reciprocal voluntary restraints in the conduct of their relations with each other, in order to minimize causes of disagreement, while adjusting such disputes as arise between them through machinery of their own devising, which they jointly administer in the presence and with the aid of representatives of the public.

The board is without legal authority to compel the acceptance of its policy or methods, the reference to it of any dispute, or the enforcement of any award. It can not compel a single employer to adopt its views or a single employee to remain at his task. But the circumstances of its formation, the representative quality of its membership, the inherent worth, perceived necessity, and apparent practicability of its principles and procedure attach a powerful moral sanction to its proceedings.

For the American people realize more clearly each day the necessity of uninterrupted production. The needs of their soldiery are calling insistently from the trenches. They know their cause to be equally imperiled whether that production is stopped by stubborn disputants or the military effort of the public enemy. If it can not be assured by the operation of a voluntary arrangement, the people are likely to demand that the very extreme of authority shall be exerted to obtain it. It will be a notable and inspiring achievement, indeed, if the recognition of a common obligation to the national defense will supply an ample substitute for any exercise of public authority.

The fundamental declaration which underlies the whole scheme is the recognition by both parties that "there should be no strikes or lockouts during the war." Expressed in the form of an opinion rather than an imperative pledge, it expresses the end to which all else is subordinate. To avoid this wasteful, and for the war unendurable, method of settling labor disputes the board arms itself with a means of flexibly adapting its organization to the circumstances of any disagreement. It refuses first of all to take cognizance of any case in which by agreement or statute a medium of adjustment is provided until that medium has been tried and failed. Even after its intervention has been invoked the board may drop any case if its character or importance does not justify its further consideration.

The action of the board is invoked by application of either of the parties or the Secretary of Labor. It may operate through permanent or temporary local committees of its own appointment, provided always that employers and employees are equally represented. It creates its own methods and practice as it progresses, and may alter these in the light of its experience.

While the plan emphasizes a determination to exhaust the resources of mediation and conciliation before proceeding to arbitration, it nevertheless provides, in the event of the failure of these methods, for the choice of an umpire, either by the unanimous vote of the board or by a drawing from a list of 10 suitable and disinterested persons nominated by the President of the United States. The decision of such umpire is to be final and without appeal. The subject matter to which the board confines itself are controversies directly, or in its opinion indirectly but detrimentally, affecting production necessary for the conduct of the war. The whole working arrangement is by its very nature for the duration of the war.

A means of adjustment without standards would be a procedure without substantive law. The joint conference committee therefore proposed, and the Executive proclamation approves, a brief declaration of principles to govern the board or its representatives in the consideration of any controversy. These include a declaration of the right of all workers to a living wage in recognition of the principle that found perhaps its best expression in the famous labor encyclical of Pope Leo XIII, a recommendation to assist in the mobilization of labor by providing lists of workers to the Department of Labor through trade-unions, State and Federal employment agencies, and the management of industrial establishments. Women workers, it is declared, should be allowed equal pay for equal work on work ordinarily performed by men and be limited to tasks proportionate to their strength.

In respect to hours of labor the basic eight-hour day is recognized in all cases where it is required by law. In all other instances hours of service are determinable by the public necessity and the welfare, health, and proper comfort of the worker.

A most important declaration is made with respect to the necessity for "maximum production," which, it is asserted, "should be maintained, and methods of work and operation on the part of employers or workers which operate to delay or limit production, or which have a tendency to artificially increase the cost thereof, should be discouraged."

It is recognized that local custom and standards should prevail in fixing wages, hours, and conditions of labor.

In addition to these declarations of economic standards and policy, and for the assured continuance of established safeguards and regulations for the protection of health, safety, and welfare of workers special declarations are made upon the subject of the "right to organize" and in recognition and protection of existing employment conditions in munition establishments. These declarations are for the apparent purpose of clearly affirming for trade unions the right to organize and deal collectively with their employers and engage in all legitimate activities to that end.

The nonunion worker and the employer not at present dealing with trade-unions is assured of equal protection against the use of any coercive means either to compel the one to take membership in a union or the other, against his will, to deal with it.

It is likewise clearly stated that where union standards and conditions exist they shall be maintained, but where union men and women or nonunion men and women now work together the continuance of such a condition shall not be deemed a "grievance" by organized labor.

While I am a member of the National Industrial Conference Board, I neither know nor am authorized to express the opinions of its membership nor of the employer members of the War Labor Board, but I should assume from antecedent circumstances that the representatives neither of employer nor employee intended to make this declaration of principles exclusive, but rather sought through it to clarify the ambiguous interpretation and misunderstandings which have frequently arisen in the endeavor to apply the standards which early in the war the National Council of Defense declared ought to govern the employment relation throughout the struggle. It is substantially summed up in the declaration that neither employer nor employee should take advantage of the circumstances of the war to obtain a condition which they were unable to secure prior thereto.

Of course neither employer nor employee can undertake to define the rights or privileges of the other, nor substitute his opinions or desires with respect to the same for those which spring from the nature of our Government or the decisions of our highest judicial tribunals. But the accredited representatives of such parties can, as they have in this instance, and with great moral authority, recommend a course of conduct with respect to the relations of employers and trade-unions, which, springing from exceptional experience, should be calculated to diminish the differences likely to arise from disagreeing interpretations of the employment relation.

The economic standards proposed should be mutually acceptable. The right to organize, which is undeniable, is properly conditioned by condemnation of the use of coercive measures and the assurance of the recognition of the rights and protection of the nonconformant, whether employer or employee. If trade-unions by superior efficiency or service can merit and win the membership of individual workers, and if employers voluntarily, and not because of coercive threats, prefer to deal with them because of a demonstrated advantage, neither the individual nor the public has cause for complaint.

The experiment is unique in political history; the stake a tremendous one. The practical operation of the plan will be its true test. But the object it seeks to accomplish is at present essential to our national safety, and we should therefore give to the enterprise our hearty cooperation, with every desire to make it a notable success.

The salaries or compensation of all places which may not be filled as hereinabove provided for shall not be available for expenditure, but shall lapse, and shall be covered into the Treasury. The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any position with a salary of $2,250 or above that sum.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask that the Senate disagree to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MARTIN. Now, I ask that lines 5 to 17, both inclusive, be stricken from the bill, and in lieu thereof to have inserted the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 106 it is proposed to strike out lines 5 to 17, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Appointment shall not be made to any of the positions herein appropriated for in the classified service of the Bureau of Pensions not actually filled June 30, 1918, nor shall more than 50 per cent of other vacancies actually occurring in the $1,200 grade, nor more than 25 per cent of such vacancies actually occurring in all other grades or positions, except those with salaries of $2,250 or above, or $1,000 or below, during the fiscal year 1919, be filled by original appointment or promotion. The salaries or compensation of all places which may not be filled as hereinabove provided for shall not be available for expenditure, but shall lapse, and shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss this amendment, further than to say that the amendment that has just been proposed by the chairman of the committee is very much better than the House provision, although I should like to see even this amendment rejected; but I am not going to ask a vote of the Senate upon it.

The situation at the Pension Office is such that, in my opinion, and in the opinion of the commissioner himself, no limitation ought to be put upon the number of employees in that department this year. Some eight years ago this provision first appeared in the law. It was a very wise provision, and it has continued in the law from that time until this. Last year was the first year it became burdensome upon the department. In that year some 149 employees less were employed, brought about through death and the fact that their positions could not be filled. If that continues, and our pension laws are such that the work of the department increases, it can not do the work necessary this year; but I am perfectly willing now, with the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Virginia, to allow the amendment to be adopted, and hope the department for this year can get along with the present number of employees.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I will say just a word. The committee certainly had no idea of hampering the work of that department; but this amendment was gotten up after an investigation by Mr. Brown, of the Bureau of Efficiency, and we feel very sure that it will meet the necessities for the present. If it develops that they need additional service, of course it will be allowed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 108, line 18, after the word "papers," to insert "and for expense of transporting publications of patents issued by the Patent Office to foreign governments," so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, the adoption of that amendment renders unnecessary lines 15, 14, and the words "and expense of," in line 13; so I ask the Senate to strike out those words, not including the sum "$3,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 108, line 13, after the word "books," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the paragraph, except the numerals "$3,000," in the following words:

Section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved May 10, 1916, as amended by the naval appropriation act approved August 29, 1916, shall not operate to prevent anyone from receiving the additional compensation provided in this section who otherwise is entitled to receive the same.

Such employees as are engaged on piecework, by the hour, or at per diem rates, if otherwise entitled to receive the additional compensation, shall receive the same at the rate to which they are entitled in this section when their fixed rate of pay for the regular working hours and on the basis of 313 days in the said fiscal year would amount to $2,500 or less: Provided, That this method of computation shall not apply to any per diem employees regularly paid a per diem for every day in the year.

So much as may be necessary to pay the increased compensation provided in this section to employees of the government of the District of Columbia is appropriated, one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, except to employees of the Washington Aqueduct and the water department, which shall be paid entirely from the revenues of the water department.

So much as may be necessary to pay the increased compensation provided in this section to persons employed under trust funds who may be construed to be employees of the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia is authorized to be paid, respectively, from such trust funds.

Reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next regular session showing for the first four months of the fiscal year the average number of employees in each department, bureau, office, or establishment receiving the increased compensation at the rate of $120 per annum and the average number by grades receiving the same at each other rate.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to come in on line 22, page 163, after the word "appropriations." It is an amendment to the original committee amendment, though this has been adopted by the committee and is presented as a committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 163, line 22, after the word "appropriations," and before the semicolon, it is proposed to insert "in bureaus, divisions, commissions, or any other governmental agencies or employments created by law since January 1, 1916," so as to read:

The provisions of this section shall not apply to the following: Employees paid from the postal revenues and sums which may be advanced from the Treasury to meet deficiencies in the postal revenues; employees of the Panama Canal on the Canal Zone; employees of the Alaskan Engineering Commission in Alaska; employees paid from lump-sum appropriations in bureaus, divisions, commissions, or any other governmental agencies or employments created by law since January 1, 1916—

And so forth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee what the additional burden upon the Government, as expressed in figures, will result from this amendment?

Mr. MARTIN. In view of the modification made this morning when the committee met I can not give it accurately, but I should say with approximate accuracy it is something over $20,000,000. As the House fixed it the amount was $27,200,000; as the Senate committee first reported it it was $28,100,000; but with the modification made by the committee this morning it is reduced, and I should say, roughly speaking, nearly enough for practical purposes, it is something over $20,000,000. That is as near as I can come to it at the moment.

Mr. THOMAS. I am informed that the proposed increase to postal employees will amount somewhere in the neighborhood of $33,000,000.

Mr. MARTIN. That is a mistake.

Mr. THOMAS. That is not in this bill.

Mr. MARTIN. I beg the Senator's pardon, I misunderstood him.

Mr. THOMAS. The amount of increase made by this bill, added to the amount of contemplated increase which will undoubtedly be passed in the Post Office appropriation bill, will increase the expenditure of our domestic establishment by a sum very considerably in excess of $50,000,000, and presumably the increases in other directions will make the total sum much larger, probably approaching $75,000,000.

I shall not delay the passage of the bill, Mr. President. I could not do so if I tried, and time is too valuable to justify me in doing more than record a protest against these ever-increasing expenditures.

There is no doubt, Mr. President, that the increased cost of living is out of proportion to the salaries which existed and were paid prior to the war. There is no doubt either that this is not the way in which to remedy that situation. We can not increase the pay of employees as fast as those who furnish supplies and shelter can increase the cost of them, and it is inevitable that as the prices paid for labor increase, the prices of those who cater to the people will increase out of proportion it may be to the benefit which we seek to confer by this kind of legislation.

We are merely by this bill providing for the transfer to the landlords and the groceries and the dry-goods merchants and the other purveyors $20,000,000 through this increase of salaries. It is not the way, Mr. President, to meet or to do away with this situation. England has handled the problem differently and with far greater success, and I hope she will continue to do so.

Mr. President, our people are responding with unprecedented generosity to subscriptions for war loans. So long as money is necessary to prosecute the war and is utilized for that purpose just so long will they contribute their money to the Public Treasury. But we are beginning to note, Mr. President, that vast sums, raised both by taxes and by bond issues, are not being used for the prosecution of the war but for many things which have little or any relation to it. There is nowhere in this country, certainly not in Washington, any spirit or practice of economy whatever. On the contrary, we are more prodigal in our appropriations than we have been in all our history, and as far as one may judge the future from the past, we will be more prodigal and less frugal as time goes on, because our funds and our credit, necessarily expansive during a time like this, not only stimulate extravagance on the part of the legislators of the country but prompt fresh demands upon the Treasury, veiled under the pretense of necessity, either contributing for or essential to the prosecution of the war.

Mr. President, this war is a formidably serious thing. It is becoming more serious for America every day. The news from the front this morning is not reassuring. The last reverse is one of the most serious which the British troops have recently encountered. How many more of them they will be able to endure no man can tell. They are fighting with their backs to the wall and with that grit and tenacity characteristic of the Anglo-Saxon as his last successful resource in many a previous time of crisis and of travail.

But we should look beyond the present, Mr. President, and take some note of what the immediate future may have for the Republic should that splendid line of heroes be pierced by the German hordes and driven back upon the Channel. They are fighting our battle. They are fighting it with a heroism without parallel in the history of warfare. Every true American heart to-day is beating in response to the hope that they may prevail over the Hun and save civilization for the world.

In the event, Mr. President, that line is broken and the Germans capture the channel ports, which I do not believe, America will be faced with the immediate prospect of a war nearer at home, and for that we should make, it is essential that we do make, immediate preparation, for possibly France, war worn and weary, bled white, and her resources strained to the utmost, can do no more; that Britain, depending solely upon her fleet, America will be obliged to carry on this war to its ultimate and successful conclusion. We will do that, God willing, should the task be imposed upon us.

I trust, Mr. President, that no such responsibility will be ours, but since there may be such a responsibility I want to see some evidence of that spirit of sacrifice and that manifestation of patriotism, patriotism in the deepest sense of the word, manifest not only in our proceedings, but among the people without regard to class or condition.

These are serious times, Mr. President. America is more than ever the hope of the world. Her strength, her endurance, her stout-heartedness, her ability to measure up to the tremendous responsibilities that may soon be hers depend in large degree upon our financial resources, and they should be in every way husbanded and protected as far as it is within our power to do so.

Mr. President, I do not care to say anything more upon the subject. I do not think this amendment is wise. It will give no serious permanent measure of relief, but will merely tend to increase the already high cost of living, and become the precedent for another and a larger increase in the fiscal legislation for the year 1920.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I know it is unpopular with Senators who are very anxious to pass this measure carrying $70,000,000 immediately upon its introduction to submit any remarks upon it, and I do not propose to occupy any considerable length of time of the Senate in its discussion, but I must state that I agree very largely with many of the sentiments which the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has just uttered. I do not agree with him, however, that there should be no increase of salaries to Federal employees. I know that the salaries now paid are not sufficient, even if other conditions in the country were normal and all of the people who have rent and other things to sell in this District were actuated by purely patriotic motives.

I understand that the bill which seeks to investigate and remedy conditions connected with landlordism here in the city is working upon a measure of relief.

I have never been one who has strongly favored interfering with individual effort when that effort is exerted along reasonable lines, but when I realize, as I do, that the people not directly connected with the Government who are living in the District of Columbia are here because the Government's Capital has made it a most desirable place to live in, because the burdens upon the property owners are comparatively light and the advantages here furnished by the taxpayers of the whole country are greater than those of any other city in the United States—when I know these things I am impressed that in time of war, when every patriot should think of service and sacrifice rather than profit, I am ready to deal with the profiteers in this District as I would with any other disloyal citizen. Until we entered this war I have not been moved to criticize the disposition of many of the residents of Washington to extort from Government officials and employees all that the Government pays in salaries, but now when the life of the Nation requires thousands of men and women to live here I regard it as nothing less than treasonable for the favored property owners to profiteer out of the necessities of the war. One of the discouraging features of the present is the too general disposition to make and save money by any means, however questionable, rather than to spend it for the general welfare. I know of no place where that disposition is more manifest than in the Capital of our Nation. I do not know what the conditions will be generally throughout the District, but in many places the occupants of rooming houses, apartment houses, and hotels have been notified that on the 1st day of May the rents are to be increased. I happen to know that many of these rents have already been increased 75 per cent over what they were prior to the breaking out of the war. It is now proposed to make it 100 per cent. I know that the general excuse is that the cost of fuel has been and is very great, but I also know that this is not a good excuse. So do many of us. Coal has been higher, but much less has been used. The increased cost has been offset by decreased quantity purchased. Tenants have not been warmed. The rooms have not been fit for occupation on account of the lack of heat. Owners have economized in coal.

I have inquired as to the cost of help that landlords have employed. The owners have been magnanimous enough in many instances to increase the pay of servants who were receiving already $20 a month to $22 a month, and at the same time increasing the rentals charged their patrons from 75 to 150 per cent more than they charged prior to the war.

Mr. President, I am in favor of this increase of salaries for the clerks. In fact, I would be willing to vote a little more in most cases; but I hope that this will not be simply additional plunder for those who are profiting out of the necessities of those who are compelled to remain here in Washington. I would give greater weight to the arguments of District residents for increased wages to Government employees if I did not realize that they were inspired by the vision of increased spoils. I would not care to vote an additional salary to a clerk if that additional salary is to be turned over to a landlord.

Not only the rentals to employees, but, of course, the cost of food, has increased, and provision should be made for it; but the responsibility of Congress does not end with granting the increase of salaries, it should extend as far as in justice it can, and these employees should be protected against the greed of profiteers.

Mr. President, I hope that the antiprofiteering measure is going to be pushed to legal enactment. I do not say that all hotels and apartment and rooming houses are guilty of extortion, because I happen to know that there are many proprietors who have not increased their charges materially. I want to get after the men who feel that the Government of the United States is established in Washington in order to support the District of Columbia or the property owners who happen to be here. Patriotism and sacrifice are demanded quite as much of the residents of the District of Columbia as they are of those who live outside. I shall be very glad to support, if I have an opportunity, any just measure or any reasonable measure which attempts at least to allow Government employees to retain a small portion of their salaries for their own individual use without being obliged to contribute to people who feel that this is their opportunity to profit at the expense of the Government's vital necessity.

I indorse what the Senator from Colorado says relative to economy, but I also know that expenses naturally increase, and that clerks of the Government should not be expected to make all the sacrifice. They should be paid a sufficient salary upon which to live. Therefore I am in favor of the increase, but I hope it will be supplemented by action looking to the possibility of their retaining at least a portion of what they earn.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have had prepared a statement showing the average salaries or wages paid by representative commercial concerns and States and municipalities for work similar to that which is done for the Federal Government by its employees. I want to put the finding of that investigation into the RECORD in order that Senators and the country may know the facts concerning compensation paid by the Government of the United States in comparison to compensation for similar work paid by private corporations and by municipalities and States as well. This statement will show that the Government of the United States to-day is paying a higher rate of compensation than is paid for similar work anywhere else in the United States, with a few exceptions, and those exceptions appear in this statement.

I present this statement, Mr. President, because there has been a universal charge outside of Congress that the employees of the Government are not paid so well as are employees elsewhere, and I desire that the facts may be known by all. I ask that the statement be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The statement referred to is as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to an item on page 101, line 17, being the appropriation for the salary of the medical expert in the office of the Solicitor for the Interior Department. The salary of that official was estimated for at $2,500, and the appropriation made carried by the bill is $2,000. I happen to know that that employee is a very efficient man and is almost indispensable to that office. I should like very much indeed to have the salary increased to the estimate and have the matter go to conference, where undoubtedly it will be scanned very closely.

Mr. MARTIN. I am perfectly willing for the matter to go to conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. I therefore move, on page 101, line 17, to increase the salary of the medical expert from $2,000 to $2,500.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to one other matter, which, I think, was an oversight on the part of the committee. Turning to page 147, line 6, the bill reads:

Chief statistician, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $3,000.

The estimate for that item was $4,000, it being recommended that $1,000 additional should be given to that official so long as the office was retained by the present incumbent. The House of Representatives allowed an additional $500, using the language—and $500 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent.

The Senate committee very properly intended to strike out the language "so long as the position is held by the present incumbent," but in doing so struck out the appropriation of the additional $500 which the House had allowed.

The official now occupying this position is acknowledged by everyone to be one of the most efficient employees of the Government and one performing a vast amount of work. I therefore appeal to the Senator from Virginia to consent to an increase of the amount of $3,000, which is provided in line 7, page 147, to $3,500. That would make the exact amount which the House of Representatives has allowed. Then, let the language, "so long as the position is held by the present incumbent," which the Senate committee doubtless intended to strike out, be stricken out.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, the policy of the Committee on Appropriations, a policy with which I am in most earnest sympathy, was not to increase the salaries of civilian employees of the Government in this time of war. The committee was very liberal as to all war expenditures, but was very unwilling to increase the salaries of civilian employees. There are not a half dozen instances in the entire bill—I do not think there are over three—in which an increase has been allowed in the salary of civilian employees, except in the case of the lump-sum increase of $120.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator from Virginia that there are very few instances where the amount allowed by the House of Representatives was reduced by the Senate committee.

Mr. MARTIN. I think we made reductions in quite a number of instances.

Mr. GALLINGER. The House allowed $3,500 in this instance.

Mr. MARTIN. But the Senate committee did not agree to it in this instance for this reason: While soldiers are going to the front, giving up big salaries and comforts and luxuries, and working and serving the country and risking their lives in the Army for $30 a month, I tell you I can not look with any favor on increasing the salaries of civilian employees. If a man has a salary of $3,000 a year—and that is what this official got last year—he can get along on it. The committee was unwilling to increase the salaries of civilians under conditions such as now confront us.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was laboring under the impression that the Senate committee had made a mistake in striking out the $500 additional which was allowed by the House of Representatives. My impression was that the committee simply intended to strike out the language "so long as the position is held by the present incumbent."

Mr. MARTIN. It was a deliberate action of the committee; they did not think that the salary ought to be increased. Under ordinary circumstances the increase might be very proper, but had we increased this salary there are scores of others which should have been increased in cases which are just as meritorious. The committee was not willing to increase the salaries of civilian employees in this critical period of our history.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that is the position which the chairman of the committee takes, I have nothing further to say about it, except to add a word to the effect that I feel sure that if the chairman of the committee will investigate this particular case he will find that it is very exceptional, so far as the capabilities of this man are concerned and the importance of the work which he is performing.

Mr. MARTIN. We had no doubt about all that; but this is a time of sacrifice, and we thought that these civilian employees could get along on the salaries which they had heretofore received.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee about a provision on page 139 of the bill. I had intended to ask about it in committee, but overlooked it. I refer to the provision on that page, beginning in line 22, which reads as follows:

For investigation of the standards and methods of measurements of public utilities, such as gas, electric light, electric power, water, telephone, and electric railway service, and the solution of the problems which arise in connection with standards in such service, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $50,000.

As I understand, the estimate of the department for the service was $100,000. They have represented to me that this work is very important and that the demand and need for work along this line is very important. I desire to ask whether or not the subcommittee gave that matter any special consideration?

Mr. MARTIN. I will say to the Senator from Washington that the subcommittee did give the matter very careful consideration, but we felt that in these strenuous times, when there is so much demand for money, this service could get along with the sum which was provided for in the bill as it came from the other House, which is $50,000.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, at the end of line 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

To authorize the Secretary of the Senate to pay those officers and employees of the Senate borne on the roll known as the soldiers' roll, in accordance with the provisions of Senate resolution of July 14, 1911, and continue such persons on said roll who are now designated as "mail carriers," "folders," "skilled laborers," "policemen," or by other designation, but who are now serving as messengers in and about the doors of the Senate and performing service exactly similar to those performed by messengers whose compensation is $1,440 each per annum, a sum sufficient to make their compensation at the rate of $1,440 each per annum for the fiscal year ending July 30, 1918, $4,327.50, which amount shall be immediately available.

Mr. STERLING. I trust this amendment will be acceptable to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, it is very painful to me to say a word in opposition to anything for an old soldier. The committee has not made an investigation into the details of these special cases, but, generally speaking, the old soldiers on the rolls are getting a reasonable salary—I will not say they are getting what they ought to have—but they are getting pensions and each one of them will get the $120 increase. Still, the matter is one which appeals to the sympathies of every Senator, and I should be glad, if it be agreeable to the Senator from South Dakota, to let the amendment go to conference, where it will be carefully considered.

Mr. STERLING. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand that the Senator from Virginia accepts the amendment?

Mr. MARTIN. I am willing that the matter shall go to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

For assistance to Senators who are not chairmen of the committees specifically provided for herein: Sixty-eight clerks, at $2,500 each; 68 assistant clerks, at $1,500 each; 68 messengers, at $1,200 each; in all, $353,600: Provided, That such clerks, assistant clerks and messengers shall be ex officio clerks, assistant clerks, and messengers of any committee of which their Senator may be chairman.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this amendment strikes out the provision that refers to clerks and messengers to the committees, beginning on page 3, and also the provision at the bottom of page 9, beginning in line 24, and makes another provision in lieu thereof, which I will explain. The amendment I have proposed is framed on the theory of giving to each Senator a secretary at $2,500 a year, an assistant secretary at $1,500 a year, and a messenger at $1,200 a year. This is in accord with the conclusion that was reached by the special committee that was appointed a year or two ago, of which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] was the chairman. The amendment was framed to carry out that conclusion, and was referred to the committee at the suggestion of the special committee.

The amendment which I have proposed does not interfere with the provision made by law now for the compensation of clerks of any committee where their compensation exceeds $2,500 for a secretary, $1,500 for an assistant secretary, and $1,200 for a messenger; in other words, I reinsert in my amendment every provision made in this bill for clerical help to committees that would not be cared for by my amendment. That course was followed on the theory that where the Senate had given consideration to the needs of any committee and had allowed special compensation to any employee of that committee we would not disturb that conclusion, except in the case of one or two of the insignificant committees where the messenger gets more than the ordinary compensation of messengers. In such cases we have provided the regular messenger rate of $1,200 for each messenger.

The purpose of this amendment is to get rid of a number of committees that every Senator admits are useless, the only purpose served by them being to give increased compensation to employees who do not do any more work than they would do if they were not employees of such committees; in other words, the purpose of this amendment is to put the compensation of the help of Senators upon an equal, just, and fair basis.

The amount carried, as I have had it figured out as nearly as possible with reference to the provisions which were agreed to by the committee, would only be a little over $4,000 more than the amount provided in the bill as reported to the Senate.

Mr. President, that is all I am going to say about it. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss it at any further length. I do think that we ought to get rid of a number of the committees that are actually useless, that never meet, and never have any business to do as committees, and that we ought to place the employees of all Senators upon a fair, just, and equitable basis, one with another.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I have no hesitation in saying that there is a great deal of merit in the proposition presented by the Senator from Washington. We have many committees that should be abolished; there should be a revision of the compensation allowed to clerks of the different committees; the matter ought to have the attention of the Senate; but the proposal of the Senator from Washington has not been considered by any committee and the time does not seem propitious to act upon the question now. The Senate has just given to each Senator an additional clerk, unless he already has as many as four clerks, and it seems to me that this matter, for which I concede there is a great deal of justification, which has a great deal of merit, and which is entitled to careful consideration, should not be pressed now. It will certainly have careful consideration at an early day, so far as I am concerned, but just at present I hope the Senator will not press his amendment, as we could not well dispose of it to-day with such a full understanding as there ought to be before it is finally acted upon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I submitted the amendment some time ago and had it referred to the committee, where it was referred, I presume, to the subcommittee. I recognize that the committee has a great deal to do, that the very important problems that confront it take a great deal of time, and I am disposed to accede to the request of the chairman of the committee. I should like to know, however, if the chairman of the committee can give me any assurance that probably at the next session, when the next legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill comes along, we can give this matter consideration and take some action upon it?

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the Senator, but let me suggest to the Senator that inasmuch as these committees were created by the standing rules of the Senate, first the rules ought to be changed, and then the useless committees ought to be abolished after action of the Rules Committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to suggest to the Senator that I do not intend to abolish committees, but I do put the compensation of their employees on an entirely different basis, and that will rid us substantially of perhaps the worst evil.

Mr. HARDWICK. I thought the Senator's amendment had that purpose in view, and I am glad it has, because I should like to support such a proposal.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not by the amendment try to amend the rules but simply to place the compensation on a different plane, which will accomplish, I think, the real practical results which we would like to get at.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me just one suggestion further, I think a better way to do that would be to abolish every useless committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so, too; our rules ought not to be encumbered with them at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. The best way to do that would be to get the Committee on Rules to take action looking to the abolition of all the useless committees, and merely leave the virile, vital committees.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is the measure that really fixes the compensation; our rules do not do that, so that if we fix the compensation upon a fair, just, and equitable basis we can still have all the committees provided for by the rules, and yet it would not affect the committees and would put their employees upon a fair and just basis. That is what I am really concerned about, and I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he does not think that probably at the next session, when we are considering another appropriation bill, we may be able to give this matter serious consideration?

Mr. MARTIN. I will say to the Senator that it is my earnest desire to proceed right along the line with him. I think action along that line ought to be taken, and I hope we can find the opportunity to do so intelligently at the next session of Congress.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In view of that statement of the chairman of the committee, in the interest of the early passage of the pending legislation and in the hope that I will get the result which I seek quicker by taking this course, I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington withdraws his amendment.

Mr. CALDER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 25, it is proposed to strike out "$2,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$2,220."

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this amendment is in line with the amendment just offered by the Senator from Washington and afterwards withdrawn. It is not so involved as his amendment. His amendment readjusts the pay of the clerks of all committees. My amendment simply provides that each Senator's clerk who now receives $2,000 shall hereafter receive $2,220.

We have had some talk in the Chamber to-day about useless committees. I intended to read the names of some of these committees into the RECORD, but perhaps that is not necessary. We all know the ones that are useless. The first one I see is the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress. I do not know just what that committee has to do; but the fact that there is such a committee and that a Senator is chairman of it allows his clerk $220 a year more than he would otherwise receive. I find, on looking over these committees, that the Senators from the States of New Mexico, Arizona, Wyoming, and Utah—the States of smaller population—all have chairmanships. I am sure the clerks of these Senators earn all the money that is paid to them; but in the case of many of the States of larger population, where the clerks of Senators work not 7 hours or 8 hours a day but 12 or 14 hours a day the clerk is paid but $2,000.

Moreover, if this amendment is agreed to, I am going to ask that another amendment be made on the next page, giving the second clerk $1,440, the same pay allowed the second clerks of Senators who are chairmen of committees. I may say that last year the War Department took my second clerk from me. He was receiving $1,200, and they offered him $1,500, and he left. This year one of the executive departments offered my second clerk $1,600, one whom I had brought from my own State. I said to him, "All we can give you is $1,200," and purely out of loyalty he stayed with me. But these departments of the Government are offering many Senators' clerks higher pay than we can give them, and when these clerks see that the clerks of other Senators, doing less work than themselves, are paid $220 and $240 more than they are paid it certainly is very discouraging to them and to us.

I hope that this simple little amendment will be agreed to. It is not involved at all; and if it is adopted, together with the one on page 10, increasing the pay of the $1,200 clerks to $1,440, it will mean altogether an additional appropriation of only $13,200.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just want to ask the Senator from New York if the effect of his amendment would not be this: The minimum compensation paid to the secretaries of Senators who are chairmen of minor committees is $2,220?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator's amendment would give the secretaries of Senators who are not chairmen of these minor committees the same compensation that the clerks of these minor committees receive?

Mr. CALDER. Exactly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is entirely just. There is no reason at all why the secretaries of Senators who are not chairmen of minor committees but who do just as much work, and in many instances possibly more work, should not have exactly the same compensation that comes to the clerks of committees who do not have any work to do because of the fact that they are clerks of committees.

Mr. CALDER. I am glad that the Senator from Washington agrees with what I am trying to do. It is just plain, simple justice that the clerks of all Senators who are doing identical work should get exactly the same compensation.

In view of the fact that these two items—the amendment I have now offered, and the amendment on the next page—will take only $13,200, and that they will enable Senators to hold their good clerks, rather than have them taken away by the departments of the Government, when we are authorizing increases of salaries right along for clerks in the departments, I trust that the chairman of the committee will agree to accept this amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that the Senator from New York wishes to open up this question of compensation to clerks. We have just allowed an additional clerk to every Senator who has less than four. I say to him very frankly that while the House generally concedes to the Senate the right to fix the compensation of its own force, it would be impossible to get a measure of this sort through at this time.

The Senator from Washington, in a very broad and liberal spirit, passed by the general proposition, which would include what the Senator from New York is asking. Under the circumstances, I feel constrained to make the point of order that the amendment has not been reported from any committee, and has never been even considered by a committee, and increases an appropriation, and is therefore subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DESTRUCTION OR INJURING OF WAR MATERIAL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. OVERMAN. I present a conference report on Senate bill 383, to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to prevent the hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House striking out all after the enacting clause, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the words 'war material,' as used herein, shall include arms, armament, ammunition, live stock, stores of clothing, food, foodstuffs, or fuel; and shall also include supplies, munitions, and all other articles of whatever description, and any part or ingredient thereof, intended for, adapted to, or suitable for the use of the United States, or any associate nation, in connection with the conduct of the war.

"The words 'war premises,' as used herein, shall include all buildings, grounds, mines, or other places wherein such war material is being produced, manufactured, repaired, stored, mined, extracted, distributed, loaded, unloaded, or transported, together with all machinery and appliances therein contained; and all forts, arsenals, navy yards, camps, prisons, or other military or naval stations of the United States, or any associate nation.

"The words 'United States' shall include the Canal Zone and all territory and waters, continental and insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

"The words 'associate nation,' as used in this act, shall be deemed to mean any nation at war with any nation with which the United States is at war.

"SEC. 2. That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy any war material, war premises, or war utilities, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both.

"SEC. 3. That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully make or cause to be made in a defective manner, or attempt to make or cause to be made in a defective manner, any war material, as herein defined, or any tool, implement, machine, utensil, or receptacle used or employed in making, producing, manufacturing, or repairing any such war material, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisonment not more than 30 years, or both."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title, and agree to the same.

LEE S. OVERMAN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this is the second report from the conference committee. The conferees seem to have agreed upon two changes in the original report, which I presume were designed to balance each other. That is to say, those members of the Senate committee insisting upon the elimination of section 3 secured the assent of their associates on the House committee by agreeing to strike out the words in section 2 reading:

Shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities.

I have no doubt that that compromise was effected upon the theory that if the clause of section 2 which I have read were eliminated from the bill the need for section 3, to which some of us here successfully objected, would be eliminated. If that were true, I would not be able to vote for the second conference report, since it would be substantially identical with the first report.

I have had occasion more than once, in discussing legislation of this sort, to call attention to my opinion as to the probable consequences of the proposed legislation. This bill upon its face as it now stands—and when I say "as it now stands," I mean as it now stands upon the present conference report—would exempt from the operation of the act conspiracies to commit the offenses provided against by it. In other words, it would require the actual accomplishment of the thing prohibited to invoke the machinery of the act and bring about the consequences and the penalties which it provides. But, Mr. President, it is due from me to those who are interested in this subject, and particularly to those who believe that section 3 should have remained in the conference report, that I should say that in my judgment the elimination of the clause of section 2 does not accomplish the purpose designed; and because it does not I shall vote for the committee report.

The subject of conspiracies generally is covered by section 37 of the Criminal Code, which reads as follows:

If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each of the parties to such conspiracy shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

I wish to go on record at this time as saying that in the event this conference report is accepted, as I hope it will be, section 37 of the Criminal Code covers conspiracies to commit the offenses therein provided for; and under the provisions of section 37 indictment and punishment, in the event the evidence sustains the indictment, will inevitably follow, in my judgment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is it not true that altogether aside from the question of conspiracy to do certain things specified in the clause of section 2, that has been referred to, the manner in which the conference report has now been changed does not constitute those things an offense even though there be no conspiracy to do them? In other words, they have not only eliminated the idea of conspiracy but they have eliminated the provision which makes it a crime to interfere with the production of war materials.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not so understand.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I fail to see anything in the legislation recommended by the report that makes it unlawful to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war materials, or war utilities, or to injure or interfere with or obstruct the United States in the production of them. There is nothing in the report to make that an offense. Now, that is the important thing that was intended to be curbed by this legislation; but in striking out a provision to punish a conspiracy to do that, which I understand was done in order to be sure that it did not interfere with the right of workmen not to work, they have struck out the substantive part of the legislation as well.

Mr. THOMAS. I have misread the second report of the conference committee if that conclusion is correct. The words in section 2, "shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities," are the only words eliminated from the section. If that is not correct, I hope the chairman of the committee will correct me.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that is correct. We struck those words out of section 2 and then we struck out section 3; that is all.

Mr. THOMAS. That being the case, section 2 as it stands is perfect, except that it does not punish conspiracies to do the things prohibited by that section.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not want to embarrass the Senator in any way.

Mr. THOMAS. Indeed, I have said practically all that I intended to say.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am making these suggestions largely for the purpose of developing just exactly what will be the effect of this legislation. I would be glad if the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from North Carolina making the report could point out any provision that is left in this proposed legislation providing for penalties against the man who interferes with or obstructs the production of war materials. I say there is nothing to that effect in the proposed legislation as it is now reported, and I will call the Senator's attention to what it does contain.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to say that if that criticism is correct, then the bill was defective ab initio, and the defect is not due to the report of the committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That may be true. I am not urging that the original bill contains this provision which I am talking about, but the first conference report did contain it, and it also contained in connection with it a penalty against conspiring to do those things. The conferees have eliminated the conspiracy and they have eliminated the whole subject matter along with the conspiracy.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. We have only eliminated words from what is known as the Cannon amendment. All that was eliminated were the words "shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities," that is all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Colorado will pardon me just a moment, all the acts that are prohibited by this report are defined in section 2 and in what is now called section 3. They are in those two last sections of the report. The rest of it is merely definition of material, and so forth, and what constitutes war utilities, so that we turn only to those two last sections to ascertain what acts shall be prohibited and penalized by this proposed legislation. Now, what are they?

Section 2 prohibits anyone, with the intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation, in preparing for or carrying on the war, or with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war; that is, with the intent to do those things. Shall do what? "Shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy, any war material," and so forth. There is nothing said there about interfering with or obstructing the production of it. That denounces the crime of destroying or of injuring war material after it is produced, and that is all there is in section 2. In section 3 there is a provision—

That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily for the disposition of this report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just one second I will yield to the Senator. I merely want to complete the sentence which I was engaged in at 2 o'clock.

Mr. THOMAS. I think I have the floor, Mr. President, but I am not certain.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly the Senator from Colorado has the floor, and I will yield to him.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not mean by that to cut off the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I just want to say a word more.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator said that he would yield the floor to the Senator from Minnesota, and I did not want it to be understood that I had myself yielded the floor to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I beg the Senator's pardon for trespassing on his courtesy.

Mr. THOMAS. It is not necessary.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I pointed out the acts which are prohibited in section 2. The only other acts prohibited are defined in section 3, and those acts are with the intent, using the same language as to the intent that I read from the second section, to do what? Not that it shall interfere with or stop the production of war material, but "shall cause to be made in a defective manner, or attempt to make or cause to be made in a defective manner, any war material."

So, Mr. President, the only things that are prohibited by this legislation are, first, with the intent referred to, to injure or destroy war material; second, with the same intent already referred to and defined, to make in a defective manner or attempt to make in a defective manner such war material. That is all, and there is not anything in either one of those provisions that makes it a penalty to interfere with or to obstruct the production.

Mr. THOMAS. I am inclined to think there is considerable force in the Senator's criticism, but it goes to the bill itself and not to the changes made in the second conference report. I think section 2 would have been more complete had it contained the word "produce" or "production" or both or their equivalent. That, however, goes to the merit not only of this but of the first conference report and to the original bill itself. We are confronted here, however, at this time with the second conference report, which eliminates one section and a phrase in another relating to conspiracy. My sole purpose in taking the floor was to call attention to what I conceive to be a very important proposition, which is that the striking out of the clause regarding conspiracy in section 2 still leaves full play to section 37 of the Criminal Code, and that completes the report. So I am prepared to vote for it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator allow me to say that that I think is the view of the conferees?

Mr. THOMAS. I think that is the correct view to be taken of it. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I do not desire to renew the controversy of last week over the conference report on this measure. There were certain statements made last week in criticism of the conduct of the Government Employment Service and the attitude of the American Federation of Labor which ought to be explained, and instead of making that explanation myself I ask leave to print in the RECORD without reading a letter from the Secretary of Labor regarding the United States Employment Service as it relates to shipbuilding plants in the Puget Sound district, a letter from the secretary of the American Federation of Labor regarding the report of the National Industrial Conference Board, and a letter from the president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Gompers, with regard to the attitude of labor, with certain inclosures, being a letter to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted.

Mr. FALL. Do I understand that it is the request of the Senator that these letters shall be printed in the RECORD without reading?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the request.

Mr. FALL. I think they should be read, in view of the statement of the Senator that they are intended to answer some of the criticisms which were offered on the floor here in the discussion. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. HOLLIS. Does the Senator object to having them printed in the RECORD?

Mr. FALL. I object to anything being printed in the RECORD as an answer to criticisms made by a Senator on the floor without knowing what the answer is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Secretary will return the papers to me, I will read them and make such comments as I think are necessary.

Mr. FALL. I should like to have them read.

Mr. HOLLIS. The first letter is in regard to a suggestion made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] that the United States Employment Service had notified men who applied for work in the shipbuilding district of Puget Sound that they should not go there to work unless they were union men.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to suggest to the Senator that in view of the fact that these letters apparently answer some statements made by certain Senators on the floor, and those Senators are not here now, probably it would be well to have a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Nelson	Shields
Baird	Gerry	New	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Hale	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Harding	Nugent	Smoot
Calder	Hardwick	Overman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Henderson	Page	Tillman
Culberson	Hollis	Phelan	Townsend
Cummins	Johnson, Cal.	Pittman	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Warren
Dillingham	McCumber	Pomerene	Weeks
Fall	McKellar	Saulsbury	Williams
Fletcher	McNary	Sheppard	Wolcott
France	Martin	Sherman

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announe the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] on official business.

While I am on my feet I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. KENDRICK] is absent to-day on public business.

Mr. POMERENE. I wish to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] are detained in attendance on the funeral of the late Senator Broussard.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are detained in attendance on the funeral of the late Senator Stone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD). I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are necessarily detained, taking part in the third liberty loan campaign.

Fifty-one Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. HOLLIS. As I was saying before the call for a quorum, a statement was made last week on the floor of the Senate with reference to the conduct of the United States Employment Service engaging men to work in the shipbuilding district of Puget Sound, and it was then said that men who were secured by the Department of Labor for that purpose were told that if they were not union men it was useless for them to apply. The Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, has sent me this letter in explanation, and I will read it:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 11, 1918.

Hon. HENRY F. HOLLIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR HOLLIS: My attention was called to an article in the morning paper referring to an attack by some Senators on the administration, and particularly to this department, charging that it was catering to union labor, the discussion apparently having been brought about by reference to the recruiting by the United States Employment Service of this department of labor for the shipyards in the Puget Sound district.

The statement is alleged to have been made that the officers of the Employment Service conducting this recruiting announced to the public that no one but union men would be employed and sent to the shipyards in Seattle. This statement is quite correct, but the Senate should know that the shipbuilding companies in the Puget Sound district have a written agreement with the metal-trades council of that district to employ no one but union men. Consequently it would be useless for any agency to recruit any labor for these shipyards other than union labor. It would not only be useless but misleading and work a great injury on nonunion men, who might leave positions in the Middle West and go to Seattle only to find that under the agreement between the unions and the shipyards they could not be employed. The agreement between the shipbuilding companies and the metal-trades council in that district has been in existence for a long time. This department or no other branch of the Government is a party to the contract, nor was it urged by the Government. The shipbuilding companies have simply agreed to the closed union shop in that district, and the agreement is defended by the shipbuilding companies and the Seattle Chamber of Commerce and other employers in that district as a measure of great efficiency, and the speed with which the shipbuilding companies in that district are turning out ships for the Shipping Board indicates the value of the plan under which they are working. If you will refer to the speech of Chairman Hurley, of the Shipping Board, at New York on March 26, you will find that he makes particular reference to the greater speed in shipbuilding on the Pacific coast than elsewhere. It is true that the United States Employment Service of this department supplies absolutely all of the labor, both skilled and unskilled, going into the shipyards in the Puget Sound district.

It is quite clear from what I have just stated that if the shipyards are operating on a written closed union shop agreement with the unions that the Employment Service supplying the labor must supply union labor if it is to supply it at all.

Very sincerely, yours,

W. B. WILSON,
Secretary.

The letter from Mr. Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, is as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., April 15, 1918.

Senator HENRY F. HOLLIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, issue of April 10, on page 4902, is a report of the National Industrial Conference Board on "Strikes in American industry in war time, April 6 to October 6, 1917."

It is stated that during this time 1,156 strikes are recorded. The number of employees made idle, it is stated, was 283,402, and the number of days of production lost was 6,285,519. The National Industrial Conference Board, as you know, is composed of representatives of 17 employers' organizations and associations. It would be interesting to know the method employed by which these figures were compiled or if they were merely the estimate of some individual or group of individuals.

The trade-union movement has found it impossible to compile figures of this character that would be found approximately correct, for the reason that in strike times a large percentage of men drift into other activities for temporary employment. Although known as strikers, these men are engaged in production or other useful occupations, and could not be included in the list above referred to. To illustrate: If 500 employees are on strike for four weeks that does not mean a loss to society of 2,000 days of production, because many of these workers secure employment elsewhere. Because of the temporary character of their employment and the constant shifting from one place of employment to another during this period we have not been successful in securing reliable statistics.

In support of our position and to show the unreliability of the figures issued by the National Industrial Conference Board I quote the following statement by the bureau of mediation and arbitration of the New York State Industrial Commission, published in the commission's monthly bulletin issued February, 1918:

"It may properly be mentioned in this connection that it has been customary in the reports of this bureau and of other bureaus of a like character to speak of the number of days' continuance of a strike as time lost, as a measure of the wages lost to the employees, and also as indicating, in a way, the economic loss to the employer. It is the experience of this bureau, however, that while the total of lost working days reported does show the seriousness of the strike in loss to the worker and employer, it is not an exact estimate of the real loss to either. During the continuance of a strike the bureau has frequently observed that many strikers have obtained temporary employment from another firm or person than the one involved in the dispute, returning to the old position upon settlement of the dispute, and it has also often occurred that one department of an industrial concern may be tied up temporarily by a strike, while the other departments continue in absolutely normal operation, without lessening of the production of the plant as a whole. The great majority of industrial disputes, however, result in material loss to both employer and employee and affect injuriously a community in which they occur."

Yours, very truly,

FRANK MORRISON,
Secretary American Federation of Labor.

The letter from Mr. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, is dated April 13, 1908.

DEAR SIR—

Then there is a complimentary reference to myself, and I will omit the first paragraph of the letter. He mentions the sabotage bill and the discussion last week, and then continues:

Am I right in assuming that the vote of the Senate, reversing the decision of the Presiding Officer of the Senate, was not indicative of opposition to the features of the bill discussed, but rather as a matter of parliamentary procedure? At least I hope so.

Surely when there was such a divergence of views expressed as to the necessity for incorporating section 3 of the bill, the Congress should retain it, for you know, as many Senators know, how the interests and rights of the workers have been subverted on account of interpretations by the courts of laws which the Congress had not the slightest notion should apply to the normal, natural activities of wage earners. Either section 3 should be restored or the so-called Cannon amendment stricken out.

Yesterday I addressed a letter to Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN, member conference committee of the Senate and House, upon the above bill, and it seemed to me that you ought to be in possession of a copy of that letter. I may say, too, that I furnished a copy of my letter to Senator OVERMAN and to each of the conferees on the part of the Senate and the House.

It is with a sense of regret I find that Senator SHERMAN should, at least by indirection, call into question the loyalty of the American Federation of Labor or myself. More than a month before our country entered into the war I issued a call to the representatives of organized labor of America to meet in conference at Washington. That conference was held on March 12, 1917, and, after a thorough discussion, a declaration was unanimously adopted. Permit me to quote the few concluding paragraphs of that document:

"We, the officers of the national and international trade-unions of America in national conference assembled in the Capital of our Nation, hereby pledge ourselves in peace or in war, in stress or in storm, to stand unreservedly by the standards of liberty and the safety and preservation of the institutions and ideals of our Republic.

"In this solemn hour of our Nation's life, it is our earnest hope that our Republic may be safeguarded in its unswerving desire for peace; that our people may be spared the horrors and the burdens of war; that they may have the opportunity to cultivate and develop the arts of peace, human brotherhood, and a higher civilization.

"But, despite all our endeavors and hopes, should our country be drawn into the maelstrom of the European conflict, we, with these ideals of liberty and justice herein declared, as the indispensable basis for national policies, offer our services to our country in every field of activity to defend, safeguard, and preserve the Republic of the United States of America against its enemies whomsoever they may be, and we call upon our fellow workers and fellow citizens in the holy name of labor, justice, freedom, and humanity to devotedly and patriotically give like service.

"Issued by American Federation of Labor, American Federation of Labor Building, Washington, D. C."

That declaration was reported to the convention of the American Federation of Labor, held at Buffalo, N. Y., November, 1917, and it was indorsed by a unanimous vote of all the delegates to that convention.

It has been my purpose and that of my associates to do everything physically possible to prevent interruptions of work.

Under date of April 8, 1918, I addressed a circular to all the organizations of workers of America. May I presume upon your patience and ask you to read a copy of it, which I take pleasure in inclosing?

For nearly a year, in conference with the Secretary of the Department of Labor and members of the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense, I have cooperated for the purpose of first reaching agreements by which industry would be continued without interruption. As the result of these conferences, the employers' associations and the undersigned as representing the workers, appointed committees representative of both sides, and they in turn selected two high-minded citizens of our country representing the public; that they agreed upon principles and standards, and also upon machinery or instrumentality by which these principles and standards and methods of adjustment or prevention of disputes might be put into operation, and that these have been established by the proclamation of the President of the United States. I do not undertake to question the figures quoted by Senator SHERMAN, but I venture to express my judgment that the men engaged in the strikes to which he has referred were largely unorganized.

This fact must be borne in mind, that among the unorganized workers employers have for years had full sway to determine wages, hours, and conditions of the workers, and the former have not failed during all these periods to take full advantage of the impotency of the workers to defend or protect their rights and interests, and that within this past year opportunities had opened up to the workers which they utilized in securing some improvement in their conditions.

Of course, you know that there are no workers in this country under my jurisdiction. There is no power vested in me or even in the American Federation of Labor itself to act more than in an advisory capacity to our fellow workers. That course as advisors we have consistently and persistently pursued, and under it the organized, as well as the unorganized, have almost generally, and particularly in this recent past, conformed. Should section 2 be retained in the bill and section 3 rejected, the influential, advisory character of the American Federation of Labor and me would be minimized or destroyed.

I have some understanding of men and the causes which prompt them to action, particularly as to their action as wage workers, and it is because of that knowledge that I aim to call the attention of Congress to the wholly hurtful effect which would result should it retain section 2 and reject section 3 of the bill.

It is gratifying to me to see in the utterance of Senator SHERMAN that the differences which exist between us he is perfectly willing to lay in abeyance, particularly at this time. I sincerely reciprocate that expression on my part. I am endeavoring by the light that is given me and by every effort I can put forth help our country and our allies to as quickly as physically possible bring this war to a triumphant conclusion for our common cause. If the time should arrive when greater sacrifice may be necessary to win for these great principles, the working people of America will not be found wanting, and while we are fighting for the safety of our Republic and the freedom of the world, we should at least not unnecessarily sacrifice justice and freedom at home. It is something not yet fully understood how perfectly safe is freedom.

Concluding with another complimentary reference, he signs himself:

I have the honor to remain,
Yours, very respectfully,

SAM GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

The circulars are short, are in printed form, and together with the copy of the letter to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], I presume may be printed in the RECORD without reading. I am sorry to take up the time of the Senate to this extent, but I felt that these letters ought to go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GERRY in the chair). Without objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

APRIL 8, 1918.

To the TOILERS OF AMERICA:

BROTHERS: Will the battle line of freedom hold against the onslaughts of autocracy's military machine? Upon that line hangs the destiny of the world for decades to come. The line can hold back the offensive and drive the invaders out of the Republic of France only if it is the concentrated expression of national determination unfailingly supplying men, munitions, food, and every accouterment required.

Workers of America, the safety of that battle line in France depends mainly now upon us. We must furnish the majority of those in the trenches. We must build the ships that carry the troops and munitions of war. Regardless of hidden dangers we must maintain the life line of ships on the high seas which connect the fighting front with our national bases of supplies. We must make the guns, the munitions, the aeroplanes. We must have ready food, clothing, blankets. We serve in the great industrial army that serves overseas with the fighting forces.

We must do all these things because a principle is involved that has to do with all we hold dear.

We are fighting against a government that disregards the will of the governed; a government that pries into intimate relations of life and extends its supervision into smallest details and dominates all of them. We are fighting against involuntary labor; against the enslavement of women and the mutilation of the lives and bodies of little children. We are fighting against barbarous practices of warring upon civilian populations, killing the wounded, the agents of mercy, and those who bear the white flag of truce.

We are fighting for the ideal which is America; equal opportunity for all. We are fighting for political and economic freedom, national and international.

We are fighting for the right to join together freely in trade-unions and the freedom and the advantages represented by that right.

Our country is now facing a crisis, to meet which continuity of war productions is essential. Workers, decide every industrial question fully mindful of those men—fellow Americans—who are on the battle line, facing the enemies' guns, needing munitions of war to fight the battle for those of us back at home, doing work necessary but less hazardous. No strike ought to be inaugurated that can not be justified to the men facing momentary death. A strike during the war is not justified unless principles are involved equally fundamental as those for which fellow citizens have offered their lives—their all.

We must give this service without reserve until the war is won, serving the cause of human freedom, intelligent, alert, uncompromising wherever and whenever the principles of human freedom is involved.

We are in a great revolutionary period which we are shaping by molding everyday relations between man and man. Workers of America as well as all other citizens have difficult tasks to perform that we might hand on to the future the ideals and institutions of America not only unimpaired, but strengthened and purified in spirit and in expression, thus performing the responsible duty of those intrusted with the high resolve to be free and perpetuate freedom.

Fraternally, yours,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

AMERICAN LABOR'S POSITION IN PEACE OR IN WAR.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 12, 1917.

A conference of the representatives of the national and international trade-unions of America, called by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, was held in the American Federation of Labor Building, March 12, 1917, in which conference the representatives of affiliated national and international trade-unions and the railroad brotherhoods participated.

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor had the subject matter for three days under advisement prior to the conference and submitted a declaration to the conference. The entire day was given over to a discussion of the recommendation and such suggestions as were submitted. After a thorough discussion the following document was adopted by a unanimous vote:

"We speak for millions of Americans. We are not a sect. We are not a party. We represent the organizations held together by the pressure of our common needs. We represent the part of the Nation closest to the fundamentals of life. Those we represent wield the Nation's tools and grapple with the forces that are brought under control in our material civilization. The power and use of industrial tools is greater than the tools of war and will in time supersede agencies of destruction.

"A world war is on. The time has not yet come when war has been abolished.

"Whether we approve it or not, we must recognize that war is a situation with which we must reckon. The present European war, involving as it does the majority of civilized nations and affecting the industry and commerce of the whole world, threatens at any moment to draw all countries, including our own, into the conflict. Our immediate problem, then, is to bring to bear upon war conditions instructive forethought, vision, principles of human welfare, and conservation that should direct our course in every eventuality of life. The way to avert war is to establish constructive agencies for justice in times of peace and thus control for peace situations and forces that might otherwise result in war.

"The methods of modern warfare, its new tactics, its vast organization, both military and industrial, present problems vastly different from those of previous wars. But the Nation's problems afford an opportunity for the establishment of new freedom and wider opportunities for all the people. Modern warfare includes contests between workshops, factories, the land, financial and transportation resources of the countries involved; and necessarily applies to the relations between employers and employees, and as our own country now faces an impending peril, it is fitting that the masses of the people of the United States should take counsel and determine what course they shall pursue should a crisis arise necessitating the protection of our Republic and defense of the ideals for which it stands.

"In the struggle between the forces of democracy and special privilege, for just and historic reasons the masses of the people necessarily represent the ideals and the institutions of democracy. There is in organized society one potential organization whose purpose is to further these ideals and institutions—the organized labor movement.

"In no previous war has the organized-labor movement taken a directing part.

"Labor has now reached an understanding of its rights, of its power and resources, of its value and contributions to society, and must make definite constructive proposals.

"It is timely that we frankly present experiences and conditions which in former times have prevented nations from benefiting by the voluntary, whole-hearted cooperation of wage earners in war time, and then make suggestions how these hindrances to our national strength and vigor can be removed.

"War has never put a stop to the necessity for struggle to establish and maintain industrial rights. Wage earners in war times must, as has been said, keep one eye on the exploiters at home and the other on the enemy threatening the National Government. Such exploitation made it impossible for a warring nation to mobilize effectively its full strength for outward defense.

"We maintain that it is the fundamental step in preparedness for the Nation to set its own house in order and to establish at home justice in relations between men. Previous wars, for whatever purpose waged, developed new opportunities for exploiting wage earners. Not only was there failure to recognize the necessity for protecting rights of workers that they might give that whole-hearted service to the country that can come only when every citizen enjoys rights, freedom, and opportunity, but under guise of national necessity labor was stripped of its means of defense against enemies at home and was robbed of the advantages, the protections, the guaranties of justice that had been achieved after ages of struggle. For these reasons workers have felt that, no matter what the result of war, as wage earners they generally lost.

"In previous times labor had no representatives in the councils authorized to deal with the conduct of war. The rights, interests, and welfare of workers were autocratically sacrificed for the slogan of 'national safety.'

"The European war has demonstrated the dependence of the governments upon the cooperation of the masses of the people. Since the masses perform indispensable service, it follows that they should have a voice in determining the conditions upon which they give service.

"The workers of America make known their beliefs, their demands, and their purposes through a voluntary agency which they have established—the organized-labor movement. This agency is not only the representative of those who directly constitute it, but it is the representative of all those persons who have common problems and purposes but who have not yet organized for their achievement.

"Whether in peace or in war, the organized-labor movement seeks to make all else subordinate to human welfare and human opportunity. The labor movement stands as the defender of this principle and undertakes to protect the wealth producers against the exorbitant greed of special interests, against profiteerings, against exploitation, against the detestable methods of irresponsible greed, against the inhumanity and crime of heartless corporations and employers.

"Labor demands the right in war times to be the recognized defender of wage earners against the same forces which in former wars have made national necessity an excuse for more ruthless methods.

"As the representatives of the wage earners we assert that conditions of work and pay in Government employment and in all occupations should conform to principles of human welfare and justice.

"A nation can not make an effective defense against an outside danger if groups of citizens are asked to take part in a war though smarting with a sense of keen injustice inflicted by the government they are expected to and will defend.

"The corner stone of national defense is justice in fundamental relations of life—economic justice.

"The one agency which accomplishes this for the workers is the organized-labor movement. The greatest step that can be made for national defense is not to bind and throttle the organized-labor movement but to afford its greatest scope and opportunity for voluntary effective cooperation in spirit and in action.

"During the long period in which it has been establishing itself the labor movement has become a dynamic force in organizing the human side of industry and commerce. It is a great social factor which must be recognized in all plans which affect wage earners.

"Whether planning for peace or war, the Government must recognize the organized-labor movement as the agency through which it must cooperate with wage earners.

"Industrial justice is the right of those living within our country. With this right there is associated obligation. In war time obligation takes the form of service in defense of the Republic against enemies.

"We recognize that this service may be either military or industrial, both equally essential for national defense. We hold this to be incontrovertible that the government which demands that men and women give their labor power, their bodies, or their lives to its service should also demand the service in the interest of these human beings of all wealth and the products of human toil—property.

"We hold that if workers may be asked in time of national peril or emergency to give more exhausting service than the principles of human welfare warrant, that service should be asked only when accompanied by increased guaranties and safeguards, and when the profits which the employer shall secure from the industry in which they are engaged have been limited to fixed percentages.

"We declare that such determination of profits should be based on costs of processes actually needed for product.

"Workers have no delusions regarding the policy which property owners and exploiting employers pursue in peace or in war, and they also recognize that wrapped up with the safety of this Republic are ideals of democracy, a heritage which the masses of the people received from our forefathers, who fought that liberty might live in this country—a heritage that is to be maintained and handed down to each generation with undiminished power and usefulness.

"The labor movement recognizes the value of freedom, and it knows that freedom and rights can be maintained only by those willing to assert their claims and to defend their rights. The American labor movement has always opposed unnecessary conflicts and all wars for aggrandizement, exploitation, and enslavement, and yet it has done its part in the world's revolutions, in the struggles to establish greater freedom, democratic institutions, and ideals of human justice.

"Our labor movement distrusts and protests against militarism, because it knows that militarism represents privilege and is the tool of special interests, exploiters, and despots. But, while it opposes militarism, it holds that it is the duty of a nation to defend itself against injustice and invasion.

"The menace of militarism arises through isolating the defensive functions of the State from civic activities and from creating military agencies out of touch with masses of the people. Isolation is subversive to democracy; it harbors and nurtures the germs of arbitrary power.

"The labor movement demands that a clear differentiation be made against military service for the Nation and police duty, and that military service should be carefully distinguished from service in industrial disputes.

"We hold that industrial service shall be deemed equally meritorious as military service. Organization for industrial and commercial service is upon a different basis from military service—the civic ideals still dominate. This should be recognized in mobilizing for this purpose. The same voluntary institutions that organized industrial, commercial, and transportation workers in times of peace will best take care of the same problems in time of war.

"It is fundamental, therefore, that the Government cooperate with the American organized-labor movement for this purpose. Service in Government factories and private establishments, in transportation agencies, all should conform to trade-union standards.

"The guarantees of human conservation should be recognized in war as well as in peace. Wherever changes in the organization of industry are necessary upon a war basis, they should be made in accord with plans agreed upon by representatives of the Government and those engaged and employed in the industry. We recognize that in war, in certain employments requiring high skill, it is necessary to retain in industrial service the workers specially fitted therefor. In any eventuality when women may be employed, we insist that equal pay for equal work shall prevail without regard to sex.

"Finally, in order to safeguard all the interests of the wage earners organized labor should have representation on all agencies determining and administering policies for national defense. It is particularly important that organized labor should have representatives on all boards authorized to control publicity during war times. The workers have suffered much injustice in war times by limitations upon their right to speak freely and to secure publicity for their just grievances.

"Organized labor has earned the right to make these demands. It is the agency that, in all countries, stands for human rights and is the defender of the welfare and interests of the masses of the people. It is an agency that has international recognition which is not seeking to rob, exploit, or corrupt foreign governments, but instead seeks to maintain human rights and interests the world over, nor does it have to dispel suspicion nor prove its motives either at home or abroad.

"The present war discloses the struggle between the institutions of democracy and those of autocracy. As a nation we should profit from the experiences of other nations. Democracy can not be established by patches upon an autocratic system. The foundations of civilized intercourse between individuals must be organized upon principles of democracy and scientific principles of human welfare. Then a national structure can be perfected in harmony with humanitarian idealism—a structure that will stand the tests of the necessities of peace or war.

"We, the officers of the national and international trade-unions of America in national conference assembled in the Capital of our Nation, hereby pledge ourselves in peace or in war, in stress or in storm, to stand unreservedly by the standards of liberty and the safety and preservation of the institutions and ideals of our Republic.

"In this solemn hour of our Nation's life, it is our earnest hope that our Republic may be safeguarded in its unswerving desire for peace; that our people may be spared the horrors and the burdens of war; that they may have the opportunity to cultivate and develop the arts of peace, human brotherhood, and a higher civilization.

"But, despite all our endeavors and hopes, should our country be drawn into the maelstrom of the European conflict, we, with these ideals of liberty and justice herein declared as the indispensable basis for national policies, offer our services to our country in every field of activity to defend, safeguard, and preserve the Republic of the United States of America against its enemies whomsoever they may be, and we call upon our fellow workers and fellow citizens in the holy name of labor, justice, freedom, and humanity to devotedly and patriotically give like service."

APRIL 11, 1918.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Member Conference Committee,
Injury to War Material Bill,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The legislative committee of the American Federation of Labor brought to my attention the fact that after consideration by the Senate of the conference report on the "protection of war material and war transportation facilities bill," the conference report was rejected and a motion adopted that the Senate insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House and requesting further conference.

It appears that the discussion on conference report centered about section 3 of the bill, which expressly stipulates that the provisions of the bill were to be interpreted as not preventing workmen from ceasing their work in disputes solely over wages and conditions of employment. Apparently the conference report was recommitted for the purpose of making an effort to eliminate this section.

Labor, as those most vitally affected, interposed no serious objections to this bill as originally drafted, but, during its consideration in the House, Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, offered and the House adopted the following amendment:

"Whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both."

To this amendment, without any qualifications, labor has very serious objections. Labor has had some sorrowful experiences in the interpretation of statutes.

In order that there might not be any question as to the meaning of the statute, an amendment was offered to this bill making it clear that the section above referred to did not apply to the normal and legal activities of workmen. The amendment offered, and which was accepted by the House, is as follows:

"That nothing herein shall be construed as making it unlawful for employees to agree together to stop work, or not to enter thereon, with the bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment."

This bill, upon its passage by the House, went to conference. The conferees agreed to a change in the amendment and inserted the words "sole and," so that the provision would read:

"That nothing herein shall be construed as making it unlawful for employees to agree together to stop work, or not to enter thereon, with the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment."

There would have been no occasion for the introduction or the passage of the amendment last referred to had it not been for the adoption of the so-called "Cannon amendment."

The elimination of section 3 and the retention of the Cannon amendment would be a direct challenge to labor. Such a policy would be unjustifiable and discriminatory against human beings and the granting of power and special privileges to private employers over their employees, and would be so interpreted by the great mass of the workers of our country.

No one disputes the fact that the workers generally of our country and the American Federation of Labor have given indispensable service, and the failure of the Congress to retain the amendment above quoted would bring about its reaction among the wageworkers of our country and would nullify all the efforts made by the organized-labor movement. A challenge of this character will destroy the cooperative spirit of the workmen of our country, and thus retard rather than accelerate our necessary industrial activities in the conduct of a successful war.

Depriving workmen of their inherent and constitutional rights can have no other effect than to create in an intensified form the spirit engendered and developed by those who covertly desire to see the issues of this war result in failure. It is my earnest hope that no legislation will be enacted that will retard the successful prosecution of the undertaking in which we are now engaged, and I sincerely trust that in the final determination of this bill either it will remain in the form reported by the conferees or that both the Cannon amendment and section 3 be stricken from it.

Realizing that you will give this matter most serious consideration, I am,

Very respectfully, yours,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to know what the conference report means before I agree to it. I do not know when it was brought in here. I have not heard any statement as to just what has been done and the changes agreed on by the conferees. I should like to have the Senator from North Carolina explain it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota was not present, I am sorry to say, when the conference report was brought in. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], who was the chief opponent of the conference report as previously presented, took the floor and explained it. Therefore I did not say anything about it. The Senator from Colorado explained it fully and stated why he would vote for it.

What was known as the Cannon amendment and section 3, which was debated long and fully here, the conferees agreed to strike out. That was done in agreement between the conferees of the House and the Senate. The House conferees stated that section 3 would not have been adopted had not what was known as the Cannon amendment been adopted. I presume that the Senator from North Dakota is familiar with the Cannon amendment and does not desire that I shall read it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know what the Cannon amendment is.

Mr. OVERMAN. The conferees agreed to strike out section 3 and the Cannon amendment. We had before us the general conspiracy statute of the United States, which is found in the Judicial Code and which made it a crime for anyone to conspire to do anything denominated a crime by the laws of the United States. It was stated that that statute would cover this situation, anyway, and we made a compromise agreement on that basis. The House was willing to strike out section 3 if the Senate conferees would agree to strike out what was known as the Cannon amendment, because they said that the adoption of the Cannon amendment was the reason for the adoption of section 3 by the House of Representatives. We agreed to strike out everything about labor, and so those two amendments were stricken out.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina refers to some other section of existing law, and states that that other section of the law covers the same question.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from North Dakota is doubtless familiar with the general statute.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is the Senator from North Carolina certain that the situation is covered by the general statute?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I thought, and I understand the Senator from Colorado, in the statement which he made here, said that he was going to support the conference report, because he had examined the statute and was satisfied that it covered the situation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know, but one would suppose that every Senator on the conference committee would himself examine the statute and would pass his own judgment upon it.

Mr. OVERMAN. We had the statute before us, and what I have stated was the judgment of every member of the committee, without exception.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I will read the statute for the Senator from North Dakota in a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from North Carolina refers to the general conspiracy statute, I presume?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. Prosecutions have been had under that statute several times, particularly in the Indiana cases which were prosecuted under the general conspiracy section. I think that is the section to which the Senator from Colorado alluded?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but was not a demurrer sustained in those cases?

Mr. SHERMAN. Some convictions have been had and some of the defendants are in the penitentiary.

Mr. McCUMBER. For doing what? Will the Senator from Illinois tell me what the particular crime charged was?

Mr. SHERMAN. Indictment was brought under the general conspiracy act, which prohibits the doing of any unlawful act to the injury of the United States, and in the Indiana cases the specific charge was because of fraud committed at an election in which Members of Congress were voted for. I refer to what is known as the Roberts case, growing out of prosecutions in the district of Indiana. The acts were committed in Terre Haute. The act was sustained in the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. This section provides:

That whoever * * * shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both.

Have we any law upon the statute books to-day that is practically the same as this provision which has now been stricken out by the conferees?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we have. I think the section for which the Senator from North Carolina is looking would be violated by such an act.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, we have had expressions of opinion from the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and they think the situation is covered by the existing statute. That is all I can say. As soon as I can find the statute I will read it to the Senator. I have not yet had time to find it, as I do not remember it specifically by number.

Mr. McCUMBER. While the Senator from North Carolina is looking for the law to which he refers I wish to present another letter to the Senate and to have it read into the RECORD. The letter is one which is addressed to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and he has authorized me to have it put into the RECORD. I desire the Secretary to read it. I especially want to call the attention of the Senate to the number of strikes which, according to this letter, have taken place between the 15th day of February and the 11th day of March, 1918, at a time in which it has been stated that labor difficulties had all been settled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEATTLE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND COMMERCIAL CLUB,
Washington, D. C., Office, March 11, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR NELSON: I hand you herewith an incomplete record of strikes which have occurred in the United States since February 15 of the present calendar year. I find that I am unable at this time to tell you just what has caused all of them or how long they were in effect. A great number of them have been called to force the "closed shop" and reduction of hours of labor to eight:

NEW ENGLAND STATES.

Fall River, Mass., cotton mills	3,000
Lynn, Mass., shoe factories	8,000
Sanford, Me., textile mills	450
Pawtucket, R. I., textile mills.
Portland, Me., biscuit factory.
Chelsea, Mass., clock makers.
Bristol, R. I., shoe factory	2,000

In addition there has been a number of strikes in nonessential industries and continued threatened strikes in textile, garment, shoe, and machine shops.

NEW YORK AND MID-ATLANTIC STATES.

New York, longshoremen	2,000
New York, cotton-duck factories	1,000
New York, chemical workers	600
Allegheny, Pa., machinists	100
Shamokin, Pa., coal washers	200
Kensington, Pa., weavers	4,000
Buffalo, N. Y., turbine-engine workers	200
Chester, Pa., munition workers	300
Baltimore, Md., shipbuilders	600
Cohoes, N. Y., shoddy mills	200
Hog Island, Pa., ship carpenters	300
Mount Carmel, Pa., coal miners	150
Conshohocken, Pa., boiler makers	500
Buffalo, N. Y., shipbuilders	900

Also a number of strikes, such as elevator men, teamsters, section hands, cigar factories, etc. A continued threatened strike of all the marine workers of New York.

SOUTHERN STATES.

Alabama, general coal mine.
Birmingham, Ala., metal trades	5,000
Ensley, Tenn., coal miners.

Number of threatened strikes in southern shipyards.

MIDDLE WEST STATES.

Kansas City, general, sympathy laundries	22,000
St. Louis, Mo., general	18,000
Chicago, Ill., airplane workers	800
Martins Ferry, Ohio, sheet-metal workers.
Pekin, Ill., gunstock factory.
Chicago, Ill., carriage workers	1,200
Peoria, Ill., all structural iron workers.
Chicago, Ill., garment workers	1,000
Elyria, Ohio, aero-engine workers.
Springfield, Ill., munition plant.
Gary, Ind., switchmen, trainmen.
Peoria, Ill., boiler makers.
Murphysboro, Ill., steel plant.
Fort Wayne, Ind., freight handlers.
Marine, Ill., mill workers.
Denver, Colo., shop mechanics.
Great Falls, Mont., general	1,500

A great many minor strikes, including teamsters, garment workers, electricians, woodworking plants, clerks, waiters, etc.

PACIFIC COAST STATES.

Generally quiet, excepting small strikes in Spokane, North Yakima, and Toppenish, Wash., and pipe fitters on ship construction at Oakland, Cal.

NOTE: This list includes about 80,000 men who have quit work for one reason and another. The Buffalo shipyard strike was caused because the company would not discharge the assistant superintendent, who had been active in reporting the men for slacking. A strike occurred in a Raleigh, N. C., shell plant because two nonunion men were not discharged; and, as stated before, a great number of them are for closed shop.

Trusting these figures may be of some use to you, I am,
Very sincerely,

J. E. BARNES,
828–830 Woodward Building, City.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, that shows a very serious situation existing to-day in the matter of construction of war material. I have looked over that list of strikes, and I find that out of 43 strikes occurring in those few days, 17 were in shipyards or in industries closely allied to the shipbuilding and construction business. At this period of the war and in the present critical situation I want to appeal to Senators that it is time that we take this matter up and meet it honestly and fairly.

No one is attempting to condemn Mr. Gompers or any other of the labor-union leaders; on the contrary, we all desire to pay to Mr. Gompers our highest tribute for his wisdom and his patriotic efforts ever since the war began; but, notwithstanding his efforts, notwithstanding the strong efforts of Mr. Morrison, it is, nevertheless, true that the labor situation has gotton away from the labor leaders and they have not been able to sufficiently control it or to secure for the Government of the United States more than 50 per cent efficiency in the construction of war material and in that particular branch of industry that means so much to this country to-day, ship construction.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to say that the reason I could not readily find the statute which I desired to read was that I was handed the wrong volume. I find that the old statute is section 5440 of the Revised Statutes, and section 37 in the criminal code. It reads as follows:

SEC. 5440. If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, all the parties to such conspiracy shall be liable to a penalty of not less than one thousand dollars and not more than ten thousand dollars, and to imprisonment not more than two years.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, notwithstanding the assurance that has been given me by Senators who undoubtedly have given the matter greater consideration than have I, I am very doubtful if that statute would apply to this case. If to-day, without any just cause, anyone should organize a conspiracy to get men to quit their work upon the construction of a ship that is greatly needed for war purposes, I do not believe that that character of conspiracy would be covered by this particular law. I do not believe the section read would meet the strike situation. I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to state, in addition to what the Senator from North Dakota has had read, that on yesterday 350 men quit their work at Sparrows Point without any apparent cause. The press report in regard to that matter is as follows:

BALTIMORE, April 15.

About 350 men employed in the shipyards at Sparrows Point went on strike this afternoon without giving the management of the company any reasons for their action or without stating any cause of grievance.

Then the details follow. This only goes to prove what the Senator from North Dakota has stated—that the labor situation is getting away from the labor leaders. They are patriotically trying to hold the individual workman to his duty, but in numerous places in the United States—I note as many as I can from the press reports—strikes are occurring with alarming frequency, and they are impairing our ability to prepare for our whole duty in this war. They are reaching that point, Mr. President—and I particularly wish to add this to what the Senator from North Dakota has stated—that unless there is already some law which, taken in connection with this bill, will curb them, they will weaken us so that we can not utilize our resources.

I think, if the Senator will permit me further, that section 5440 of the General Statutes, which has been read by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], can be construed to punish a strike where it is willful. If a number of men, in pursuance of a common understanding, quit work on a Government contract or in a shipyard, and under that concerted action go out leaving work undone, I believe that that is a conspiracy to the injury of the United States.

If the Senator will permit me, that statute, as I have said, was construed in a case arising in Indiana by the circuit court of appeals for the seventh circuit. That case specifically involved a violation of the election laws; it was a case of conspiracy to procure the fraudulent election of certain candidates for Congress. The first time the statute was applied was in that case. It was doubted whether Congress had in mind at the time it enacted this statute the question of elections, and so it was only by construction that it could be held to cover elections. The circuit court of appeals sustained the interpretation put upon it by the trial court, and held that a conspiracy to obtain fraudulent votes in the election of an officer of the United States was a conspiracy that resulted in the injury of the United States and was a violation of section 5440.

I do not think it would be any more violent a construction of the statute—and I wish to invite the Senator's attention to this, because it may be an open question; I am only giving my opinion, as the Senator from Colorado and as the Senator from North Carolina have done—to say in war times that concerted action to cease work on a Government contract or in a shipyard where ships are in the course of construction is a conspiracy of itself when proven that it is to the injury to the United States. I think the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals would not have to make so violent a construction of the statute, if the contrary could even be contended by those representing the defendants, as has already been made in the interpretation and the application of this statute.

This is what leads me to favor the adoption of this report: I believe the prosecuting attorneys and others who have to do with the interpretation and enforcement of the law when this bill is applied and construed with section 5440 will conclude that it will furnish a remedy.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, recognizing the fact that Congress has from time to time indicated its desire that labor unions should not be held to the same strict accountability for breach of law as unions of capital and as individuals, I am rather inclined to believe that the court would pause a long time before it would conclude under that statute that it was the intention to punish anyone who would incite a strike in a Government shipyard, even though the very life of the Nation depended upon the rapid construction of ships. I think we ought to have a law at this time to govern cases of that kind. If Mr. Gompers or Mr. Morrison were the absolute dictators of the labor unions, I have no doubt that we would be freed entirely from strikes, but in view of the strike the Senator from Illinois has just read about, the account of which was published in the press this morning, it appears, unhappily, that they can not control the situation, and unhappily there is in many of the labor unions a large element of the I. W. W., which in some instances controls the union; and where it does not control, it is an element of disloyalty, an element that has prevented construction in so far as it could and has rendered construction work in our shipyards up to the present time, on the average, not more than 50 per cent efficient. At this particular time we ought to have some method to deal with the situation of that character.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] in his address, I think on the 10th of April or about that time, stated that without any law we had come to an agreement with all the labor organizations. I drew from his statement the conclusion that he did not believe there was now danger of any further strikes, and yet right in the face of this belief comes information of a strike in one of the shipyards, for which no reason on earth is given.

The Senator from New Hampshire made a speech the other day, as I remember, which was strongly in defense of labor unions. Certainly those unions have had no man in the Senate who has been more friendly to their interests than the Senator from New Hampshire, and I think sometimes that he carries that friendship so far that to a certain extent he does an injustice to the Government. Criticizing those who did not agree with him, he stated—

> It is not desirable to take the laboring men out and shoot them at sunrise.

Mr. President, that statement has been iterated and reiterated several times upon the floor of the Senate, and it seems to me that it needs some attention. I do not think that the labor element of the United States ought to look upon Congress as its enemy; I know of no one in the Senate or in the other House who has ever advocated any injustice of any character toward honest labor. I have never heard of anyone advocating a low-wage scale. I know that it is the consensus of conviction of every Member of the Senate, and I have no doubt also of the other House, that the greatest liberality should be allowed in the matter of wages for our laborers, especially during this war, to the end that every laborer may feel that his service is recognized and appreciated by the American Republic, and when any Senator condemns sabotage, when any Senator condemns slacking in this most serious situation, I insist that it is hardly just to accuse him of a desire to have laboring men "shot at sunrise."

I want the Senator from New Hampshire to look also upon the other side of this question, and I want if possible every man who performs labor in the United States to-day to look upon the other side of the question. The Senator says that it is not desirable to shoot the laborers at sunrise. God knows that is true, and it is not desirable, either, through the slacking of any American laborer or any other American that our soldiers over in France should have their throats cut at sunrise. That is a matter I think that the labor unions and every other citizen of the United States should think of for a moment. I read from a written report by Adjt. R. G. Starboard, who has charge of the Salvation Army work in France. This is what he says:

> I visited a base hospital recently and had this story from a sergeant who had passed through one of the raids. The sergeant was horribly wounded by grenades, and was passed by the Germans as dead. Before the sergeant lost consciousness, however, he saw a dozen Germans overpower three American boys and cut their throats from ear to ear. The sergeant said the murder of the third American was most horrible. Four Germans held him while another fairly severed his head from his body.

Mr. President, suppose it had been the son of the Senator from New Hampshire or the son of some good mother whom the Senator knows in his State——

Mr. THOMAS. As these men were the sons of good American mothers.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; they were the sons of good American mothers. Reports come to us almost daily of horrible atrocities inflicted upon American and British prisoners. If we had had the Army that we proposed to have in France before the last German drive, which may prove fatal to our allies, that drive never would have been made. If we had had 1,500,000 well-armed American boys to put into the breach at that time beside their British and French allies, this war would have been well on toward the last stages to final victory. We did not have them there. Why? Secretary Baker said in the early winter: "I have 1,500,000 men whom I could ship to France to-day, but I have not the ships. The crux of the whole situation is ships, and I do not know where to get them."

The ships could have been built if, first, the Shipping Board had done its duty and, second, if labor connected with the shipping had faithfully performed its duty. I will not lay the blame all on one or all on the other; it was due to the delay of the Shipping Board, due to profiteering on the part of those who had things to sell to the American Government for the construction of ships, and due even to a greater extent, after we began our shipbuilding program, to the inefficiency and the slacking of labor in the shipyards.

It is problematical whether, with all the ships that we can bring to our support, even when Great Britain is denying her people food that they ought to have in order that her few remaining ships may be put into the service of the United States to take our soldiers to the front, it will be possible for us to get over a sufficient number of soldiers to stem the tide and to be able to save the situation in France to-day; but we are bending every possible effort to do so, and in this critical situation it is our moral duty—the duty of Congress, the duty of every American citizen, I do not care whether he is a laborer or a millionaire, or who he may be—to do everything in his power to see that there is not one minute of delay in our ship construction. That is all that patriotic American citizens are asking for, and I am certain we are asking none too much of our laboring men.

If one son stays at home, what right has he to slack in his work while he sends his brother over to the trenches to face an army? And yet the work of the former is just as essential to final victory as the work of the brother who holds the gun.

It is even more important, because it not only is necessary to support the boy who is at the front, but it is also necessary to support those who must go to his assistance if he is to make his work at the front successful. The workman here is receiving from $5 to $8 per day. The strikes are not for greater wages. I would not complain if they were even greater, though I fear that our extravagance to-day is such that we will bankrupt the Government before we ever get into this war. But be the wages what they will, there is one thing that we have a right to ask of the workman, and that is an honest day's work for the wage that is paid; and, as a matter of fact and truth, no one will deny that nearly every one of these strikes has been because those who employed the workmen would not yield to their demands to make their places closed shops. They were not strikes for higher wages or better conditions.

One of the Senators read this morning a letter indicating that the reason why men were required to say either that they would become members of the labor union or that they were members of the labor union before they were sent out to the West coast was that they might be assured of work. I do not complain of the Government doing that; but is it not also true that the Government forced every establishment in the West to go under the rule of a closed shop before it would allow it to take any contracts? That is the information that I have.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOLLIS. The letter I read from the Secretary of Labor stated that the agreement was between the private shipbuilding plants and their employees; that it was a contract that had been in existence since long before the war, which the Government did not advise and which the Government had no power to change. If a man went out there who was not a labor-union man, he could not be employed, under the private contract between the shipbuilding plants and their employees.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; that is what I understood was in the letter which the Senator read, and I think that was proper under those conditions. I think we have a right to complain, however, when the Government says to another shipbuilding yard that is running under an open shop, "Unless you close your shop and take in only union laborers we will cancel our contract with you." Now, I may be mistaken; the information which comes to me may be erroneous, but I have it from many sources that that has been done.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him again?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. HOLLIS. In all those cases there is an agreement between labor and capital, to which the Government is a party, that where there has been an open shop it shall continue an open shop until the war is ended, and where there has been a closed shop it shall continue a closed shop until the war is ended. I am very confident of that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope, Mr. President, that that is the case.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I know the Senator has kept very closely in touch with these conditions for some time and will correct me if the statement which I am about to make is erroneous. I have been informed that the hull of a large vessel was constructed on the Pacific coast and launched, the work being done by nonunion labor; that it was towed to the proper place in San Francisco Bay, or some harbor in the vicinity of that bay, to receive the installation of its engines, but that because this vessel had been constructed by nonunion labor the trades-unions refused to place in the vessel the machinery necessary to equip her and make her seaworthy, and that no other labor could be secured for that purpose. I am also informed that that condition still prevails, and that that splendid hull, new and otherwise seaworthy, is rendered useless to the Government because another class of labor absolutely refuses to make her seaworthy and efficient by the installation of the machinery. If that be so, then, in my judgment as a man and a Senator, the situation in these times borders very closely upon treason.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will peruse the January and the March numbers of the Sunset Magazine he will find not only that there is one but that there are four or five of those hulls lying idle out on the west coast to-day that can not be used by the Government because the Government can not get the men to put the boilers and the engines in them, the hulls having been constructed by nonunion labor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator to permit me to supplement that statement with another fact: That on the Pacific coast the shipbuilders' union has adopted and is enforcing a rule that no member of less than one year's continuous standing shall be employed as a riveter in shipyards, although the supply of riveters is grossly insufficient.

I should like to add to that the further statement that at Newark, N. J., where there is a shipyard, the local union has fined members of the union from $100 to $1,000 apiece for working with nonunion men who have been assembled on the emergency to put together the fabricated portions of ships, that being an assembling plant.

Mr. McCUMBER. And if the Senator had investigated the subject a little further, he would have found that according to the reports any active man can become a good riveter in a month's time, notwithstanding the fact that under the union rules he must hold a card showing that he has worked a year before he can be employed as a riveter.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the average village blacksmith can learn the trade in 30 days—a man that is used to pounding hot iron.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. President, there is not a man in the Senate or in the House who realizes the present precarious situation in this war, who realizes the dire necessity for ships, who does not also realize in this hour of our need the effect of having a strike in our shipyards, the effect of delaying for a day or a month the construction of any ship necessary for the support of our Army. I can not but fear that this desire to eliminate the Cannon amendment displays a rather gross lack of courage, a subversion of our conscience, in the hope of receiving the votes of some particular organization, that we are willing to see the country's interest so jeopardized.

We talk about the courage of our soldiers. We laud and commend their wonderful courage. Their's is a courage to face death. Their's is to face bullets. Well, if that courage is so commendable, I submit that the Members of the Senate ought to have courage enough to face a paper ballot, even if it should be aimed at the Senator's political interests. We talk about having a Congress free from partisanship. We do not want partisanship to enter into our discussions. No; Mr. President, and we do not want anything but honest, patriotic Americanship in our discussions and actions during this conflict. That means we should do everything that is necessary to protect this country, everything that is necessary to win a victory; and what is most necessary for this country and for victory is to speed up the construction of war materials, to see that every man employed does an honest day's work for an honest wage, and, in addition to that, to see that every American is employed in some useful vocation. Nothing short of that is ever going to save this war, and, Mr. President, it does not need the courage that a great many Senators think it needs to do the right thing.

I know something about labor and laborers myself. I have been associated with them. I have been brought up with them. I have probably performed more physical labor between the ages of 8 and 22 than any of them performs in this age in a like number of years. I know that for the most part they have the same sentiments, the same conscience, the same respect for independence and patriotism that you have and that I have, and they are not led by their officials when it comes to the ballot. They vote their convictions exactly the same as you and I do, and I do not believe there is going to be one patriotic American labor vote polled against an American citizen because he believes that every laborer ought to perform eight hours of honest service. I should be perfectly willing to take my chances with them. There are a great many of the I. W. W.'s that would probably be against you, but would you not rather have them against you than for you?

Mr. THOMAS. They are against you, anyway.

Mr. McCUMBER. They are against anything that is in favor of honest government. They are against anything that does not wear the garb of the murderer and the robber and the thief; so we need not be afraid of that element. I believe with all my heart, Mr. President, that we ought to have left the Cannon provision in this bill. I regret very much that the conferees have brought in a report in which that has been eliminated, in order that they might eliminate that which would exempt labor unions from the operation of this most just law.

Just at the time when we ought to do everything in our power to encourage American labor, I confess we ought to have had the courage to strike out section 3 and leave in the bill the Cannon amendment, which in no uncertain words declared that any person who should conspire to prevent the construction of things necessary for the Government in this war should be subject to punishment. I think he should, and I would be willing to vote for it. I have just as much right to refuse to pay my taxes because I think they are heavier than they ought to be, as a laborer has a right to refuse to proceed to work upon a ship which the Government needs and which my taxes are to pay for, because the wage is not as much as he thinks he might get if he should organize a strike.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely wish to suggest to the Senator that section 37 of the Criminal Code fully covers the subject of conspiracy; but, further than that, there is a great deal more in this bill than appears by reading sections 2 and 4. If the Senator will refer to the definition given at the beginning of the bill of war material, war premises, and war utilities, and the broad latitude covered by those definitions, and then keep in mind the fact that sections 2 and 4 merely make reference to those words, and they must be read together, the Senator will see, as I say, that there is a great deal more in the bill than there would appear to be from reading just sections 2 and 4.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator a question for his candid judgment. Suppose this bill, as reported by the conferees, should become a law to-morrow, in its present form, and suppose day after to-morrow there should be a strike organized of the character of the one which was read into the RECORD just a few moments ago, in which laborers struck in a shipyard, giving no reason whatever for the strike, no claim that they needed higher wages or that they required better conditions. Does the Senator believe that those persons would be told by the Department of Justice, "You either go to work now and do an honest day's work for $5 or $8 or $10 a day or you will be proceeded against in a criminal prosecution"?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I do not, Mr. President.

Mr. McCUMBER. Neither do I.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think so, if those are the facts. Of course, each one of these particular strikes depends upon the facts in the case. For instance, the Senator read in this list of strikes that some 300 or more carpenters had struck at Hog Island. I happen to have information, which I think is absolutely reliable—it was reported by Admiral Bowles, as I recall—to the effect that that strike lasted about 30 minutes, and then the whole thing was over and every man went back to work. There was a disagreement about the amount of wages. Now, I do not know what the facts are in connection with the matter to which the Senator refers. As published, the statement is to the effect that the men stopped work without giving any reason. I think they have a right to do that, and I do not know how on earth you are going to prevent it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I really do not think they have a right to do it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I mean, a legal right.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, I do not think that, Mr. President. Any individual has the right to refuse to perform personal services for another individual at any and all times, and there is no law that can compel him to do otherwise. That is one proposition.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what I mean.

Mr. McCUMBER. On the other hand, we can pass a law making criminal in time of war a conspiracy to secure all the employees in a certain plant that is producing articles for the Government needs to stop work. That we have the power to do.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does not the Senator think that we can go even further than that? Does not the Senator agree that we could prohibit strikes entirely in these munition plants producing war necessities?

Mr. McCUMBER. There could not be a general strike unless it was preceded by some kind of a talk which, in law, would amount to a conspiracy to bring on the strike; so it would be the same thing.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right; we will not quarrel about that. That is purely technical. I believe we could do that, and I want to go further; I think we ought to do that; but I think, whenever we do do that, there are two things we ought to do concurrently. We ought to be sure that we have limited the application of that extreme power to the real war necessities of this country, and that we have not applied it to the industries generally.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator. I think we should have more laws upon the subject than we have that will provide for a board of conciliation and settlement, supervised by the Government, and that the wages should always be most liberal.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. Secondly, let me say to the Senator that I believe it is an absolute necessity, whenever we enact legislation of that sort—and I think the time is coming, if it has not already arrived, when we must do it in order to supply the necessities of this Government and in order to prosecute this war adequately—whenever that time arrives, we ought to limit it to the war industries of the country entirely and strictly; and we ought also, at the same time that we take away from labor its only weapon, to provide authority of law to see that labor is fairly treated in every respect by the Government; and those things ought to be done concurrently.

Mr. McCUMBER. We ought to protect labor. There is no question about that.

Mr. HARDWICK. That was one reason why I did not like the first conference report—because that proposition had not been carefully worked out. I think it ought to be carefully limited and carefully worked out along that line.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think myself that I have no right, even at my age, to fail to do what I can for the Government. I think the Government has a right to call on me for whatever I can do; and if I could be more efficient elsewhere than in the Senate of the United States, I would concede that in time of war the Government would have the right to select me and put me into that work. That is one duty that the citizen owes to the Nation in time of war, and no one has a right to be exempted from it.

Mr. President, I simply desired to express my opposition to any scheme that would make a conspiracy criminal if it was entered into by one class of American citizens, and make it legal if it was entered into by another class. I would not be concerned quite so much in times of peace, even though I deeply feel that there never ought to be a law upon the statute books which would recognize any class in American citizenship.

I ask, Mr. President, that this article on the last strike, which was published in the Washington Post of this morning, may be read into the RECORD. It is very short.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article referred to will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Washington Post of Tuesday, Apr. 16, 1918.]

THREE HUNDRED AND FIFTY QUIT WORK IN SHIPYARDS—NO REASON GIVEN BY MEN FOR THEIR WALK-OUT AT SPARROWS POINT.

BALTIMORE, April 15.

About 350 men employed in the shipyards at Sparrows Point went on strike this afternoon without giving the management of the company any reasons for their action or without stating any cause of grievance. General Manager Anderson, of the shipbuilding plant, said to-night that he knew of no reason for the men stopping work; that there had been no money troubles of any sort, no demands for increased pay, and no complaint about conditions of work.

"The men just walked out," he said, "without giving any explanation, and I have not the slightest knowledge of why they went out. The entire plant is now being operated under the direction of the Government, and if they had any grievances it would have been easy for them to have had them adjusted.

"Judge Gray, of Wilmington, Del., is the referee for this district in any labor disputes, but so far as I have heard no complaints have been laid before any of the Government officials who have to do with labor difficulties."

The men out are principally riveters, platers, and calkers.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from North Dakota is any more earnest in this matter than I am, so far as my private thoughts go. If I thought this conference report left matters where some adequate remedy could not be applied, I would oppose it by voting against it.

If we take section 5440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and couple it with the provisions of the conference report, it seems to me that we have a proper remedy if this report should be adopted and the bill should mature into a law. Section 5440, under the title of "Crimes," is as follows:

If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, all the parties to such conspiracy shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $1,000 and not more than $10,000, and to imprisonment not more than three years.

This is one remedy, I think, by a fair construction of the act, when a case is before a court provided by existing law. I believe the construction given by the Circuit Court of Appeals in the seventh district in applying the law to fraudulent elections, as I suggested a while ago, is not a more liberal construction even of a criminal statute—perhaps not as much so, when we consider the fact that we are now at war—than the interpretation of this same act, and applying it to strikes that limit or interfere with war munitions production in a way that amounts to an offense against the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me suggest to the Senator this difference: The injury must be one directly against the United States. The fraudulent election of an officer of the United States, of course, could well be construed to be an offense against the United States, affecting the United States in its governmental functions. But here is a private shipyard. The strike is not really and directly against the United States, but it is a strike organized against the employer.

The employer is not the United States, even though the United States is indirectly affected by the act. Now, I am fearful that the court will construe that to mean an act that directly, and not indirectly, affects the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to read, in connection with that same section, and by way of enforcing what the Senator from North Dakota has said, paragraph 3 of the text of the war act of Great Britain of 1915, as amended by the act of Parliament known as the munitions of war act of 1916, which reads as follows: I read from page 64 of the volume entitled, "Employers and Workmen: A Handbook Explanatory of their Duties and Responsibilities Under the Munitions of War Acts, 1915 and 1916," by Thomas Alexander Fyfe:

Any rule, practice, or custom not having the force of law which tends to restrict production or employment shall be suspended in the establishment, and if any person induces or attempts to induce any other person (whether any particular person or generally) to comply, or continue to comply, with such a rule, practice, or custom, that person shall be guilty of an offense under this act.

Under that provision undoubtedly a strike, as we commonly understand it, is a penal act or any of the acts which tend to or do restrict production.

In connection with section 5440 of the Revised Statutes now in force we ought to read sections 2 and 3 of the conference committee report:

That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy, any war material, war premises—

And so forth.

This is an affirmative act of destruction of war materials. Then in the following section, section 3:

That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully make or cause to be made in a defective manner, or attempt to make or cause to be made in a defective manner, any war material, as herein defined, or any tool, implement, machine, utensil, or receptacle used or employed in making, producing, manufacturing, or repairing any such war material, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisonment not more than 30 years, or both.

These two provisions, section 2 and section 3 of the report, coupled with section 5440 of the statutes it seems to me furnish a remedy. The Government now has control of all shipyards, so as to be directly affected by a strike. If it should be found upon actual application that the remedy is not forthcoming under these provisions I would be very glad then to vote for a measure that in express terms and by as positive provisions as can be employed in the English language cover anything that will interfere with the production of war material or for the preparation of this country to bear its full part in the war.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think if the Senator will read it more carefully he will probably vote against this conference report. Section 37 reads:

If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud—

And so forth.

Now, they must conspire to commit that which has been declared by law to be an offense. What it means is a criminal offense. The law has never declared a strike to be a criminal offense. Therefore the conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States is not fulfilled in a conspiracy to organize a strike which has not been declared an offense against the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe section 5440 is leveled against an offense committed against the United States so that it ordinarily must be a violation of some existing law. That evidently was in the mind of Congress when the original act was passed. But the interpretation of this act in applying it in the seventh district by the circuit court of appeals liberalized it considerably. It does not seem so restricted. It said that the fraudulent voting by persons, two or more, for an election of an officer of the United States, a Member of the House, was an offense against the United States. The election law does not specifically provide more than general declarations. It does not extend to a conspiracy for fraudulent or illegal voting or for the fraudulent or illegal election of a Member of the House. Still the court, in the liberal construction which they gave in order to advance the remedy that was intended by this section or other acts of the United States, found that it was a conspiracy, that the trial court properly instructed the jury on the nature of the act that it constituted a conspiracy, and so sustained the conviction.

I believe it may be a fair interpretation of this section 2 to say that a strike that leaves property in a condition where it will be injured is within section 2, or willfully interfering with or obstructing "the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in preparing for or carrying on the war." That is one distinct offense: "Shall willfully injure or destroy or shall attempt to injure or destroy." Ordinarily that is an affirmative act. It must be some one who breaks up a mold, who destroys ship timber, who destroys a shipway, or some affirmative act of destruction, taking away something that the Government is using or will use when completed.

A strike occurs by which a hindrance to the completion, say, of a shipway is the direct and natural result—not a remote consequence, but which directly follows from it. I think, however, it is within section 2, so that when this bill is enacted it becomes an offense against the laws of the United States, even bringing it within the strict interpretation that an offense against the United States must be some violation of existing law. At any rate, it would not require any more liberal construction of the section that is now the law to declare it an offense against the United States to interfere with the preparation of war material or the building of ships, but that of itself in time of war is an offense against the United States, than was declared in the case I have referred to, decided by the circuit court of appeals.

I would go as far, I know, as the Senator from North Dakota to produce results. I think it is tolerably evident by this time that if we are to get anything speedily out of this legislation we had as well adopt this report.

The House is in one mind, it seems, and somewhat persistently of that mind, and the majority of the Senate is of another mind. This presents a real purpose of a conference committee to adjust differences. It is not an attempt to legislate originally, as we have recently prohibited by a very wise rule of the Senate, it seems to me, but it is an honest attempt to effect a settlement of differences, to the end that legislation may result rather than continued differences. In view of that I believe this conference report has accomplished some good results. It is a forward step.

I would go further, Mr. President, than possibly this conference report has gone if I were the sole judge of it, but I am not. There are 94 Senators here, and besides that there are 435 Members of the House who are to be consulted. Most legislation is a matter of adjustment of different opinions. The radical neither gets what he wants nor does the extreme conservative, and usually it is a sort of happy medium, and that has marked the advance of legislation for the time being.

Probably that is the condition in which this conference report finds itself, but it is an advance, to say the least of it, over present conditions; and if the wisdom of this law shall demonstrate upon its application the necessity of a further step or if the folly of those against whom it may be directed shall by their continuous folly make it demonstrated that further legislation is required, they by that act of folly will produce the necessary votes in this and the other body, if it is shown that no other remedy is adequate except to amend this law or to pass additional measures.

Mr. President, I wish to add before this is left a statement about the general course of labor unions. I think the officers of the American Federation of Labor are sincere, loyal, and patriotic in their efforts to control the local unions and the members who are essential in the preparation of much war material and of the merchant shipping that we must have. I think whatever differences they have had with employers or with lawmaking powers—such of us as have not altogether agreed with them at times—will be fused in a common loyalty with all of us. I am sure I have a spirit ever of meeting them upon a common ground for the production of the necessary results that will give us adequate preparation for this struggle.

I have never had any hostility to labor unions as labor unions. I think they have a right to exist. I would vote at all times and would support their right to organize and to exist as lawful bodies. I want the same degree of tolerance shown by them to others outside of the union that they have a right to ask for themselves. When we concede that they have a right to exist; that through lawful organization their purposes are good; that they have done many good things in remedial legislation and given them protection by court decisions as well as legislation, whatever some of their members may say to the contrary, then they themselves are in duty bound to exercise the same liberal charity and the same broad toleration for other people who are not members of the union.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, it is true that there is a degree of narrowness on the part of some and some members of unions, a degree that would keep a man from earning a living in this world if he does not join a union. When it comes to that I have had frequent controversies with unions. I will have them as long as I live. They have no right to attempt to try to prevent my neighbor, because he is a member of a union or is not a member of a union, from earning his living. I am just as hostile to an employer who discharges a man because he is a member of a union as I am to one who discharges a man because he is not a member of a union. The right is correlative and mutual, and there can not be classes built up in this country based upon mere membership in any private organization. Because I may be a Free Mason or my neighbor may be a member of the Knights of Columbus is no reason for discriminating against each other in government. It is the end of civil government when that is permitted or tolerated in any country.

Nevertheless, official documents are in the possession of various persons in this country in private life coming from the departmental officers or heads of bureaus recognized by law as Government agencies, that provide before a man can get work in a certain part of this country, and I will be specific about it, on the northwest Pacific coast or the entire Pacific coast, every shipyard along the coast—before he can be sent to an employment agency from any part of the country under Government auspices he must signify that he will be a member of the union or is already a member of the union.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLLIS. Does the Senator happen to know why that is?

Mr. SHERMAN. I know in one place, and I will reply.

Mr. HOLLIS. Not where it is, but why it is?

Mr. SHERMAN. In the Seattle district the yards are all union yards. The shipbuilding companies are union employers.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then what good will it do for the United States Government to send a man there who is not a union man? Will he not be out of pocket his expenses?

Mr. SHERMAN. He would not get work in that locality, it is true, but the documents to which I refer say that no man can go to the Pacific coast to work in a shipyard unless he is a union man or has signified his willingness to become a union man. There is a shipyard or there are yards in the Northwest, at Seattle, possibly at Portland, or near there, on the Columbia River. These comprise at least what is called the Puget Sound country, the northwest Pacific coast. Those are union yards. There is a yard at San Francisco, there is one at Los Angeles, there is one at San Diego, and these are open-shop yards. The Government does not, through its agents, represent the conditions as they are to the men who are asking to be taken to the Pacific coast for work. Those are open-shop yards below, but not in the Seattle district. So far as it applies to that district it is true, and the statements made by the Senator are strictly correct, but when applied to the entire Pacific coast they are not in accordance with actual working conditions, and that far the documents which are sent out are misleading and taking advantage of the closed-shop conditions in the Puget Sound country.

In addition to that, there is at Newark, N. J., a shipbuilding yard that is, I think, a successful experiment, so far as I have any facts. It is a yard that assembles fabricated material. They are making an experiment, the first of this kind in the world. They are taking farmers' boys, they are taking clerks out of dry-goods stores, they are taking blacksmiths and bartenders, and in a very short time, in from 30 to 90 days, they are turning them into shipbuilders under an intensive course of training, because a large part of the material comes to that yard fabricated or framed according to the blue prints before it is brought there. It is a question of putting it together after it is on the ground. It is an assembling ground, in other words, for these workmen. They are making remarkable progress there.

These men, coming from every walk in life, not skilled laborers at the beginning, have under the foreman who gives them the instruction learned to be efficient men. They have not joined the union. Some of these newly skilled workmen under this course of training I have referred to do not care to join the unions. When the war is over they will go back to their before-the-war occupation, whatever it is. They have gone into the shipyards just like my neighbors' sons went into the Army before the draft law. Many of them volunteered. My own State and many of the Western States sent volunteers when there was no conscription law, sent them by the thousands, and they went, not because they wanted to be professional soldiers, but because they thought their country needed them. These men have left the farms and the blacksmith shops and the stores and have gone into the shipyards to give of their service because they think the country needs them. They will work 14 hours a day if the country needs them. They do not watch the clock. It is not their permanent occupation; they do not expect to be caulkers and riveters and hanger men all their lives. They expect, when the war is done and the ships are built and the treaty of peace has once more turned us back into our peaceful nation to return to their farms, their shops, and their blacksmithing—the things that they left when the war began and called for them. Under those conditions they do not join that union.

Let me call the attention of my friends who are the leading spirits of the American Federation of Labor to the fact that union men of patriotic sentiment who are loyal and who are listening to such manly, powerful appeals as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has made here to-day have dropped their differences and have touched elbows, and their sweat has fallen on the same forge with the nonunion men.

They have been fined by their local unions all the way from $100 to $1,000 apiece for working with nonunion men. Against that I protest. Against that I wish Mr. Gompers with his official influence would level an edict of his and tell them to remit those fines, loosen their rule, and tell the men to go into shipyards or a shipbuilding plant and build ships as fast as their employers know how.

That is the reason why I complain here that some optimistic views that are taken are not justified. They may say that strikes are ended. I know that is not true, all the way from the coal miner, who is bringing the fuel out to furnish power, up to the riveter in the shipyards. I know that strikes are in constant progress and others are threatened. I know that the whole soft-coal mining belt in the Mississippi Valley to-day is on the edge of a volcano. Say what they please, I know that strikes are contemplated now, and if by merely anticipating or telling about it we can throw daylight in and ventilate it before it happens we will be justified in taking the few hours we have spent this afternoon on this measure.

I wish to read what I consider good authority. I do not criticize our beloved Chief Executive. I criticize his ministers sometimes. I think they lead him to commit errors which by a sort of vicarious atonement ought to be laid on them, not on the President, who has too much to do; he can not keep track of all these details.

In a time when he had fewer advisers and could use his own clear thinking faculties, at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1907, he in an address delivered himself of these sentences:

> There is another as formidable an enemy to equality and freedom of opportunity as it, and that is the class formed by the labor organizations and leaders of the country representing only a small minority of the laboring men of the country, quite as monopolistic in spirit as the capitalists and quite as apt to corrupt and ruin our industries by their monopolies. If we are to restore the purity of our law and the freedom of our life we must see to it—in all moderation and in all fairness—that no class whatever is given artificial privileges or advantages; that our life move free again of fear or favor from whatever quarter for whatever class. What we need is not a square deal but no deal at all, an old-fashioned equality and harmony of conditions—a purged business and a purged law.

We certainly need a purged business, and if existing law will not give us the required relief, then we need not only a purged law but an amended law. I wish my voice could reach the locals in these unions, not only among my own immediate constituency but everywhere in this country. I should like to look the workmen in the face by the thousands and say to them what I think here and say this afternoon, say to them that when Haig sent out the touching appeal to the free Governments of the world that the English Army is fighting now with its back to the wall it ought to make every workman in this country willing within the limits of his health and strength to go to his work and stay there, with union or nonunion men, without complaint, as many hours in a day and as loyally as lies within his ability.

Not only did Haig send out that appeal to the world, but we remember, Mr. President, that on the 9th day of April Lloyd-George, speaking to the House of Commons, said, "We must admit that it is a grievous disappointment that we have not the forces from the American Army, magnificent men as they are, that we had hoped"; and only yesterday in London, by a cablegram that came across, the foreign secretary, Mr. Balfour, said, "What is now most pressingly required is that the fighting forces of the United States should be brought as speedily as possible into the field."

In addition to that, in another part of his address, Mr. Balfour uses this language:

> Perhaps the most important was because the German higher command were determined that the land struggle should come to an end before the United States could bring its forces to bear upon the western front.
> Before this great struggle had come to a conclusive end America would prove its determination to bear its full share in the tremendous struggle.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator state to whom Mr. Balfour was making that plea?

Mr. SHERMAN. It was to a delegation of laboring men representing the labor interests of his country. I wish that the magazine published by the American Federation of Labor, of which Mr. Gompers is the editor, would publish these words of appeal from the English Foreign Secretary; that it would publish the appeal of Gen. Haig, fighting with his back to the wall; that it would publish the appeal of Lloyd-George, voicing the disappointment that he inevitably must feel because we have not forces on the line sufficient to do what was necessary in resisting the army released from Russia and joined with the original line of Germany on the west front.

The day before Lloyd-George made the appeal the responsible censor, as already said on the floor of the Senate Chamber, while Lloyd-George was calling upon us to hurry, just the day before that, George Creel had said in the capital of this Republic, he thanked God we were unprepared when we went into the war. I have a stack of postal cards about that high [indicating], most of them sent out from my own State postmarked, that are all a part of the propaganda in which fortunately I feel a very sympathetic response, and it is much better than the slogan of George Creel. It was the last words spoken by Joseph H. Choate, "For God's sake, hurry up." I wish I could have that appeal put in Mr. Gompers's magazine and sent into every local of every union in this country—"For God's sake, hurry up."

Of course, it is fashionable to criticize Congress. What can we do? Pass laws. After they are passed I wish to remind Mr. Gompers of what he said; and that is why I criticized his statement on the floor of the Senate Chamber a few days ago, after we had rejected the former conference report, when he said in substance it did not make any difference what kind of a law Congress makes, we will not obey it. I want Mr. Gompers to obey the laws of this Republic and of the several States. I have sometimes feared he has spent more time breaking laws than he did in defending his country prior to our declaring war. I am glad now to join hands with him in a patriotic purpose, and to fuse with him some of the differences we may have had in the common design of defending our country. When peace comes I hope we may, with his help, work out under wise laws an industrial peace based on justice.

It is a doubtful method, though, of showing how one is devoted to one's country by saying in advance that if certain laws with which one does not agree are passed that it will not be possible to enforce them and they will be habitually disobeyed. It is a direct invitation to break such laws in the event of their enactment.

I do not wish to go any further, although at some opportune time we may discuss that question. The question now pending is the conference report. The main thing, after all, is for us to sink our differences. I shall vote for the conference report upon that ground and that only, and that we must at least make some forward step. Whether it be a long enough step or not I will not now stop to inquire. If we take this step, we can take a longer one when occasion requires. If it does not bring about the necessary result, we shall have to legislate further. One thing, however, is certain: The men who are losing priceless time, who are delaying the building of ships and the manufacture of material, who are obstructing and impeding our war program, if not by malicious intent by their overt omission to work, without any adequate cause, when a tribunal is furnished to adjust their differences by peaceful compromise and hearing—these men are not doing the lawful patriotic service to the country that we have a right to demand of them.

The Government can take every one of us who has not reached the age of 60 years, say, and can impress us into the service. I am like the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]; whenever the Government can do better with my service some place else than it can here, it has a right to reach out and take me, and I will cheerfully go. If the Government sees fit to put me on the farm or in the field again, if it sees fit to make me an apprentice in a shipyard, I will work at whatever I can do; but I will not join a union to help my country. If I am a member of a union and wish to belong to one, I shall not leave it to help my country. I will fight just as hard for my right to stay in a union as I will for the right of a man to stay out of a union and earn an honest living if he wishes to.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, my only excuse for saying a word further is that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has seen fit to make me the special target of his remarks this afternoon. I wish to say to the distinguished Senator that it is not necessary for him to plead with me to try to make our Government, our Army, and our workingmen most efficient for winning this war. It is not necessary for the distinguished Senator to ask me to assume that I have a son in order to point the argument. I have a son. It is not necessary for the distinguished Senator to ask me to assume that that son is in the service of the United States. He is in the service of the United States. You will not find him sitting in a swivel chair in one of the departments; you will not find him in an easy and safe place. He is in the most difficult and most dangerous service of the United States Army; he is in the flying section of the Aviation Corps. That is no credit to me; he did not do it to please me; he did it of his own will; but I am as anxious as is the Senator from North Dakota or any other Senator to have him furnished with the best possible equipment, and to have this war speeded up and terminated as speedily and as successfully as possible.

The Senator wants more ships and I want more ships; but the way to get more ships is not to pass a law saying to the workingman that he shall not quit work, if the conditions are not what he thinks they should be. If I believe that passing a law would prevent strikes, would make this Government more efficient, then I would vote for it; we may come to that; but I believe the only way to get the greatest efficiency out of labor is to treat laborers as if they had intelligence and patriotism.

I am willing to join with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and urge Mr. Gompers to put in his official magazine and in his communications to the local unions "Hurry up"; I have no doubt Mr. Gompers is doing that now and has done it to the best of his ability since the war started; but you can not make men work by passing laws; you can not make men do unjust things by passing laws. I join with Mr. Gompers not as a threat, but as advice to Senators of the United States that if they pass a law forbidding peaceful strikes that law can not be enforced.

The conditions in the aircraft service are not due to labor. If there is a fall-down in the airplane program, it is due to the falling down of capitalists; it is not the fault of Congress. Congress acted promptly, and appropriated $640,000,000 for airplanes. It turned it over to the captains of industry of this country, who enlisted the most efficient and the most famous engineers they could find in the effort to secure the best motor and the best airplane that could be obtained. I do not know wherein labor has delayed that program one day. The delay is not the fault of labor; it is the fault of the employers of labor, the captains of industry, of whom we hear so much.

It was only a few years ago that a distinguished man, now a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, called attention to the inefficiency of the railroads. I think his statement was that if the railroads were properly run a million dollars a day could be saved. I have no doubt that was true of the railroads, and I have no doubt that it is true of business generally. We have got ahead in this country because we have not had to compete with other people; we have got ahead because of this very spirit of American labor—the spirit of freedom and independence, of working for themselves—but we have got to get down to earth now and require service not only of labor but of the men who employ labor—of capital. Senators stand up here and say how much they love labor and how much they are willing to give labor; but when it comes down to voting something that will help labor they are content with giving them three cheers and letting it go at that.

The Senator from North Dakota, with great industry, has produced a list of strikes in this country—not of to-day but of March 11—and, considering the greatness of the country and the number of men employed, it is a very short list. The strikes in this country to-day are inconsiderable. The Senator has had to go into the cloak room and dig among all the newspapers we have here to produce just one present instance of a strike in this country, and that is the most ridiculous report a man ever heard—350 men in a shipyard striking without any grievance. No one who gives it a moment's thought will believe it. It is an incorrect report, and can not be otherwise.

Hog Island was on the list of strikes. They have not lost a week's work at Hog Island on account of strikes. They had just one strike there, and it lasted 30 minutes; but that was put on the list, and it is figured out with a pencil and we are told how many days and months and years of labor have been lost through that strike.

But, Mr. President, I have said all I want to say upon this subject. The Senator from North Dakota intimated at least that Senators voted a certain way because they wanted labor votes. I do not want a labor vote. There is no man in the United States who has less need for labor votes than have I. I never belonged to a labor union; I never was counsel for a labor union; I never advised a labor union; but I do feel that up to this time laborers have needed help more than have employers, and they have had less help. Labor is the side that is down and needs to be raised. If the time ever comes when labor unions are getting more than they are fairly entitled to and the poor employer is ground in the dirt, then I will take hold and help the poor employer just as hard as I have tried to help the poor laboring man in the past.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I was not aware that my few remarks were directed to the Senator from New Hampshire entirely. I admit the fact that I was facing in his direction, and I paid my respects to the Senator's defense of the labor unions and insisted that he had been certainly a very good friend to labor organizations. Other than that, the cap which I was making was not especially fitted for the Senator, and I had not even invited him to put it on. If he did so, it was without any intent upon my own part.

The Senator says that the way to get men to work is to treat them right. I should like to know wherein the conditions have not been made right for the laborers since this war began. They have been paid from two to three times the wages that they have ever earned before. So far, therefore, as compensation is concerned, they never had such splendid treatment as they have had since this war began; and yet there have never been so many strikes in the history of the country or so many days lost by strikes as since the United States entered into this war, only a little over a year ago.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator give his authority for that statement, or is it merely his opinion?

Mr. McCUMBER. My judgment, from all the sources of information that I can obtain, is that there have been more days lost because of strikes in the essential industries of the United States during the last year than in any other equal period of the history of the United States. They have not all been strikes of 350 men. Only a little while ago about 6,000 men, carpenters alone, struck in shipyards.

We have treated labor well. They have been treated well by Congress. They have not only been made the equals of any other class in the United States, but they have been made the superiors of any other class in the United States. We have put laws upon our statute books—I admit I voted against them—which would make an act if committed by the Senator from New Hampshire and myself a crime, but which if committed by two members of a labor union would not be a crime.

In view of those facts, I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire is justified in saying that labor does not have fair treatment in the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States. Labor has always had more than fair treatment, if equality means fairness.

The Senator from New Hampshire speaks about the boys being conscripted. Mr. President, I would be ashamed if I had any relative within the serving age who was not in the Army or the Navy of the United States. I would not myself mention the fact that my son or brother or any other relative were in the Army or the Navy, because that is but a common duty, incumbent upon every son and every brother within the conscription age. I would disown a son that was not patriotic enough to enlist in his country's service in this great war. But, Mr. President, that has nothing to do with the question; that would be doing nothing more than a common duty, and I would not allow any boy of mine to even wait to be conscripted. I am not condemning those who have been conscripted, because there are many who would like to have enlisted could they have done so.

Mr. HOLLIS. Will the Senator permit me to say that my son volunteered and was not conscripted?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; and so would the Senator himself have volunteered if he were within the age. Now, if the country has a right to call your boy to the colors to serve in the trenches of France, to face bullets, to battle 24 hours of the day, then the Government has a right to call upon his brother or his comrade in the United States to work at least 8 hours to furnish him with the material with which to carry on that warfare and to furnish ships to provide him sufficient support to enable him to meet the enemy on the field of battle.

We ought to be fair. I do not think the Senator is fair when he says that capital was responsible for the delay in the aircraft production program. I wish the Senator or anybody else would tell me what capital had to do with it. I want to say frankly that labor was not responsible for that delay in any way; that was a delay unquestionably due to those who had the authority to go ahead and construct machines; but whether it was their fault or misfortune we must look to them alone, and we can not place the responsibility for their failure upon either capital or labor.

But the Senator and I both want the same thing; we want every American citizen to perform his duty in this time of war, and if anyone is slacking in the building of ships, he is committing a crime against his Government, and the Senator and myself both want him to cease committing that offense and to perform his duty. That is all I have to say, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS IN MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will agree again to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business in order that I may present an important matter which I think is vital.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I realize the importance of the matter the Senator has in charge, and I therefore ask consent that the bill alluded to, which is now the unfinished business, be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the bill in charge of the Senator from Georgia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate shall presently consider the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to naturalization. I will say by way of explaining the request that there are two great purposes sought to be accomplished by this bill: One is to provide for the naturalization of 123 000 soldiers of the United States whom we can not with either safety or justice to themselves send abroad until this is done. The second purpose, although hardly so important and hardly so pressing, is not unimportant, and that is to readjust our naturalization laws to meet war conditions. I hope the Senate will consent to consider this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to naturalization, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," approved June 29, 1906, be, and is hereby, amended by adding seven new subdivisions, as follows:

"Seventh. Any native-born Filipino of the age of 21 years and upward who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States and who has enlisted or may hereafter enlist in the United States Navy or Marine Corps or the Naval Auxiliary Service, and who may be honorably discharged therefrom after an enlistment of not less than four years, or who may receive an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment; or any alien, or any Porto Rican not a citizen of the United States, of the age of 21 years and upward, who has enlisted or may hereafter enlist in the armies of the United States, either the Regular or the Volunteer Forces, the National Guard, or Naval Militia of any State, Territory, or District, or the State militia in Federal service, or in the United States Navy or Marine Corps, or in the United States Coast Guard, or who has served for three years on board of any vessel of the United States Government, or for three years on board of merchant or fishing vessels of the United States of more than 20 tons burden, and while still in the service on a reenlistment or reappointment, or within six months after an honorable discharge or separation therefrom, or while on furlough to the Army Reserve or Regular Army Reserve after honorable service, may, on presentation of the required declaration of intention petition for naturalization without proof of the required five years' residence within the United States if upon examination by the representative of the Bureau of Naturalization, in accordance with the requirements of this subdivision it is shown that such residence can not be established; any alien serving in the military or naval service of the United States during the time this country is at war may file his petition for naturalization without making the preliminary declaration of intention and without proof of the required five years' residence within the United States; any alien declarant who has served in the United States Army or Navy, or the Philippine Constabulary, and has been honorably discharged therefrom, and has been accepted for service in either the military or naval service of the United States on the condition that he becomes a citizen of the United States, may file his petition for naturalization upon proof of continuous residence within the United States for the three years immediately preceding his petition, by two witnesses, citizens of the United States, and in these cases only residence in the Philippine Islands and the Panama Canal Zone by aliens may be considered residence within the United States for purposes of naturalization; and any alien, or any person owing permanent allegiance to the United States embraced within this subdivision, may file his petition for naturalization in the most convenient court without proof of residence within its jurisdiction, notwithstanding the limitation upon the jurisdiction of the courts specified in section 3 of the act of June 29, 1906, provided he appears with his two witnesses before the appropriate representative of the Bureau of Naturalization and passes the preliminary examination hereby required before filing his petition for naturalization in the office of the clerk of the court, and in each case the record of this examination shall be offered in evidence by the representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization and made a part of the record at the original and any subsequent hearings, and, except as otherwise herein provided, the honorable discharge certificate of such alien, or person owing permanent allegiance to the United States, or the certificate of service for the time required showing good conduct, signed by a duly authorized officer, or by the masters of said vessels, shall be deemed prima facie rebuttable evidence to satisfy all of the requirements of residence within the United States and within the State, Territory, or District, and good moral character required by law, when supported by the affidavits of two witnesses, citizens of the United States, identifying the applicant as the person named in the certificate or honorable discharge, and in those cases only where the alien is actually in the military or naval service of the United States, the certificate of arrival shall not be filed with the petition for naturalization in the manner prescribed; and any petition for naturalization filed under the provisions of this subdivision may be heard immediately, notwithstanding the law prohibits the hearing of a petition for naturalization during 30 days preceding any election in the jurisdiction of the court. Any alien, who, at the passage of this act, is in the military service of the United States, including the Czecho-Slovak and Polish forces, who may not be within the jurisdiction of any court authorized to naturalize aliens, may file his petition for naturalization without appearing in person in the office of the clerk of the court and shall not be required to take the prescribed oath of allegiance in open court. The petition shall be verified by the affidavits of at least two credible witnesses who are citizens of the United States, and who shall prove in their affidavits the portion of the residence that they have personally known the applicant to have resided within the United States. The time of military service may be established by the affidavits of at least two other citizens of the United States, which, together with the oath of allegiance, may be taken in accordance with the terms of section 1750 of the Revised Statutes of the United States after notice from and under regulations of the Bureau of Naturalization. Such affidavits and oath of allegiance shall be admitted in evidence in any original or appellate naturalization proceeding without proof of the genuineness of the seal or signature or of the official character of the officer before whom the affidavits and oath of allegiance were taken, and shall be filed by the representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization at the hearing as provided by section 11 of the act of June 29, 1906. Members of the Naturalization Bureau and Service may be designated by the Secretary of Labor to administer oaths relating to the administration of the naturalization law; and the requirement of section 10 of notice to take depositions to the United States attorneys is repealed, and the duty they perform under section 15 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 596), may also be performed by the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization: Provided, That it shall not be lawful to make a declaration of intention before the clerk of any court on election day or during the period of 30 days preceding the day of holding any election in the jurisdiction of the court: Provided further, That service by aliens upon vessels other than of American registry, whether continuous or broken, shall not be considered as residence for naturalization purposes within the jurisdiction of the United States, and such aliens can not secure residence for naturalization purposes during service upon vessels of foreign registry.

During time when the United States is at war no clerk of a United States court shall charge or collect a naturalization fee from an alien in the military service of the United States for filing his petition or issuing the certificate of naturalization upon admission to citizenship, and no clerk of any State court shall charge or collect any fee for this service unless the laws of the State require such charge to be made, in which case nothing more than the portion of the fee required to be paid to the State shall be charged or collected. A full accounting for all of these transactions shall be made to the Bureau of Naturalization in the manner provided by section 13 of the act of June 29, 1906.

"Eighth. That every seaman, being an alien, shall, after his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, and after he shall have served three years upon such merchant or fishing vessels of the United States, be deemed a citizen of the United States for the purpose of serving on board any such merchant or fishing vessel of the United States, anything to the contrary in any act of Congress notwithstanding; but such seaman shall, for all purposes of protection as an American citizen, be deemed such after the filing of his declaration of intention to become such citizen: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be taken or construed to repeal or modify any portion of the act approved March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1164, ch. 153), being an act to promote the welfare of American seamen.

"Ninth. That for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Bureau of Naturalization of sending the names of the candidates for citizenship to the public schools and otherwise promoting instruction and training in citizenship responsibilities of applicants for naturalization authority is hereby given for the reimbursement of the printing and binding appropriation of the Department of Labor upon the records of the Treasury Department from the naturalization fees deposited in the Treasury through the Bureau of Naturalization for the cost of publishing the citizenship textbook prepared and to be distributed by the Bureau of Naturalization to those candidates for citizenship only who are in attendance upon the public schools, such reimbursement to be made upon statements by the Commissioner of Naturalization of books actually delivered to such student candidates for citizenship, and a monthly naturalization bulletin, and in this duty to secure the aid of and cooperate with the official State and national organizations, including those concerned with vocational education and including personal services in the District of Columbia, and to aid the local Army exemption boards and cooperate with the War Department in locating declarants subject to the Army draft and expenses incident thereto.

"Tenth. That any person not an alien enemy, who resided uninterruptedly within the United States during the period of five years next preceding May 1, 1910, and was on that date otherwise qualified to become a citizen of the United States, except that he had not made the declaration of intention required by law and who during or prior to that time, because of misinformation regarding his citizenship status erroneously exercised the rights and performed the duties of a citizen of the United States in good faith, may file the petition for naturalization prescribed by law without making the preliminary declaration of intention required of other aliens, and upon satisfactory proof to the court that he has so acted may be admitted as a citizen of the United States upon complying in all respects with the other requirements of the naturalization law.

"Eleventh. No alien who is a native, citizen, subject, or denizen of any country, State, or sovereignty with which the United States is at war shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States unless he made his declaration of intention within seven years prior to the existence of the state of war, or was at that time entitled to become a citizen of the United States, without making a declaration of intention, or unless his petition for naturalization shall then be pending and is otherwise entitled to admission, notwithstanding he shall be an alien enemy at the time and in the manner prescribed by the laws passed upon that subject: Provided, That no alien embraced within this subdivision shall have his petition for naturalization called for a hearing except after the written consent of the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization shall have been received by the clerk of the court and exhibited to the court, and the petition shall be given no final hearing except in open court and in the presence of the representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization, whose objection shall cause the petition to be continued from time to time for so long as the Government may require: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be taken or construed to interfere with or prevent the apprehension and removal, agreeably to law, of any alien enemy at any time previous to the actual naturalization of such alien; and section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed: Provided further, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, from time to time, by proclamation or otherwise, to except natives, citizens, subjects, or denizens of any country with which the United States is or may be at war, or any individual or class thereof, from the classification of alien enemies, and thereupon they shall have the privilege to apply for naturalization; and for the purposes of carrying into effect the provisions of this section, including personal services in the District of Columbia, the sum of $400,000 is hereby appropriated, to be available until June 30, 1919, including travel expenses for members of the Bureau of Naturalization and its field service only, and the provisions of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes shall not be applicable in any way to this appropriation.

"Twelfth. That no person who, while a citizen of the United States and during the existing war in Europe, entered the military or naval service of any country at war with a country with which the United States is now at war, shall be deemed to have lost his citizenship by reason of any oath or obligation taken by him for the purpose of entering such service, and the act (Public 55, 65th Cong., approved Oct. 5, 1917), is hereby repealed.

"Thirteenth. That any person who is serving in the military or naval forces of the United States at the termination of the existing war, and any person who before the termination of the existing war may have been honorably discharged from the military or naval services of the United States on account of disability incurred in line of duty, shall, if he applies to the proper court for admission as a citizen of the United States, be relieved from the necessity of proving that immediately preceding the date of his application he has resided continuously within the United States the time required by law of other aliens, or within the State, Territory, or District for the year immediately preceding the date of his petition for naturalization, but his petition for naturalization shall be supported by the affidavits of two credible witnesses, citizens of the United States, identifying the petitioner as the person named in the certificate of honorable discharge, which said certificate may be accepted as evidence of good moral character required by law, and he shall comply with the other requirements of the naturalization law."

SEC. 2. That the following provisions of law be, and they are hereby, repealed: Sections 2166 and 2174 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America and so much of an act approved July 26, 1894, entitled "An act making provisions for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," being chapter 165 of the laws of 1894 (28 Stat. L., p. 124), reading as follows: "Any alien of the age of 21 years and upward who has enlisted or may enlist in the United States Navy or Marine Corps and has served or may hereafter serve five consecutive years in the United States Navy or one enlistment in the United States Marine Corps and has been or may hereafter be honorably discharged, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition without any previous declaration of his intention to become such; and the court admitting such alien shall, in addition to proof of good moral character, be satisfied by competent proof of such person's service in and honorable discharge from the United States Navy or Marine Corps," and so much of an act approved June 30, 1914, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes," being chapter 130 of the laws of 1914 (38 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 392), reading as follows: "Any alien of the age of 21 years and upward who may under existing law become a citizen of the United States, who has served or may hereafter serve for one enlistment of not less than four years in the United States Navy or Marine Corps, and who has received therefrom an honorable discharge or an ordinary discharge, with recommendation for reenlistment, or who has completed four years in the Revenue-Cutter Service and received therefrom an honorable discharge or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment, or who has completed four years of honorable service in the naval auxiliary service, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition without any previous declaration of his intention to become such, and without proof of residence on shore, and the court admitting such alien shall, in addition to proof of good moral character, be satisfied by competent proof from naval or revenue-cutter sources of such service: Provided, That an honorable discharge from the Navy, Marine Corps, Revenue-Cutter Service, or the Naval Auxiliary Service, or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment, shall be accepted as proof of good moral character: Provided further, That any court which now has or may hereafter be given jurisdiction to naturalize aliens as citizens of the United States may immediately naturalize any alien applying under and furnishing the proof prescribed by the foregoing provisions"; and so much of section 3 of an act approved June 25, 1910 (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 630), reading as follows: "That paragraph 2 of section 4 of an act entitled 'An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States,' approved June 29, 1906, be amended by adding, after the proviso in paragraph 2 of section 4 of said act, the following: Provided further, That any person belonging to the class of persons authorized and qualified under existing law to become a citizen of the United States, who has resided constantly in the United States during a period of five years next preceding May 1, 1910, who, because of misinformation in regard to his citizenship or the requirements of the law governing the naturalization of citizens has labored and acted under the impression that he was or could become a citizen of the United States and has in good faith exercised the rights or duties of a citizen or intended citizen of the United States because of such wrongful information and belief may, upon making a showing of such facts satisfactory to a court having jurisdiction to issue papers of naturalization to an alien, and the court in its judgment believes that such person has been for a period of more than five years entitled upon proper proceedings to be naturalized as a citizen of the United States, receive from the said court a final certificate of naturalization, and said court may issue such certificate without requiring proof of former declaration by or on part of such person of their intention to become a citizen of the United States, but such applicant for naturalization shall comply in all other respects with the law relative to the issuance of final papers of naturalization to aliens."

That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with or repugnant to the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; but nothing in this act shall repeal or in any way enlarge section 2169 of the Revised Statutes, except as specified in the seventh subdivision of this act and under the limitation therein defined: Provided, That for the purposes of the prosecution of all crimes and offenses against the naturalization laws of the United States which may have been committed prior to this act the statutes and laws hereby repealed shall remain in full force and effect: Provided further, That as to all aliens who, prior to January 1, 1900, served in the armies of the United States and were honorably discharged therefrom, section 2166 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be and remain in full force and effect, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 3. That all certificates of naturalization granted by courts of competent jurisdiction prior to December 31, 1918, upon petitions for naturalization filed prior to January 31, 1918, upon declarations of intention filed prior to September 27, 1906, are hereby declared to be valid in so far as the declaration of intention is concerned, but shall not be by this act further validated or legalized.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. That completes the committee amendments, and unless some Senator desires to question me about some of the details——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I do not desire to ask any questions. If the Senator is through, I have an amendment which I should like to offer to the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. It is in the shape of an additional section. I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the amendments heretofore agreed to, the following:

No citizen or subject of any country which by law permits its citizens or subjects to retain their citizenship or allegiance in such country after being naturalized in another country shall be eligible for naturalization in the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on the 1st of January, 1914, the German Government promulgated a law or decree that a subject of the German Empire might be naturalized in any other country and if he filed a statement with an official of the German Government he could retain his allegiance to the German Empire. That is, he could become a citizen of the United States by our process of naturalization and yet remain a German subject. It was one of those far-sighted things that Germany is apt to do. It was also one of those, I think, villainous things that she is apt to do, for this simple reason:

No man could possibly take naturalization in the United States and retain his allegiance to the German Emperor without committing perjury of the grossest kind. The oath which a foreign-born citizen takes is an extremely strong oath. It not only renounces all other allegiance, but it especially renounces allegiance to the sovereign of the country from which the alien comes; and this was a deliberate attempt to allow Germans to become naturalized in this country while they remained subjects of the German Empire, and held their allegiance to the Kaiser.

Mr. President, I think that is entirely wrong. I do not think we ought to permit men to be naturalized where they have the opportunity to commit this perjury and attempt this dual citizenship. No doubt there may be cases where they desire naturalization honestly, and do not file the certificate with the official, but we have no means whatever of knowing that—none whatever. It would be impossible to find out. The German could file a certificate in Germany before he left that country. He could file it with the consul here. We have no access to their records, and a man in this country who gives himself out and parades as a naturalized citizen, and who all the time is a German, is a dangerous citizen, and ought not to be admitted. I see no way of getting at it except by a general provision of this kind. It is quite true that at this moment Germans are alien enemies, and can not be naturalized, but it is just as well to prepare against the future.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. I yield; certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has just stated, and I think correctly, that German aliens could not now be naturalized.

Mr. LODGE. I understand not. They are enemy aliens.

Mr. POMERENE. That is my understanding about it, too. That being so, might it not be for the best to let this amendment rest until some time in the future? It certainly would do no good now, and a new situation may arise later on.

Mr. LODGE. It could do no possible harm now. I think, as a broad general proposition, that we ought not to admit the possibility of such a thing as that. We have always been the champions against the doctrine of indefeasible allegiance, and I do not think we ought to allow our contention with respect to that doctrine to be impaired; and we have always held, as the necessary corollary of that doctrine, that where the man gave up his prior allegiance to the country of his origin, he became an American citizen. The thing is false from beginning to end.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the eleventh subdivision of the bill, on page 10. I want to ask him what effect, in his opinion, the proposed amendment would have upon that subdivision? It provides:

No alien who is a native, citizen, subject, or denizen of any country, State, or sovereignty with which the United States is at war shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States unless he made his declaration of intention within seven years prior to the existence of the state of war.

That permits the naturalization of a German citizen who had filed his declaration of intention within seven years of our declaration of war. Then, further—or was at that time—

I assume that the words "at that time" refer to the declaration of war, although that is not entirely clear—entitled to become a citizen of the United States, without making a declaration of intention—

And so forth. Is it not true that so far as German aliens are concerned the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts would entirely destroy the operation of the parts of the bill which I have read?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I had no such intention, and I do not think it does. My amendment can not be retroactive. These are people who have gained another status entirely.

Mr. CUMMINS. It would not be necessary for the amendment to be retroactive. The Senator's amendment would operate from now on, and the naturalization is to take place in the future.

Mr. LODGE. That is very easily met, Mr. President, by inserting the word "hereafter," if there is any doubt. I do not think there is. I had no desire to interfere with the class of people to whom this subdivision refers.

Mr. CUMMINS. I mention that because I chink the amendment would interfere with them unless it were somewhat modified.

Mr. LODGE. I think the word "hereafter" will make it perfectly clear.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Secretary state the amendment with that change in it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Massachusetts modifies his amendment so that it will read:

No citizen or subject of any country which by law permits its citizens or subjects to retain their citizenship or allegiance in such country after being naturalized in another country shall hereafter be eligible for naturalization in the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the wording of his amendment. These naturalizations which are to take place under the eleventh subdivision are hereafter to take place. They have not yet taken place, and therefore the amendment which he has proposed, even with the modification——

Mr. LODGE. It is easy enough to put in "except as provided in subdivision 11."

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there ought to be some modification of that kind.

Mr. LODGE. I will modify it so that it will read "shall hereafter be eligible for naturalization in the United States except as herein provided in subdivision 11."

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts another question, and I ask it purely out of unfamiliarity with the subject myself. Wherein does the description of nations which have a regulation of the character referred to in the amendment differ in status from those nations which refuse to recognize the right of expatriation?

Mr. LODGE. Why, Mr. President, I think it is entirely different. For instance, France and Italy both claim that they have the right to military service even after their natives have become naturalized here. That we have always denied. It is a conflict of law. This is wholly different from that. They deny the right of their people to expatriate themselves and become Americans. Germany, in her law, does not deny that right; but she expressly invites them to become naturalized here, retaining at the same time citizenship in their own country. That is, she invites them to commit perjury in order that they may pass as American citizens. To me, there is a broad distinction.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator can hold no greater abhorrence for the general view of the matter held by Germany than I do; but I think that those nations which deny the right of expatriation, and insist that an immigrant from their own sovereignty who comes here and becomes naturalized shall still be subject to allegiance to them, are just as reprehensible as far as we are concerned as those that have made a special regulation about it.

Mr. LODGE. I can not see it that way. The only nations that do deny the right of expatriation are Turkey and Russia.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. We are put upon notice that they deny the right of expatriation. Germany does not deny the right of expatriation. She says to her people: "You may go to the United States and be naturalized and expatriate yourselves, if you want to; but we give you the opportunity to retain your German allegiance, so that when war comes, or anything of that kind, you may consider yourselves Germans, if you choose." It seems to me very different from putting us upon notice, as those other countries do.

Mr. CUMMINS. One other difficulty would be that, no matter how much the alien desired to throw off the yoke of his native country, no matter how deep his resentment might be against his own country, simply because his own country had that kind of regulation he would be denied citizenship in the United States. It seems to me that you are visiting rather a severe penalty upon the man who really desires to change his sovereignty and his allegiance.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have referred to that already. I see the difficulty of that; but how are we to know? A man who will perjure himself when he renounces allegiance would not hesitate to perjure himself if he were asked whether he had made any reservation, or whether he had filed a certificate with the German Government. It seems to me to create a perfectly false class in this country—men who have a double allegiance. A man should have but one. I do not believe, myself, that such a thing can exist.

Mr. CUMMINS. If we should apply any such principle or rule to people who hereafter come from Germany into the United States it would meet with my entire approval. I shrink a little from visiting that penalty upon Germans who have already come to the United States, who are already here, who want to become American citizens, and who can be prevented from doing so simply because their own country, with which they have no sympathy whatever—I hope they have not; most of them have not—passed a law or makes a regulation of this kind.

Mr. LODGE. Those who are already here I do not want to cut off, as I have already said to the Senator. I do not want to cut them off. I will make it so that it can apply only in the future, so that no German coming from Germany now can be naturalized. You may confound the innocent with the guilty under that rule.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am willing to absolutely prohibit the immigration of any Germans——

Mr. LODGE. So am I.

Mr. CUMMINS. And make it applicable for a good many years to come.

Mr. LODGE. But, from the national point of view, how can we as a Nation admit the proposition of a double allegiance? It seems to me that it is impossible to expect us to admit it. I think the amendment should be modified, if the Secretary will make the change, so as to read, "subject to the provisions of subdivision 11."

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, let me ask whether the amendment has been read?

Mr. LODGE. It has been read three or four times. It is a very short one.

Mr. HOLLIS. Will the Senator state what it is? I have been trying to gather its import.

Mr. LODGE. The object is to prevent the naturalization of Germans in this country while they have a law, which has been promulgated in Germany, permitting them to become naturalized here and at the same time, by filing a certificate with some German official, retain allegiance to the Empero".

Mr. HOLLIS. Then, might a German become a citizen if he did not file that certificate? Is that the point?

Mr. LODGE. If there was any way of finding it out.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then, would the Senator's amendment absolutely prohibit the naturalization of Germans?

Mr. LODGE. It would prohibit any German, after the war, from being naturalized here until they had this law in Germany changed.

I was about to say that Germany is the only country, so far as I am aware, that has ever attempted or thought of such a provision as that. As I said to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], Russia and Turkey deny the right of expatriation, and we are on notice with regard to that, which is a different thing entirely. Our laws operate in favor of those who are here; but in this case the German Government provides that her subjects may commit perjury and remain loyal Germans while apparently naturalized American citizens. That seems to me a very unwholesome situation, an unsound one from every point of view, and one that no nation ought to tolerate.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I am in such thorough accord with the views of the Senator from Massachusetts on immigration and on sharply restricting immigration, and in such thorough accord with the general proposition that he has in mind when he presents this amendment, that I hesitate to differ with him about it; and yet I feel that justice to the department, to the Bureau of Naturalization, and to the committee that handled this subject requires me at least to state the difficulty that we see in his amendment. I will say that it was considered by the Committee on Immigration—not in these words, but the proposition was considered by the committee—because the Senator kindly gave me the benefit of his counsel, and I was much impressed by it, and submitted his suggestion to the committee.

In the first place, we must remember that the House bill which we are amending, and which we are passing in the form of a substitute, was a bill which provided that alien enemies who became such by virtue of the declaration of war of this country against the countries from which these aliens came, and who therefore could not prosecute their pending petitions for naturalization in the courts of the land, should be allowed to go on with their actions at law in the courts, provided the petitions were pending before the declaration of war. The Senate committee thought that was too broad and too dangerous a proposition to adopt without a great many limitations. The Secretary of War, as I remember, protested very earnestly against it, and said that there was very great danger that great harm might be done by it if the bill were passed in the form in which the House of Representatives passed it. So that as a substitute on that one question, for the action of the House, the Senate committee has proposed the eleventh subdivision, on page 10 of the printed bill, which I will read:

Eleventh. No alien who is a native, citizen, subject, or denizen of any country, State, or sovereignty with which the United States is at war shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States unless he made his declaration of intention within seven years prior to the existence of the state of war, or was at that time entitled to become a citizen of the United States, without making a declaration of intention, or unless his petition for naturalization shall then be pending and is otherwise entitled to admission, notwithstanding he shall be an alien enemy at the time and in the manner prescribed by the laws passed upon that subject.

In substance that would be, without the modification contained in the proviso, the House provision, but we put this additional safeguard around it:

Provided, That no alien embraced within this subdivision shall have his petition for naturalization called for a hearing except after the written consent of the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization shall have been received by the clerk of the court and exhibited to the court, and the petition shall be given no final hearing except in open court and in the presence of the representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization, whose objection shall cause the petition to be continued from time to time for so long as the Government may require: Provided, however—

The balance of the subdivision I need not read.

We took the House proposition, and we said, "Even if these petitions were pending at the time war was declared, and even if the legal rights of these people had accrued and were perfected prior to the declaration of war, still we will not permit them to become citizens of the United States by the process of naturalization unless the Government is satisfied of their loyalty and unless the Government has no objection to the proceedings." We thought that was a wise precaution in time of war.

Now, let us see where the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts would lead us. We are informed by the Naturalization Bureau that there are many thousands of these people, so-called German-Americans, who are of undoubted loyalty to this country. It is the purpose of the Government to try to separate the loyal from the disloyal. They have ample appropriations and an ample force to make inquiries and to ascertain the truth in these cases. If the Senator from Massachusetts should secure the adoption of his amendment in such a form that it will apply to these aliens resident in the United States who came from Germany, and who are perfectly loyal, the fact that Germany—the Government that they want to repudiate forever, the Government that they want to leave for our Government—has enacted a law over there that they could not help will forever bar them and all of them from citizenship in this country, although it is admitted that they are perfectly loyal.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I am entirely in agreement with what he is saying——

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator's amendment is not, though.

Mr. LODGE. And I have so amended the amendment that it excludes all those people.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator has done so?

Mr. LODGE. Yes. I have asked the Secretary to put in those words.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will stop now and ask the Secretary to read it in my time. I want to be sure on that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hereafter, subject to the provisions of subdivision 11 of this act, no citizen or subject of any country which by law permits its citizens or subjects to retain their citizenship or allegiance in such country after being naturalized in another country shall be eligible for naturalization in the United States.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think that meets that particular objection. I think I ought to say, in behalf of the department and of the bureau, that the department contends that it already has ample machinery of law to meet this situation; that the courts have held, under existing statutes, that proceedings lie to cancel citizenship on the ground that the oath of allegiance was taken with a mental reservation, and that such proceedings have been had, and successfully had, by the Government in this country within recent months. They contend that wherever they can make out a case against one of these people for doing that sort of thing—and they say they have done it in a good many cases—they can cancel his naturalization by court proceedings. For that reason the bureau did not believe there was any necessity for quite so drastic a provision as this.

I want to say that generally I am in sympathy with the main proposition laid down by the Senator from Massachusetts. I do not believe in a divided allegiance. I want no citizen to swear loyalty to this country while in his heart he is loyal or partly loyal to some foreign prince or potentate.

I do not object to establishing a policy of that sort if it does not work a grievous injustice to many honest people. Let us see what might happen. I do not know what the immigration conditions will be after this war is over; but I expect when we face that question, if it is any part of my duty to face it, the Senator from Massachusetts will not be more anxious than I am to have as little foreign immigration into this country as is possible, and that no man in this Chamber on either side will possibly go beyond my position in that regard. I think one of the great troubles we have had in this country is that we have had too much undigested and indigestible foreign immigration already. But be that as it may, extreme as I am in my views on that question, I hesitate to penalize anybody who has honestly and whole-heartedly given up his allegiance to a foreign prince or a foreign potentate and who comes to this country with a whole-hearted desire to become and remain permanently an American citizen——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HARDWICK. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. The Germans are not coming to this country now.

Mr. HARDWICK. And they ought not.

Mr. LODGE. They are excluded as alien enemies. The others to whom the Senator refers, who in the future would come here, in that way would be excluded from naturalization, but not from the country.

Mr. HARDWICK. But I do not think we ought to let anybody come here whom we do not intend to naturalize and take into the citizenship of the country except under treaty provisions about travel, and so on.

Mr. LODGE. We had some difficulty in drawing that line in the immigration bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, we did; I remember. I say to the Senator, those are the objections I have to the amendment, but as modified I do not think it will do any harm as to the future policy that it seeks to establish. While I can see some great merit in it, still I can see some great objections to it. But I want to get through with the bill. The Senator knows that I want to deal with candor with him. I am willing to accept his amendment and take it to conference if that will facilitate the measure, although I will not pledge myself to support it.

Mr. LODGE. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. CUMMINS. In the part of the bill the Senator from Georgia read I fear that, in his very proper anxiety to prevent the possibility of naturalizing a disloyal citizen, he has subjected a judicial proceeding to the will of a bureau of the Government.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly the Senator is right.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think that is wise, nor do I think it is fair. If we are going to carry forward naturalization proceedings in a court as we do, and ought to do, I thing in these perilous times when one seeks naturalization papers under this provision the Government, the Department of Justice, or the Bureau of Naturalization—I care not what particular function of the Government—ought to be notified, but I do not think that the mere failure of the Government to appear in the proceeding and make objection ought to have the effect of denying the naturalization.

Mr. HARDWICK. It will not. The Government has to object.

Mr. CUMMINS. That seems to me to be very wrong.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Government has to object and continue to object in order to keep the case open.

Mr. CUMMINS. The bill provides in the first place:

That no alien embraced within this subdivision shall have his petition for naturalization called for a hearing, except after the written consent of the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization shall have been received by the clerk of the court and exhibited to the court—and the petition shall be given no final hearing, except in open court and in the presence of the representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization.

That is hard enough. Then the bill proceeds—

If the Bureau of Naturalization does not present the case through a representative then the proceeding can not be opened.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me, the language written in the bill was caused by the fact that in some parts of the country judges have been giving naturalization to citizens of any country without regard to the opinion of the bureau, and it was deemed wise to have a provision of that kind in the bill to safeguard the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then we ought to give to the Bureau of Naturalization the naturalization of citizens and take it away from the courts. It is shocking to me to suggest that the Bureau of Naturalization can command the court, and say that it shall not issue these papers unless it is satisfied that naturalization ought to occur. It destroys the attitude of the court in the matter entirely. I do not like that sort of thing. It is simply another instance of destroying all the safeguards that we have heretofore set up for the American people, and as far as I am concerned I protest against it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator, although I should like to answer the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to call attention to the language at the top of page 3, commencing after the word "reenlistment," in line 2:

Or any alien or any Porto Rican not a citizen of the United States, of the age of 21 years and upward, who has enlisted or may hereafter enlist in the armies of the United States, either the Regular or the Volunteer Forces, the National Guard or Naval Militia of any State.

And so forth.

Under that provision the cases of men who have been drafted into the National Army, as it is called, drafted men—and there are a good many of them—who have declared their intention, but who are willing to serve, and do not claim an exemption because they are not full citizens, would not be covered. I would be glad to have them encouraged, so that instead of insisting upon exemption they will go in for the sake of becoming citizens. So I suggest two amendments, after the word "enlist," in line 5, to insert the words "or enter," and then after the words "National Guard," in line 7, to insert the words "the National Army." I want the door open so that those who get into the Army through our draft law in that way may have the opportunities afforded by the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have no doubt the Naturalization Bureau is in sympathy with that purpose, and I will say that personally I am in sympathy with it, and I have no objection to those amendments. I suggest to the Senator, however, to let us dispose of this other matter first. I will say to him I favor his amendments as far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. NELSON. Then I move to amend the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Just a moment. I have not yielded the floor. I want to get through with the objection made by the Senator from Iowa. Then I will say to my friend from Minnesota I think his amendment is a good one, and I do not see why we could not agree on it.

I realize the force of what the Senator from Iowa has said. Yet the Senator from Iowa must realize, as the Senator from Georgia was forced to realize when he considered this question fully, the unusual position we are in. It is an unusual position, and I think I can say without any reflection on these people that this legislation is intended to protect a dangerous condition in most instances, to admit to citizenship at all during times of war alien enemies. It does not accord with the practices of nations, it does not accord with the usual and ordinary way with which nations treat each other, and it is not as a rule founded on safe considerations.

When the House of Representatives undertook by law to say that we would admit to citizenship of the United States men whose legal status to-day is that of alien enemies we thought it much wiser to put very rigid restrictions upon the exercise of that right. I would not subject any person except a person in the legal position of an alien enemy to any such a condition as that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not object to the rigorous test. My objection lies in subordinating a legal procedure to the will of an administrative bureau. I would be perfectly willing to strike out the court entirely and allow none of these people to be naturalized without the consent of the President. I am willing that he shall issue naturalization papers in such instances, or the Bureau of Naturalization, although I do not know what that is or who presides over it nor do I know how it is constituted. But it is entirely inconsistent with every conception which we have with free institutions to say that a man can file an application in a court to accomplish a certain end upon which he is called upon to prove certain things which will entitle him to the relief he asks, and then say that unless a subordinate officer of the Government, entirely unknown I think to most of us, gives his consent to the entry of a judgment of the court it can not be entered, and if he merely abstains from the court and does not see fit to go to the place of trial then there can be no action on the part of the court. It is to me as I said before so different from my notions of a trial of a case in a court that I can not contemplate it with any kind of toleration.

I would be perfectly willing to have the representative of the Bureau of Naturalization served so that he would be required to be present; I would be perfectly willing to take away from the court entirely the jurisdiction to issue naturalization papers to such a person, but I am not willing to combine the two authorities and give the superiority or the supremacy to at least a very obscure officer of the Government.

I know two or three men in my State who have lived there for 40 or 45 years, one of them for 50 years. They have been voting for not quite all of that time, but they have been voting at every election for 35 years. Two of them have held high offices in the State. They are among our foremost citizens, responsible and worthy in every way, and as loyal to the country as any human being can be, as earnest and as active in the work citizens now have to do in the prosecution of the war as any citizen can be. Yet owing to misinformation with respect to the law and to their right under the law they are not citizens of this country, and all of them are alien enemies. I have been interested in them somewhat, and I have assumed that under this statute they could be naturalized, but of course if some clerk in the Bureau of Naturalization can deny the court the opportunity of passing upon their fitness to become citizens and their loyalty and all other qualifications that are required, I would have no hope whatever of remedying the mistake, and it is only a mistake which they made and which those about them made in their early life. I do not like it. I do not believe the Senator from Georgia would like it any better than I do, and I do not think the exigency requires any such rigorous measure.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Merely to ask a question.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask a question of the chairman of the Immigration Committee. Is it not true that under our immigration laws a candidate for naturalization going into court has to present proof and show that he was admitted in accordance with our immigration laws and was properly admitted?

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly that answers the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely, but it does not have to depend on the consent of the Naturalization Bureau.

Mr. LODGE. It depends on the consent of the Commissioner of Immigration.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is all. He is admitted by consent of the immigration officer, but no man can be naturalized in the United States who can not get the consent at that moment of the immigration officer.

Mr. LODGE. Previous consent. The immigration officer can come in and take him out and have him deported, if it is disclosed that he entered the country fraudulently.

Mr. HARDWICK. A part of the argument of the Senator from Iowa I do not sympathize with. The Senator says he is willing to give this power to the President. So am I, and yet there is not one whit difference between giving it to the President and giving it to the Naturalization Bureau, because that is the only way the President can exercise it, and the only way he would exercise it. That is the way all presidential power is exercised, or practically all of it, through subordinates, in the various executive departments.

Mr. CUMMINS. The difference, if the Senator will allow me, is that this gives a power without responsibility.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know about that. These people are officers of the Government. The commissioner is confirmed by the Senate; the head of the department is confirmed by the Senate. My guess would be that we have fully as much power to hold them responsible as we have to hold the President responsible if he should make a mistake. I can not sympathize with that part of the argument, although I do strongly sympathize, as the Senator from Iowa knows, with the proposition that it is, ordinarily, undesirable to see such tremendous powers given to the Executive authority over citizenship and its processes. Yet I must confess that in this moment of national stress, in this moment of national trial, when the very existence of this country may be at stake, and when we are proceeding to naturalize people who occupy at least the legal status of alien enemies, I feel that it is not wrong to give the Government that much authority. Now, that is the reason. It is not in accord with any principle I would apply in peace times to anybody, and it is not in accord with any principle I would apply in war times to anybody but an alien enemy.

To show you how the committee felt, there is another part of this proposition, and I wish to present it, and then I am going to ask the Senate to vote as soon as we can on this bill so that we may not be too long detained.

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, from time to time, by proclamation or otherwise, to except natives, citizens, subjects, or denizens of any country with which the United States is or may be at war, or any individual or class thereof, from the classification of alien enemies.

That is the classification made by statute law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why do you give him power to exempt an individual or class from the operation of the law?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will tell you. Because there are thousands and hundreds of thousands of perfectly loyal Americans in this country who have not been naturalized, like the Bohemians, who are furnishing thousands of the bravest troops that are enlisted under our banner, who are in this classification, and because it is necessary that those men should not be driven to the position of disloyalty when they are thoroughly loyal. That is all. The interest of the country requires it. Listen to what we provided about that:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, from time to time, by proclamation or otherwise, to except natives, citizens, subjects, or denizens of any country with which the United States is or may be at war, or any individual or class thereof, from the classification of alien enemies, and thereupon they shall have the privilege to apply for naturalization; and for the purposes of carrying into effect the provisions of this section, including personal services in the District of Columbia, the sum of $400,000 is hereby appropriated, to be available until June 30, 1919, including travel expenses for members of the Bureau of Naturalization and its field service only, and the provisions of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes shall not be applicable in any way to this appropriation.

The moment the President relieves them by a proclamation, in individual cases or in classes, where loyalty is established to the satisfaction of the President, then by law they have a right to apply for naturalization just as aliens who are not alien enemies may apply.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. You will then have the rather astonishing situation of the President exempting an individual from the operation of the law, assuming that he really ought to be naturalized, and the chief of the Bureau of Naturalization being able, by his absence from the court, to prevent him from being naturalized.

Mr. HARDWICK. But all the President can do is to relieve him from the operation of the alien-enemy act. Surely the Senator would not hesitate in war times to give that power to the President.

Mr. CUMMINS. I tell the Senator I am willing to give the entire power to the President of naturalizing or refusing to naturalize alien enemies.

Mr. HARDWICK. What difference does it make, then? Even if we have given it to the Naturalization Bureau, that is the bureau through which the President will exercise the power in any event.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the President is given the power, he will feel a sense of responsibility no matter to whom he delegates the power, and when he is appealed to he will decide the case, I assume, with confidence and with knowledge. If you give to the Bureau of Naturalization the authority to prevent the action of the court simply by staying away from court, you will have, in my opinion, an inoperative as well as an unjust statute.

Mr. HARDWICK. There is no need of arguing in circles. I believe that whatever power we give the President over this subject would be necessarily exercised through this bureau any way. So I am not especially concerned whether the bureau or the President is named. I hope we shall now have a vote on the bill.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. FALL. I want to ask the Senator from Georgia if it would not meet the views of the committee, and at the same time allow some of us a little discretion in voting upon this proposition, if there were an amendment adopted on page 11, so that it would read that no hearing should be had upon any petition except after due notice given by the court to the commissioner or deputy commissioner to be present at a certain time, and that no final hearing should be had except on due notice to him to come in, and that it would be heard at that time?

Mr. HARDWICK. And that then it should not be heard if he objected?

Mr. FALL. That then it should not be heard if he objected.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not object to that at all. I do not think that would impair what the bureau has in mind.

Mr. FALL. Then I suggest, after the word "after," that lines 3, 4, and 5 should be stricken out, and the words "due notice"——

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think those three lines should be stricken out, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. FALL. I have made a mistake. If the Senator will listen to me I can give him my idea as to what I mean. I think the bill should provide for due notice to the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization to be present instead of requiring his written consent. Why should the court not act except upon the written consent of the commissioner, when the commissioner may absent himself from the court and the court may therefore not be able to act?

Mr. HARDWICK. I agree with the Senator about that, and I am willing to modify the amendment so far as I have the power in that respect, because after the Government has a fair and reasonable opportunity to object and does not object, then I am willing for the proceedings to go on.

Mr. FALL. Then I suggest the following amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. HARDWICK. An amendment was merely suggested in my time. It will be offered but is not now pending.

Mr. LODGE. I have an amendment pending.

Mr. HARDWICK. I beg pardon. The Senator from Massachusetts has a pending amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The chairman of the committee stated that he would accept the amendment, and I believe the Senate thought it had been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. I can suggest how I would have the language read:

Provided, That no alien embraced within this subdivision shall have his petition for naturalization called for a hearing except after due notice to the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization to be present, and the petition shall be given no final hearing except in open court and after such notice to representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization, whose objection shall cause the petition to be continued—

And so forth.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think that would change the meaning materially.

Mr. FALL. It would give the commissioner notice and allow him to come in and present his objections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from New Mexico send his amendment to the desk in writing or will he suggest it so that the Secretary may get it?

Mr. FALL. I think if I state it over again the Secretary will get it. In line 3, page 11, after the word "after," I move to strike out the words "the written consent of" and to insert "due notice to"; in line 4, to strike out "shall have been received by the clerk of the court and exhibited to the court" and to insert "to be present"; and in line 7, to strike out the words "in the presence of" and to insert the words "after such notice to."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the language as proposed to be amended by the Senator from New Mexico.

The SECRETARY. As amended the language will read:

Provided, That no alien embraced within this subdivision shall have his petition for naturalization called for a hearing except after due notice to the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization to be present, and the petition shall be given no final hearing except in open court and after such notice to the representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment to the bill, in line 5, page 3, after the word "enlist," to insert the words "or enter."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment reported.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Then, in connection with that amendment, after the words "National Guard," in line 7, page 3, I move to insert the words "National Army."

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me suggest to the Senator that that is probably covered by the language in the line just above where it reads "Regular or the volunteer forces," is it not?

Mr. NELSON. No; we have three classes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well; I will not object to the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. One is called the National Army as distinguished from the Regulars and as distinguished from the National Guard of the States.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that he thinks the amendment should come after the words "volunteer forces" in line 6. The Secretary will state it in that way.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 6, after the words "volunteer forces," it is proposed to insert the words "the National Army."

Mr. HARDWICK. That is right.

Mr. NELSON. I accept that modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am not quite clear that I understood the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota. He moved to insert the words "or enter" after the word "enlist." Would that give the privileges herein set forth to aliens who have already entered the service?

Mr. NELSON. It is in the present tense—"to enlist or enter"—it relates to the future and not to the past.

Mr. POMERENE. I mean, does it apply to those who have already entered the service, so that they can have the privileges of naturalization?

Mr. NELSON. It does not cover them exactly. The word "enter" would have the same meaning as to time as the word "enlist." The Senator will observe in line 5 the words "or may hereafter enlist." My amendment is "or enter," so as to cover those who get in through the draft law.

Mr. POMERENE. But my thought was that it should apply to those who had already entered the service as well as those who might hereafter enter, and it occurred to me that the thought I had in mind would be met if we would insert after the words "who has enlisted" the words "or who has entered."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the words "or enter" were inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is reconsidered.

Mr. NELSON. I ask now to have that amendment rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote whereby the amendment was agreed to has been reconsidered, and, without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be considered as rejected.

Mr. NELSON. Then I move to insert after the word "enlisted," at the beginning of line 5, the words "or entered."

Mr. HARDWICK. That is the same amendment the Senator offered before.

Mr. NELSON. The same amendment, only it applies to those who are already in the service as well as those who afterwards enter the service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I think it ought to apply to the future, and I renew my amendment to insert the words "or enter" in line 5, after the word "enlist," so as to apply to future cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend so that the clause will read:

Who has enlisted or entered, or who may hereafter enlist in or enter, the Army of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend the naturalization laws and to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States and other laws relating to naturalization."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been suggested to the Chair that the words "and for other purposes" should be added to the title.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well. Let those words be added; but I think they make no difference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the title will be so amended.

Mr. HARDWICK. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. GORE, and Mr. DILLINGHAM conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 17, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 16, 1918.

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock noon by Mr. KITCHIN as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who workest ever, in all and through all Thou hast made, animate or inanimate, creating, re-creating, and who art mighty to deliver, help us as rational beings, gifted with the power of choice, to open wide the portals of our souls that we may receive abundantly that power of spirit ever emanating from Thy heart to which we are so closely allied, that we may be strong to bear the burdens of life and be guided to a happy solution of its intricate problems and so become instruments in Thy hands for the fulfillment of Thy plans and good purposes, in the spirit of Him who said, "I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is day; the night cometh, when no man can work." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY, Member elect from the fourth district of Illinois, be sworn in. His certificate of election is on file with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The certificate has been filed in due form.

Mr. RAINEY appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

ELECTION CONTESTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 16, 1918.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before the House of Representatives a list of contests for seats in the House of Representatives for the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States, notices of which have been filed in the office of the Clerk of the House, and also transmit herewith all original testimony, papers, and documents relating thereto, as follows:

"James J. Britt against Zebulon Weaver, of the tenth district of North Carolina.

"Jacob Gerling against Thomas B. Dunn, of the thirty-eighth district of New York.

"James S. Davenport against Thomas A. Chandler, of the first district of Oklahoma."

The Clerk has opened and printed the testimony in all of the above cases. In compliance with the act approved March 2, 1897, entitled "An act relating to contested-election cases," such portions of the testimony in the above cases as the parties in interest agreed upon, or as seemed proper to the Clerk, after giving the requisite notices, have been printed and indexed, together with the notices of contest and the answers thereto, and such portions of the testimony as were not printed with the original papers have been sealed up and are ready to be laid before the Committee on Elections.

Two copies of the printed testimony in each case have been mailed the contestant and the same number to the contestee. The law in reference to the briefs of both the contestant and contestee in each case has been complied with as far as possible upon receipt by the Clerk of said briefs.

So far as the briefs have been furnished to the Clerk, they are ready to be laid before the Committee on Elections upon the order of the House, together with a tabulated statement, which has been prepared by the Clerk, showing the number of pages of testimony and the present status of each contested-election case, and all the papers in connection therewith.

Yours, respectfully,
SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DALE of New York for two weeks, on account of important business.

COMMITTEE TO ATTEND FUNERAL OF LATE SENATOR STONE.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in announcing the Stone funeral on yesterday the Speaker of the House [Mr. CLARK], of course, did not announce himself as a member of that committee. I think he ought officially to be a member of the committee, and I ask unanimous consent that his name be added to the list.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Speaker's name will be added to the list of the committee.

There was no objection.

TAKING OVER OF CERTAIN TRANSPORTATION LINES.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3388), to amend the emergency shipping fund provisions of the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved June 15, 1917, so as to empower the President and his designated agents to take over certain transportation systems for the transportation of shipyard and plant employees, and for other purposes, be made in order after the disposition of the river and harbor appropriation bill. The chairman of the Shipping Board states that the passage of this bill will save the Government a large amount of money, and that this action is of immediate urgent necessity. Admiral Bowles has written to the same effect in relation to the necessity for the prompt passage of the bill. I would like to arrange by unanimous consent to take the bill up and agree upon a time for discussion, and have it in order to follow the disposition of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why is it that that proposition was stricken out of the housing bill? That right was given in the $50,000,000 housing appropriation bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It went out of the housing bill because it did not properly belong there under the rules of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are the various lines specified in the bill?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. It includes the lines necessary to be taken over in connection with the housing of the employees at work in our shipping yards, wherever located.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman referred to a statement by Admiral Bowles, who is now in charge at Hog Island, and I desire to know whether the trolley lines are lines leading to Hog Island, and whether it is contemplated improving the transportation facilities to that point.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The lines that will be taken over are those lines immediately necessary in connection with the housing proposition. Of course the phrasing of the bill is necessarily comprehensive.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How much does the bill carry?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It does not carry anything.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have been making inquiries this morning concerning the housing problem and transportation facilities as far as Hog Island, and I am in doubt at the present time whether it is proposed to go on with the housing or whether it is proposed to substitute for housing improved transportation facilities, or whether we are to have both.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The two lines of activity will go forward at the same time. A number of houses will be built, but the taking over of these lines will save the necessity for a great deal of construction. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] in this connection, that this bill does not propose to appropriate, but to save the necessity for appropriation. It is a money-saving, not a money-spending proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it means to curtail the housing construction?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; immensely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And to increase the transportation facilities?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. To the necessary extent, of course.

Mr. GILLETT. Has the bill been reported from the committee?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Unanimously.

Mr. GILLETT. How long ago?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Several days ago. Here is what Admiral Bowles says in this connection:

I have just received word of the passage of S. 3388, regarding transportation for shipyards. It is important to the Fleet Corporation, and I hope you can secure action by House.

Mr. Hurley writes more elaborately and strongly in relation to what will be accomplished by the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Could the gentleman put that in the RECORD before the bill is considered?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, yes; I am trying now to arrange for taking up the bill.

Mr. GILLETT. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Why, that following the disposition of the river and harbor bill that this bill may be made a special order.

Mr. GILLETT. Well, I would suggest—I do not see a minority member of the committee present on the floor—that the gentleman postpone his request until they can be consulted.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that I left my committee considering another bill and came over in behalf of the committee to endeavor to make this arrangement.

Mr. GILLETT. Is it the unanimous desire of the committee?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. GILLETT. Is this the unanimous desire of the committee to have it taken up?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I did not consult my colleagues particularly on that point.

Mr. GILLETT. I think they have the right to be consulted.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Of course, if there was any question on my mind that there was anyone on our committee opposed to the proposed action, I would not have asked unanimous consent. But I know that this is their desire.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will oppose immediate action, I think, until those letters are published.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Is the gentleman making a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This will obviate the necessity of asking for a rule.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think it will be necessary to have a rule.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think we can agree to take this bill up, and agree on terms of debate and everything else necessary for prompt action.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think there will be any difficulty in making an arrangement, but inasmuch as there is no member of the minority of the committee present, if the gentleman will postpone his request until later——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman, of course, does not want to interfere with conference reports and other privileged matters?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, not at all. That would be made a part of the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Would the gentleman be willing to modify his request and provide that it shall not under any circumstances interfere with the transaction of District business next Monday?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. Certainly.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to ask the gentleman how long a time it is contemplated the bill will take. Speaker CLARK had agreed to recognize me to call up the naval appropriation bill following the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, I can not see that this bill would possibly take over an hour, but of course I can not control that. This is a matter strongly favored by the entire committee. Of course the bill will pass when it is once taken up.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman speak louder, we can not hear him over here.

Mr. PADGETT. I said that Speaker CLARK had said he would recognize me to bring up the naval appropriation bill following the rivers and harbors bill, and it was important to get consideration of that bill. I asked the gentleman how long it would take and he said perhaps not more than an hour. Of course, it is immaterial if it will take no longer than that. I want to say further that there is a bill that is very important as a war measure It is for the enlargement of the facilities at the naval proving ground for the testing of our big guns. The operations of war on that line are being very much hampered, and while this is in the naval bill I have also introduced a special bill to try to expedite it, and the Speaker had told me that he would take care of that, and I do not want this to interfere with that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Let me make this suggestion: The regular naval bill, of course, will take a good deal of time. This other bill will not take very much time——

Mr. PADGETT. It ought not to take an hour.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Let us agree to this, to take up the latter bill, if it will only take about an hour, and then let me come in between that bill and the regular naval bill.

Mr. PADGETT. I would be perfectly willing if it would take no longer than an hour.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This involves the problem of congestion of men working at the shipyards, and that is an important war measure now.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. There is no more important war measure than this.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may also involve the question of profiteering in rents about the shipyards. That is the question that may involve some discussion. Will not the gentleman ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD these communications to which he referred before he calls up the bill?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that we may have this information to-morrow morning.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will do that it will save time.

Mr. RAYBURN. While these unanimous-consent promises are going around here I may say that the Speaker agreed several days ago to recognize me to ask unanimous consent for a little amendment, which, we think, will not take more than 30 minutes, to the war-risk insurance bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, why can not this measure follow the consideration of your amendment? That would be entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. RAYBURN. This is very important at this time; not only as a war measure but as a peace measure.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAYBURN. I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that probably this request will be put off to a later time in the day, and I think we should have an understanding that I may get in this little bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; that is agreed to.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, what is the unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no specific request pending before the House.

Mr. GARNER. Let us have one made, then.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will make a formal request if it is desired, that the Senate bill that I refer to, No. 3388, which has been unanimously reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries as a war measure, may be taken up for disposition following the disposal of the bill referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], the measure referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], and not in anywise to interfere with District-day business.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. There have been a number of railroads in the war activities plants commandeered by the Navy Department and by the War Department, and I would like to know if the gentleman from Virginia can say whether the bill he proposes to take up for consideration will cover all the cases on which separate action has been taken and make one action of all, or whether this is in addition to the things that have already been done and will complicate the situation more than it is now complicated?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It will not complicate the situation. I will read what the bill undertakes to do.

Mr. SMALL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I read from the bill:

> To take possession of, lease or assume control of, any street railroad, interurban railroad, or part thereof wherever operated, and all cars, appurtenances, and franchises or parts thereof commonly used in connection with the operation thereof necessary for the transfer and transportation of employees of shipyards or plants engaged or that may hereafter be engaged in the construction of ships or equipment therefor for the United States.

Mr. THOMPSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COX. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. THOMPSON. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10069, the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10069, the river and harbor bill, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10069, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

St. Joseph Harbor and River, Saugatuck Harbor and Kalamazoo River, South Haven, Holland, Grand Haven, Muskegon, White Lake, Ludington, Manistee, Portage Lake, Arcadia, Frankfort, Charlevoix, and Petoskey Harbors, and Grand River, Mich.: For maintenance, $70,500.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment on page 12, line 20, after the words "White Lake" insert the words "Pentwater."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 12, line 20, after the word "Lake," insert the word "Pentwater."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Michigan wish to be heard?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I understand the chairman of the committee is not opposed to the amendment. In that case, I do not ask for time.

Mr. SMALL. There is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield the floor?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; if I may have it later.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I would like to have recognition. I objected to the unanimous-consent arrangement proposed a moment ago by reason of the fact that it did not take care of conference reports. I think one of the most important matters before the House at this time is the Senate amendment to the Agricultural bill which fixes the price of wheat at $2.50 for the year 1918. The Senate has adopted the conference report. That report was made to the House last Saturday. It should have been taken up here on Monday. It was not taken up yesterday. It has not been taken up to-day. My reason for reserving the right to object was——

Mr CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will state to the gentleman that my information is that that report will be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the gentleman had made that statement and had gotten that agreement I would not have objected.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] had stated, in making his request, that he did not want the bill to interfere with conference reports.

Mr. THOMPSON. He did not make that statement generally but he made it specifically as to the Indian appropriation bill in answer to a question by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who asked him particularly as to the conference report on the Indian bill. I want that applied to the Agricultural bill conference report.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I understood he made it general. As a matter of fact, it would not interfere with conference reports anyway.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not know whether that is so or not. The fact that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] asked if it would interfere prompted me to make the reservation of an objection, so that I could find out whether it applied to the Agricultural bill, so that they could take up that conference report as it applied to $2.50 wheat.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I must object to further discussion along this line.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I did not yield to the gentleman from North Carolina. I had five minutes.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman is talking out of order.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the gentleman makes that point, we can consume more time this afternoon than five minutes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will allow me a moment, I think we can end the discussion and save a little time. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] stated that he did not expect the measure he presented to displace conference reports and other privileged business.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think if you will examine the RECORD you will find that it was not as broad as that. It only applied to the inquiry of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as to his conference report.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No. I asked him the question whether it would displace conference reports and other privileged business, and his answer was it would not.

Mr. THOMPSON. If conference reports generally can be considered to-morrow, of course I have no objection to proceeding.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Conference reports are privileged anyway.

Mr. THOMPSON. If it is understood we are to consider the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill to-morrow I shall not object. It is very important that the matter be not delayed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, if it will not infringe upon the proprieties, I would like to ask a question with reference to the amendment which has been proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]. I should like to ask the gentleman from Michigan whether or not the item for this improvement was left out through inadvertence or whether it was a new project.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I believe it has not been left out by inadvertence, neither is it a new project. Pentwater is a harbor on the shore of Lake Michigan, upon which something like a quarter of a million dollars has been expended, but concerning which there is, or has been, some disagreement among the engineers, and those in charge now have not thought favorably of the proposition of spending the money at this time. I have conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and he agrees to have the word "Pentwater" inserted, with the idea of calling the matter again to the attention of the engineer, so that he may, if he wishes to do so, expend a portion of the money on this harbor. It is for maintenance——

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the gentleman from Michigan further what the work of maintenance would consist of—dredging or protecting the work already done?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think almost entirely of dredging.

Mr. WALSH. Deepening the channel, or extending it a greater distance?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Not extending the channel at all. I think the work would be entirely that of dredging, for the purpose of restoring the depth of the permanent or regular channel, to make it accessible to ships that will enter the harbor.

Mr. WALSH. May I further inquire whether this channel is 4 feet deep, or 30 feet deep?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It has been maintained generally at a depth of from 12 to 14 feet.

Mr. WALSH. And this project is simply to deepen that channel?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. To maintain it at a reasonable depth.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan has given the information which I, of course, appreciate, was within the possession of the chairman of the committee. I notice there are a great many projects included in this item, and apparently the maintenance of Pentwater Harbor would not to any alarming extent decrease the opportunity for maintaining the work done in these other more or less important ports in the great State of Michigan. So I shall not oppose the amendment, although I arose for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 12, line 22, strike out "$70,500" and insert "$75,500."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of making available money for the maintenance of the harbor to which the preceding amendment refers, if in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers such use of the money be deemed advisable. As I stated in answering the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], this harbor at Pentwater has been constructed and maintained for many years, the aggregate of money expended being in excess of $250,000. I do not remember the exact amount.

It is a harbor constructed and maintained for many years by the engineers under appropriations made by the Congress.

In 1909 this Congress, pursuant to a very favorable report on this harbor and a harbor, the name of which immediately precedes it in the paragraph, White Lake, appropriated $101,000 for the maintenance of these harbors. The expenditure of that money was discretionary with the Chief of Engineers. Before the time came for expending the money on these two harbors, White Lake and Pentwater, for which the $101,000 was carried in the bill, there was a change of engineers in the district, and the report of the later engineer was unfavorable. The result was that the engineers refused to expend any part of the $101,000 on either of the harbors. At the next session of this Congress, at my request, a provision was inserted in the river and harbor bill requiring the expenditure of the money theretofore appropriated for the maintenance of these two harbors, and for two or three years annually the sum of about $5,000 was expended on each harbor.

Later—three years ago, I believe—there was enacted a law appropriating a lump sum of $25,000,000, the entire amount of which was to be expended throughout the country in the discretion of the engineers, and that law contained a provision to the effect that the Chief of Engineers might take from the account or credit of any existing project any unexpended balance. In going through his books he found a balance of $40,000 standing to the credit of these two little harbors, and he took that and made it a part of the $25,000,00 and deprived those two harbors of the money intended for their maintenance. I took the matter up with the Chief of Engineers and called his attention to what had been done in his office. He evidently was in ignorance of it, and my impression was and now is that if his attention had been called to the matter at the time action was taken he would not have approved it. It was done by a subordinate, and he approved it without knowing the effect of it.

Naturally I objected strenuously to that action and asked him what he could do. He said he thought that later they would be able to take care of these harbors. I said it would be difficult to do so in the face of an unfavorable report to Congress. He said he would like to help the harbors if a way could be found to do so.

Later the Chief of Engineers recommended an appropriation for White Lake of $5,500, as I remember, for each year for the next five years. His recommendation was approved by Congress, and the money has been appropriated and is now available. Pentwater stood in exactly the same position as White Lake. Its proportion of the $40,000 fund was improperly taken away, inadvertently. This Congress by express action had insisted that the money theretofore appropriated should be expended, and, in my judgment, at the first opportunity that Congress has to review and correct the action of the Chief of Engineers it ought to provide that for the time being at least a portion of the money appropriated by the Congress and intended for this harbor should be made available and expended.

The law of 1909 carrying $101,000 for these two harbors was the smallest rivers and harbors bill that this Congress has passed in a great many years, amounting to only $9,000,000; and it carried appropriations only for the most deserving and necessary projects existing at that time in the judgment of the engineers then in authority. The recommendation for improvement and maintenance of the two harbors leading up to the appropriation in 1909 was clear-cut, positive, and very favorable, and in that bill carrying only $9,000,000 Congress appropriated $101,000 for these harbors. The failure to expend any part of it was due to the exercise of discretion by the engineers. That exercise of discretion was not approved by this Congress, because, as I have said, the very next session, at my request, the Congress inserted in the rivers and harbors bill an express direction to expend the money theretofore appropriated.

There is a difference of opinion among the engineers inspecting this harbor, so there is justification for exercise of judgment by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and by Congress. Congress appropriated the money, the engineers refused to expend it. Congress directed after the refusal that the money should be expended, and there was $20,000 remaining in the fund and credited to this harbor. It was unfairly taken away from the credit of the harbor; it was unjust, it would not have been done by the action of the engineer himself, but was done by a subordinate practically without his knowledge. I insist in all fairness to that harbor the small appropriation ought to be available.

If the sum now carried in the bill shall be increased, it does not make it necessary for the engineers to use it. The entire appropriation of $70,000 or $75,000, if my amendment is adopted, will be within the discretion of the engineers and they can use the money or not as they please. With the approval of the chairman of the committee the name of Pentwater has been inserted, but in order to make it effective, if the Chief of Engineers shall find it necessary and advisable to use the money at Pentwater, it is necessary and appropriate to increase the amount. It will not make necessary or mandatory the expenditure of the money, but it will make it possible for him for one year to correct the grievous error made and which did the harbor a serious injustice.

It is an important harbor, the only harbor on Lake Michigan, in the best fruit county in Michigan—the only harbor in that county from which fruit shipments can be made. Regular lines of steamers ply between the ports of Lake Michigan and Chicago, Milwaukee, and other points of Wisconsin, and they regularly stopped at that harbor when it was maintained, but when it was neglected and dredging was necessary and it was not done, boats failed to make their regular trips. Companies operating these lines of boats would like to renew their trips and that part of the State would have the advantage of this harbor if this appropriation was used by the engineers.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the committee of necessity must oppose this amendment; but before speaking to its merits, may I say just a word? While I desire to extend every courtesy in debate on the bill, it is exceedingly important to make progress and complete the bill to-day. I have been requested by many Members on both sides to ask that all debate be confined to the bill and that gentlemen as far as possible limit themselves to five minutes for discussion. The chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will, so far as he can, conform to the request he has made of other Members.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are at least two reasons why the amendment ought not to be adopted. In the first place, it is in the face of the report of the Chief of Engineers, because he has made no recommendation for appropriation for this project for the next fiscal year. And if the Committee of the Whole should adopt this amendment and increase this appropriation you will be doing that which has not been done in any other amendment in the whole bill.

In the next place, there is the report of the Chief of Engineers in House Document 429, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, recommending that Pentwater Harbor is unworthy of further continuance and maintenance and abandonment of the project and discontinuance of appropriation for the harbor is recommended. That report has never been adopted; but the committee did not object to including Pentwater in the paragraph, for the reason that in the last rivers and harbors act of August 8, 1917, there was an appropriation authorizing a resurvey. In order to give the people of the section an opportunity to present the merits of Pentwater Harbor it was thought not improper to add Pentwater to the paragraph pending the final report of the Chief of Engineers. So upon these facts I am sure that the Committee of the Whole will see that it would be entirely improper to adopt the amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the last report of the engineers is not favorable. It is true also that the report before that was very favorable. There is a difference of opinion between the engineers. It is also true that the last report, the unfavorable report, has not been adopted. Therefore Congress was not bound by it. It is also true, and this I say with emphasis, that no other harbor is in the same condition as this. The engineers at one time refused to use the money appropriated for the maintenance of the harbor, and when Congress learned of it, it passed a positive law requiring the use of the money, and the money thus made available was being used until the passage of the omnibus bill with $25,000,000 and until the remaining money in this fund, $40,000, was improperly extracted. That places this harbor on a different footing from any other in the long list of harbors that have received consideration by the House and the engineers. I feel in justice to this harbor that Congress should act now and make some appropriation. It is true the last rivers and harbors bill carried a survey of this harbor to be made this year or next year. What will be the result if the harbor is not maintained in the meantime? It will deteriorate, sifting sand will cause bars, there will be no business at the harbor, and it will be able to make only a poor showing when the engineers carry on the next survey.

It is only fair that the harbor should be maintained in the meantime in reasonable manner so that it will be at least in normal condition when the survey provided by Congress shall be made. I trust the amendment I have offered may be adopted. The money does not have to be used unless the engineers shall determine it is necessary and proper to use it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan) there were—ayes 26, noes 33.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ship channel connecting waters of the Great Lakes between Chicago, Duluth, and Buffalo, including St. Marys River, St. Clair River, channels in Lake St. Clair, and Detroit River, Mich.: For maintenance, $50,000; completing improvement of fourth lock in St. Marys River, $470,000; in all, $520,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Toledo, Port Clinton, Sandusky, Huron, Vermilion, Lorain, Cleveland, Fairport, Ashtabula, and Conneaut Harbors, Ohio: For maintenance, $50,000.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 12, after the numerals "$50,000," strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following: "for maintenance of the navigable channel in Cuyahoga River, to a depth of 20 feet, $50,000; in all, $100,000."

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, there are between 12 and 15 foundries, blast furnaces, and iron mills within 2 or 3 miles of Lake Erie on the Cuyahoga River. The iron ore that is brought down from the Lakes enters through this channel and is taken up to these blast furnaces, foundries, and iron mills. I am informed by a representative of the chamber of commerce that there are at least 12 of these factories manufacturing iron which is necessary and is being used every day in the manufacture of war material, and they feel that this river should be kept open to the depth of 20 feet to assist the vessels that come from the Lakes to enter this river and go up to these different blast furnaces and foundries.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Has the river ever been improved by Congress?

Mr. EMERSON. Yes; up to 4 or 5 miles, but I think in conjunction with the city.

Mr. WALSH. How long ago has it been since an appropriation was made for that purpose?

Mr. EMERSON. I do not know that. This is an appropriation for war emergency and ought to be done to assist in the manufacture of war essentials. There are millions of dollars' worth of war material being made in the city of Cleveland and we ought to do everything we can to facilitate that manufacture.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this the Cuyahoga River?

Mr. EMERSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is the river made famous by the former distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, Mr. Burton?

Mr. EMERSON. I expect it was.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That was before the gentleman arrived in Congress?

Mr. EMERSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think for a time he sought to prevent appropriations being made on the ground that the river bisected the city.

Mr. EMERSON. It bisects the city. The city is about evenly divided on either side of the river, and on the river, near the lake, are these furnaces, and so forth. Of course, the river ought to be improved beyond the 5 miles, I suppose, a distance of 8 miles.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say to the gentleman that I never could agree with the former distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that the Cuyahoga River ought not to have an appropriation, and that the city itself ought to take care of that river because it went through the city. That is a principle I do not agree with.

Mr. EMERSON. Of course the city has done a great deal of this work and spent a great many thousands of dollars upon it, but it can not do it at the present time without issuing bonds, and that would require a vote of the people, because the city's rate of taxation is about to the limit at the present time.

I am offering this amendment purely for the reason that there ought to be an improvement of this river to facilitate the passage of these vessels coming up from the Lakes to these foundries and rolling mills there.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. If I were to support a measure of this kind and enable you to escape the issuing of bonds, would the gentleman favor a measure to repay Kansas City, Kans., $2,000,000 it has expended to take care of the Kaw which runs through it?

Mr. EMERSON. I do not know; that question does not come in connection with my amendment——

Mr. LITTLE. It does, if the gentleman expects me to appreciate the force of his reasoning. The Kansas—or Kaw—River was formerly navigable by steamers regularly up to Lawrence. An immense manufacturing business is carried on along its banks for several miles up. I doubt if eventually any of the smaller rivers will send out as great trade as the Kaw. This Government really ought to give it consideration. Long since Army engineers have reported on it favorably.

Mr. EMERSON. I put it in on the ground that it is a war emergency. If Congress does not want to do it, it is up to Congress, and the responsibility is off my shoulders. I think the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to say this about the amendment. There is no favorable report on the project——

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. EMERSON. Did not Col. Newcomer state he felt that under the rules of the department——

Mr. SMALL. Oh, the gentleman's amendment does not contemplate a survey. The gentleman's amendment is to authorize an improvement, and there has been no favorable report——

Mr. EMERSON. It is true they have not had time to make a report.

Mr. SMALL. Then the gentleman admits that he is asking for an appropriation for an improvement upon which there has been no survey or no favorable report?

Mr. EMERSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, that may be true, but I am asking it because I think it is necessary and the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Cleveland thinks it is necessary. They have asked the city to do it, and the city has not funds with which to do it, and they say there are millions of dollars' worth of war material being manufactured in the city and the Government could do it quicker than the city could do it, and that is the only reason I am asking it.

Mr. SMALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is presumed to know as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that his amendment is inappropriate and unprecedented and has no place in the bill. It is absolutely without merit. It is a proposition for an improvement of a part of the Cuyahoga River which the city of Cleveland has always heretofore maintained. There is no favorable report.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 12, after the numerals "50,000," insert: "And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of Cuyahoga River, Ohio, with a view to maintenance of the navigable channel in said river in cooperation with local interests, the expense of said examination and survey to be paid from the funds appropriated in this paragraph."

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, this simply provides for a survey. I think the committee ought to put this in the bill.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say this, that the committee after mature deliberation decided that it was not proper to have authorization for any surveys in this bill. If the gentleman was present at the time that conclusion was reached I think he voted for it. The gentleman is a member of the committee. He offered no amendment for this survey, and if the committee adopts this authorization for a survey it will be an exception, because not a survey is authorized in this bill nor has the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union authorized one, so that I do not think the gentleman ought to insist upon it, and in any event it is certainly without merit. This matter was very carefully considered by the committee and the committee consulted with many Members on both sides of the House, and the reasons why we decided to have no surveys are fully set forth in the report of the committee. I shall not take the time to recapitulate them here, but the reasons should impress any Member who wishes to reach a fair conclusion, and I think they will be regarded as conclusive.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say in reply to what the chairman has said, I do not know whether I was present or not, but it does not make any difference anyway. The gentleman's objection to my first amendment was because it was not recommended by the War Department. The War Department can not recommend it without a survey. Now, I am complying with his objection to my first amendment by asking for a survey. At any rate, this amendment simply provides that we should have a survey, complying with the criticism of the chairman. I think we ought to have it, and I think the House ought to put it in.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. EMERSON. Let us have a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 27.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Erie Harbor, Pa.; Dunkirk and Buffalo Harbors, Black Rock Channel and Tonawanda Harbor, and Niagara River, N. Y.: For maintenance, $61,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in reading the bill we have swung round the circle to western Pennsylvania and have reached the Erie Harbor, a harbor represented by my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] and one well worthy of improvement. Like all Lake ports, it ought to receive careful consideration in these war times.

But I desire at this point to bring some new information to the House with regard to a question that has been discussed for several days—that of the relative importance of channel depths along the Atlantic seaboard. We have had some debate here concerning 40-foot channels that are being provided for certain ports along the Atlantic coast, and the question has been raised—and I think properly—as to the wisdom of bringing other ports doing an international business up to that standard, or sooner or later we may be compelled to fix a limit to which we will go in improving the harbors of the country. If one harbor finally obtains a depth of 50 feet and becomes supreme in the matter of international commerce, it may not be good for the other ports.

As showing the relevancy of the discussion at this time, when we are at war with a foreign country, and when every American desires that his coast lines shall be properly fortified and protected and made available for war service, I want to read into the RECORD a letter just received from the Acting Quartermaster General, Maj. Gen. Goethals. I read the other day that the Quartermaster Department had proposed to establish a large embarkation station at the port of Boston, a port which now has 35 feet assured depth of channel and on tide more than 40 feet; and I inquired of Gen. Goethals whether such improvements as were contemplated for Boston were for Boston only or whether they were to be carried to other points along the coast.

I am happy to say the General replies that other points are to be considered and that there is to be a distribution of this port work. I send to the Clerk's desk the letter and ask that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, April 13, 1918.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MOORE: In reply to yours of the 12th inst., I beg to advise you that the statement relative to the equipment of an embarkation station at Boston, with the necessary docks and warehouse facilities, is correct. The cost is not yet determined, but will be in the neighborhood of $21,000,000.

A site has been selected and arrangements made for taking over land necessary for similar facilities at Philadelphia, the plans for which are now in preparation. In addition to the foregoing, New York, Norfolk, and Charleston are to be provided with similar facilities.

Very truly, yours,

GEO. W. GOETHALS,
Acting Quartermaster General.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may not be wise to discuss this matter in detail, although I assume it is giving no information or comfort to the enemy, but this highly important information shows that the Quartermaster's Department is alive to the necessities of distribution. The fact indicated in this letter is that a $21,000,000 establishment is being set up at Boston. I am glad it is. Boston has splendid harbor facilities and probably the best dry dock along the whole Atlantic seaboard. It is entirely proper that it should be considered in a matter of the embarkation of the troops and war supplies of the country.

It is proper that Norfolk be considered, because Norfolk is a great port. It is proper that New York should be considered, because New York has now, through the Ambrose Channel, a depth of 40 feet to the city, and if this bill carries it is assured of a 40-foot channel through the East River to Long Island Sound. This letter also throws some light on the Charleston situation, about which there has been some question in the House. I supported the Charleston proposition, because the committee supported it and because the President and the Navy Department wanted it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask for two minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And because it was supported by the Secretary of War.

Now, then, we may begin to understand why it is that Charleston is being considered in this general scheme of improvement along the coast. If we are to have a great dry dock at Charleston, which is below Cape Hatteras, well and good. The lower coast surely should have available for ships in distress at sea or ships needing repairs a dry dock somewhere south of Cape Hatteras, because there is urgent necessity for it. I am pleased, of course, to know that Philadelphia is included in this scheme for the construction of embarkation stations. There is no point along the Atlantic seaboard where the raw material is more available, where the labor market is better in hand, and where the fuel supply is more easily obtained. But, as I have pointed out, whereas Boston will have 40 feet, and New York will have 40 feet, and Charleston, under the provisions of this bill, will have 40 feet, and Norfolk has an assured 35 feet, there is still a big problem ahead of the Delaware River to attain a 40-foot depth. It is a matter of such consequence to the Nation and to the rest of the ports along the coast that I feel warranted in again calling attention to it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. SMALL. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, probably two minutes. Will the gentleman state whether or not he has any information as to the situation with reference to the taking over by the Government of some canals, authority for which was carried in the last river and harbor bill? I think there is one somewhere up in the gentleman's region and another one down on Cape Cod.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I know it troubles the gentleman very much and he has very great difficulty in remembering it, although the name is now a household word, even in Massachusetts. But there are two canals——

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is facetious, and I am asking a serious question. I could not think of the name of the canal down in the gentleman's section of the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman has so easily forgotten it, I shall have to rack my brains a little bit myself; but the Cape Cod Canal, which cuts through a spit of land near the district represented by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], was provided for in the last river and harbor bill. That is to say, provision was made for an inquiry as to the advisability of taking over that canal for Government use. And I may say to the gentleman that that canal is used constantly by the Government of the United States. Small warcraft pass through it, and it is wise that they should do so, because it saves a tremendous risk in outside sailing in times of peace or when vessels are moving from one point to another for ordinary purposes.

The other canal to which the gentleman refers, and which I now recall, is the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, one of greater importance than that at Cape Cod, because it connects up two of the greatest bodies of water in the United States—the Delaware and Chesapeake Bays.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman misunderstood my question. I wanted to know how far the Government authorities had gotten toward taking over that canal, and what the situation was?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So far as the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal is concerned, condemnation was provided for in the last bill, and I am advised by the Engineer office that negotiations are now pending with the owners of the canal, so far as they can be found. The owners of the canal consist very largely of estates and heirs and descendants of the original owners, who are difficult to find. I understand that negotiations are pending and that in due course we may have some information on the subject. In all good faith I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for making this inquiry.

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of stating that I have some official correspondence and some valuable data, as it seems to me, relating to the port of Erie, which I desire to present.

HARBOR.

The Erie Harbor is known as a landlocked harbor. Some 4 miles west of the central section of the city of Erie a peninsula joins the shore and runs out into the open lake beyond the city of Erie and curves in toward the shore. In some places this bay is a mile or a mile and a half in width and is approximately 7 miles in length.

Where the peninsula, known as Presque Isle, joins the mainland it is narrow and widens as it extends eastward. In area there are about 2,700 acres of land under the control of the United States.

I have often wondered why the Government at the present time has not made some use of this land. Across the narrow neck of this peninsula, west of the city, the storms made a channel last October about 11 feet wide, which has been enlarged by the storms sweeping down the lake since until now it is nearly 450 feet in width. Through this channel the waves of the lake run into the bay and there deposit sand to an alarming extent.

Some years ago, under expert engineering advice, it was deemed advisable to create a channel across this neck of the peninsula so that ships could sail directly into the harbor from the west and pass out of the harbor from the east. This channel was made and the result was most disastrous. The bay filled up so rapidly with sand that it became necessary to restore the peninsula to its original condition.

On November 1, 1917, I sent a telegram to the Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, informing him of the breach across the peninsula, and at the same time I requested the Board of Commerce of the city of Erie to also bring this matter to the attention of the Secretary; this was done, and responsive telegrams received in due time, and the district engineer was ordered to investigate. Work was commenced last fall to repair the damage, but a severe storm destroyed what little had been accomplished.

The situation was investigated by the United States Engineering Department and an estimate was made of the amount of money necessary for the work and that sum was fixed at $50,000. Col. Newcomer appeared before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and stated that the harbor was quite important and that this amount was required for the improvement contemplated, but I am under the impression that the channel has been widened since Col. Newcomer appeared before the committee. His testimony may be found on page 146 of the hearings.

I fear that this amount is not sufficient, but as I am not an engineer I am not qualified to speak with precision upon the subject. In a letter received from Col. J. G. Warren, of the Corps of Engineers, the division engineer lakes division, with offices at Buffalo, N. Y., he speaks of this harbor as being "one of the best harbors of its size on the Great Lakes," and this opinion coincides with that of men engaged in the lake traffic, and is almost universally spoken of as the best harbor on the chain of lakes. Many vessels find a refuge there during the winter.

Running out of the city of Erie are several railroad lines which convey the traffic of the lakes into the interior and bring to the port coal, ore, and merchandise for shipment east and west.

TONNAGE.

Mr. James Thompson, in charge of the terminal facilities of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Erie, and likewise in charge of their freight traffic at the port of New York, furnishes me with the following data relating to the amount of ore received, covering a period from 1914 to 1917:

[2] Owing to a strike during 1906, the fishing season was limited to just a few months.

Roughly speaking, for the last year the tonnage approximates 5,000,000 tons.

Mr. B. B. Brown, the former collector of customs at this port, states that during 1916, 1,448 boats entered this harbor, many of them with cargoes of 15,000 tons. So it will be seen that the traffic is of considerable importance. Some of the ore that comes down from the upper lakes is used in the city of Erie and part of it is sent down to the furnaces south to Pittsburgh, to the Cambria Steel Co. and, as I am informed, to the Bethlehem Co. and other places.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. recently contemplated an expenditure of $2,000,000 to increase its terminal facilities at this port, but I understand that conditions growing out of the war will postpone this improvement.

The appropriation is not asked for a new project, but for the purpose of immediately repairing the damage done. "A stitch in time saves nine" is a truth worth observing and is surely applicable to the present situation, for if the repairs are not now made a much larger appropriation will be required. Haste in this case is not waste.

The Clerk read as follows:

Oleott, Charlotte, Pultneyville, Great Sodus Bay, Little Sodus Bay, Oswego, Cape Vincent, and Ogdensburg Harbors, N. Y.: For maintenance, $13,000.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 13, line 18, strike out the numerals "$13,000" and insert in lieu thereof the numerals "$43,000."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is based upon a letter from the Chief of Engineers, setting forth that recently a tug used in this improvement had been destroyed and that it was necessary to have this additional $30,000 for the purchase of a tug. I will ask to have that letter read.

Mr. WALSH. Then, will the gentleman answer a question after that?

Mr. SMALL. Yes; with pleasure.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, March 11, 1918.

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL,
Chairman, Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SMALL: Referring to the following item on page 13 of the pending river and harbor bill, "Oleott, Charlotte, Pultneyville, Great Sodus Bay, Little Sodus Bay, Oswego, Cape Vincent, and Ogdensburg Harbors, N. Y.: For maintenance, $13,000," your attention is invited to the fact that the necessity for a greater appropriation for maintenance of these works has recently developed. Under date of March 7, 1918, the district engineer submitted a report setting forth the necessity of purchasing a tug for use as a tender to the dredge Sodus, which does the annual maintenance dredging required for the harbors on Lake Ontario. The tug Brewerton, which had been in this service, foundered in deep water in Lake Ontario during the storm of December 8, 1917. It was at first thought that it might be possible to secure a tug by transfer from some other district for next season's work, but this has been found impracticable and it has, therefore, become necessary to purchase a tug. An additional appropriation of $30,000 is deemed advisable for this purpose. It is, therefore, recommended that, if practicable, the amount of the above item for maintenance be increased from $13,000 to $43,000.

Very truly, yours,

FREDERIC V. ABBOT,
Brigadier General, Engineers,
Acting Chief of Engineers.

Mr. SMALL. It is only necessary to add that this tug is used in all the Lake Ontario harbors, and it is absolutely essential that they should have another steam tug to replace the one destroyed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Under what authority of law can the Chief of Engineers, or the War Department, or any other department, proceed to construct a tug costing $30,000 out of an appropriation for maintenance of $43,000 for specifically named harbors?

Mr. SMALL. There is a general authority in past acts appropriating for these harbors for the maintenance of a Government-owned dredge and an accompanying tug, and under that authority they could replace the tug that has been destroyed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I assume that at some time or other this tug was authorized under a specific item in some river and harbor bill or some other measure. Now, the point I make is that under an item for maintenance it does not seem to me that we could build an entirely new craft from keel to masthead. If we desired to raise that tug from the bottom of the lake, repair it, and restore it to its former condition, I can see where it might be done under previous authority; but I do not know of any existing law which would authorize the building of an entirely new craft or the creation of a new agency under an item for maintenance unless some specific authority is carried in the law.

Mr. SMALL. May I say to the gentleman that his position would be correct if the authorization had been simply to purchase or to construct a specific tug; but the authorization here was general—to maintain at all times a tug. The same general authority was given for the maintenance of a dredge, so that under that general authority if one is displaced or destroyed, as in this case, when the appropriation is made the authority will attach.

Mr. WALSH. I do not wish to be understood as quibbling, but I assert that maintenance, which refers to something that is in existence, can not comprehend the creation of a new agency or the construction of a new craft.

Mr. SMALL. I think the gentleman's inquiry was entirely appropriate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

San Francisco, Oakland, Richmond, Monterey, and Humboldt Harbors, Redwood and Petaluma Creeks, Napa River, San Pablo Bay, Mare Island Strait, and Suisun Channel, Cal.: For maintenance, $4,000; continuing improvement of Oakland Harbor, $100,000; in all, $104,000.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 15, line 7, strike out the words and numerals at the end of line 7, "in all, $104,000," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For improvement of Petaluma Creek, in accordance with report submitted in House document No. 849, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $20,000; in all, $124,000."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered in accordance with the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, based on conditions occurring since the bill was reported, and I ask to have the communication from the Chief of Engineers read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 22, 1918.

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: In response to your letter of March 16, 1918, addressed to the Acting Chief of Engineers, concerning the project for the improvement of Petaluma Creek, Cal., and the serious shoaling in San Pablo Bay, which obstructs the approach to this channel, I have the honor to state that the recent report from the district engineer, to which you refer, indicates that there is now a controlling depth of only 2 feet across the San Pablo flats outside the mouth of Petaluma Creek. The channel across these flats is not included in the existing project for Petaluma Creek, and the funds available for the maintenance of the latter can not therefore be applied to this channel in the bay. Petaluma Creek has a very substantial commerce, running over a couple hundred thousand tons a year, with a value of about $16,000,000, and it is a matter of great importance that adequate facilities should be provided to accommodate this traffic.

Two reports on this locality recommending additional improvement have been submitted to Congress in recent years, one in House Document No. 118, Sixty-third Congress, first session, which recommends only extending the channel across the shoal in San Pablo Bay, and the other in House Document No. 849, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, which, in addition to an approach channel in the bay, recommends four cut-offs at bad bends and a turning basin in the upper portion of the creek at an estimated total cost of $82,600 subject to certain conditions of local cooperation. The latter report is the one which should apparently be approved in case Congress is willing to extend the project for this locality at this time.

The Chief of Engineers is of the opinion, in which I concur, that the provision of an adequate approach channel across the flats in the bay is a matter of sufficient importance, on account of the transportation interests involved to constitute an emergency which would bring the new project within the policy adopted by the committee in the formulation of the pending bill. An initial appropriation of $40,000 is recommended in the project document, but it is believed that $20,000 would be sufficient to meet the present emergency requiring additional depth across the shoal in San Pablo Bay. It is therefore recommended that the pending bill be amended so as to make an appropriation of this amount for the improvement of Petaluma Creek, Cal., in accordance with the report printed in House Document No. 849, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document.

Very respectfully,

BENEDICT CROWELL,
Acting Secretary of War.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the controlling factor which makes this project an emergency is this: Petaluma Creek has been under improvement for some years. It is an important channel, as the communication of the Chief of Engineers states. It has 217,000 tons of commerce valued at $17,000,000. The existing project only embraces the creek itself. It empties into San Pablo Bay and very recently shoals have formed in the bay at the mouth of the channel, so there is now only about 2 feet of water, a depth which virtually closes the entrance channel to commerce. So, unless we adopt this amendment, which provides for the removal of these shoals, we virtually permit an embargo to exist on this important commerce on Petaluma Creek. If it was simply meritorious, and that was its only virtue, the amendment would not be asked for, but it is an emergency because of the important commerce on Petaluma Creek, which is now practically closed to the entrance at San Pablo Bay.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a brief statement relating to the Los Angeles Harbor proposition in this bill. As chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals, I do not intend to concede, waive, or yield any of the rights, privileges, or prerogatives belonging to that committee. Acting in response to the unanimous expressed desire of the members of that committee we intend to insist that all bills and measures that should properly be referred to that committee be so referred in the future. I recently became chairman of this committee, and I desire to state that we are a live active committee, having frequent meetings and giving prompt consideration to all measures referred to us, but, Mr. Chairman, regardless of our attitude as thus expressed, nevertheless I want to say that I believe that this item of the bill more justly and properly belongs with the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and therefore so believing I do not intend to make any point of order against this item of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Columbia and lower Willamette Rivers below Vancouver, Wash., and Portland, Oreg., and mouth of Columbia River, Oreg. and Wash.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance of Columbia and lower Willamette Rivers below Vancouver, Wash., and Portland, Oreg., $250,000.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I was not present in the House when the item in reference to the Mississippi River was passed, and I beg the indulgence of the committee for five minutes to refer to the matter of experimental work on the upper river. I was instrumental in having incorporated in the rivers and harbors bill two years ago the amendment requiring the Chief of Engineers to experiment with tows and barges on the upper river, the navigable portion thereof, both with heavy and light freight. I did that because the original warrant for such experimentation was contained in the rivers and harbors act of 1910. In order to get results the amendment was offered and accepted.

In that amendment the two years provided for have about elapsed. The experimentation was undertaken by Col. Goltra last fall with barges loaded with coal to St. Paul, and with return cargoes of iron ore from St. Paul to St. Louis. I was in hopes that under the amendment of two years ago the experimental work might be more elaborate, that it might not be confined to purely engineering problems, but that it might cover questions of navigation. As to this the engineers might profit by the experience of the old pilots—might take a leaf out of the book of experience of other nations where rivers had been made navigable by the use of chains and cableways. There are stretches of the upper river where chains and cables might be made efficient. On the Elbe River, Germany, there is a stretch of 275 miles which is chained, and on the upper regions of the Rhine cables are in use. Through these instrumentalities the swift currents are overcome and commerce is expedited. That amendment of two years permitted the Secretary of War to do, through the engineers, this work, or through such board as he might appoint. It seems to me civilians might be called in to aid in making these experiments. The report presented to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, as shown in the evidence of Col. Goltra, shows that we have got a navigable river on the upper Mississippi, a thing which those of us who have lived on the banks many years were aware of. I have with me the latest report made by Gen. Keller, based on the report made to him by Col. Mitchell, engineer in charge at St. Louis. I desire to have that made a part of the RECORD.

There is now being built a steamer at St. Louis by Government authority which will meet the conditions of the upper river navigation which were not met with by the Nokomis with her draft of 6 feet. It is hoped that when this vessel takes a tow up river she will not meet with the difficulties of the Nokomis. If this work is fully and successfully demonstrated, I am quite confident that the commerce of the upper river will be restored. I ask unanimous consent that the report of Gen. Keller be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The following is the report:

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, April 1, 1918.

Hon. JOHN J. ESCH, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ESCH: In accordance with the promise of my letter of March 21 I take pleasure in inclosing an extract from a letter just received from our district engineer at St. Louis.

Very truly, yours,

C. KELLER,
Brigadier General, Engineers, Secretary.

WAR DEPARTMENT
UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE.
St. Louis, Mo., March 28, 1918.

Brig. Gen. CHAS. KELLER,
Secretary Committee on Inland Waterways,
601 G Street NW., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GEN. KELLER: In response to your letter dated March 23, the following statement is submitted concerning the experiments made during the late summer and fall of last year in commercial towing between St. Louis and St. Paul:

In the early summer effort was made by the department to organize a transportation line, to be operated by the Government, with Government plant, to engage in commercial towing on the upper Mississippi River, to aid in relief of the general railway car shortage.

It was found, however, that this was impracticable, but that Government plant could be leased for such use to private parties, and arrangements were made to that end with Mr. Edward F. Goltra, of this city, as lessee, for the purpose of bringing Minnesota iron ore from St. Paul to the furnaces at St. Louis and to balance that traffic by towing coal from the Illinois fields near this city back to St. Paul. The only plant available for the purpose at that time were 2 towboats and 12 barges which had been borrowed by the Experimental Towboat Board from the Mississippi River Commission and from the St. Louis engineer district, and which were engaged at Keokuk during the spring and early summer in experiments under that board to determine the propelling powers of various types of towboat wheels and machinery. These vessels, therefore, were transferred to the lessee, although it was recognized that the towboats were too deep in draft and not well adapted to navigate the shoal channels of the upper Mississippi River during the low-water season.

Nearly 3,000 tons of coal were loaded by the lessee on six of the barges, which, in tow of the United States steamer Nokomis, started from St. Louis at the end of July. Although the usual low water season had begun and the stage of river was about that normal to the season, the boat made the upstream trip without difficulty or incident, arriving at St. Paul, August 14, with the heaviest tow probably that has ever been carried upstream on the upper Mississippi River.

The steamer took fuel from the barges on the way up, also for the downstream trip, leaving about 2,200 tons to be sold at St. Paul. Previous arrangements having been made between the city of St. Paul and the lessee, a dock was prepared by that city at which the coal could be unloaded, but unfortunately it had not been completed at the time of arrival. Some delay was thus caused, during which the river steadily declined to a very unusually low stage and maintained that low stage continuously during the remainder of the season. This river condition reduced the channel depths approximately to that of the draft of the Nokomis and accounts for the difficulties of the return trip.

After unloading the coal the six barges were reloaded for return trip with ore, again about 3,000 tons, which made the draft and width of tow too great for the channel available, and to complicate matters further, through some misunderstanding the railroad brought in, at the last moment, 500 additional tons of ore, which the lessee was compelled to unload from the cars and place upon four small wooden barges hastily borrowed for that purpose from the United States engineer office at St. Paul. These extra barges were added to the already overloaded Nokomis, and the boat started south at the last of August with such an unwieldy tow and great draft of boat that the whole grounded upon nearly every bar on the way south.

So many difficulties were encountered that the tow was finally broken up and divided into the charge of other small towboats of the Rock Island engineer office, and finally reached St. Louis October 20.

This experience resulted in financial loss to the lessee, but developed conclusively the controlling depth, 4 feet, for a wide tow at low water throughout the entire distance of 700 miles between the two cities, to which depth any vessels expected to navigate that stream must so conform in design that they may be controllable. In this connection it may be stated that the new barges soon to be built for this particular through traffic on the upper Mississippi River are designed with special reference to carrying large loads, about 850 tons each, of these low-grade freights on depths not exceeding 4 feet and at high water 2,500 tons each, drawing 8 feet, and the towboats, when drawing about 3 feet, are to have ample power to propel and fully control a tow of three such barges rafted into a tow in area (length and width) equal to that of the six barges of the Nokomis tow.

The lessee made attempt to send another tow of coal north October 4 to 20, but because of the trouble on the Nokomis's down trip, this was diverted to the Illinois River and the coal was discharged at the head of Hennepin Canal.

During all of this time the experiments of the towboat board, of course, have been stopped for want of floating plant and nothing further has been done by that board except the installation of new machinery and steam plant upon another large steamer King, at St. Louis, which will be used in continuing the wheel experiments or in towing, if equipment can be obtained. It is expected that this boat will be ready for service during the latter part of April, and it is hoped that another trip, towing coal to St. Paul and return with ore, may be made with this boat of great power with a much larger tow of barges than was possible with Nokomis at low water last fall. As the spring stage of high water will then prevail, it is expected thus to develop the high-water possibilities of the channel, which should present no difficulty to navigation on the scale intended.

Yours, sincerely,

WM. S. MITCHELL,
Assistant Engineer in Charge.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What was the trouble with the first boat that went up, too deep draft?

Mr. ESCH. Too deep a draft. On her return trip she struck about every sand bar in the river.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is there any necessity for using a boat of such a deep draft?

M. ESCH. No; the King will have a draft of 3 feet, with powerful engines and be able to take six barges in tow with a maximum capacity of 750 tons each.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I take it that it will be as effective as a towboat, nowithstanding it does not have as deep a draft?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. One further question, if the gentleman will permit. The gentleman spoke about the chain system prevailing on the rivers in Europe. That is to overcome the swift current. Is there a very swift current on the upper Mississippi?

Mr. ESCH. There are certain regions where the current may be two or three miles an hour, but it is not as rapid as it is on the upper reaches of the Rhine.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think not, but very much less. So that possibly it may not be necessary?

Mr. ESCH. It may not be necessary. In fact, Gen. Keller stated that the physics of flow on the upper Mississippi would make the chain or cable system impracticable.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. I would ask if this experimentation of which the gentleman has spoken went at all to the question as to whether it would be at all practicable in a commercial sense to overcome the rapids by chains or cables or anything of that kind?

Mr. ESCH. No experiments in that direction were made.

Mr. TILSON. It is simply a question of whether it is physically possible to do it by means of chains and cables?

Mr. ESCH. They made no demonstration with reference to chains and cables.

Mr. TILSON. What was the nature of the experimentation that they made?

Mr. ESCH. It was as to the character of the tow and the barge, the lines of the barge, and the tow, the character of the wheel that should be used in the tow to propel it, and whether they should use the tunnel or the stern wheel type.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a little further along that line. Is this line sufficiently supplied with terminal facilities, or is it affected in that kind of a way?

Mr. ESCH. St. Paul authorities constructed terminal facilities in order to unload the barges of coal brought up by the Nokomis, but their delay was one of the causes for Col. Goltra losing his $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Willamette River above Portland and at Willamette Falls, Yamhill and Clatskanie Rivers, Oreg.; Cowlitz, Lewis, and Grays Rivers, Wash.: For maintenance, $12,000; continuing improvement of Lewis River, including North and East Forks, $13,500; in all, $25,500.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 8 after the word "Yamhill" insert the word "River," and after the word "Clatskanie" change the word "Rivers" to "River," and add the words "from its mouth to the town of Clatskanie."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is this: The Government improved the lower river in 1902, and then later a subsequent proposal was adopted to improve the river above the bridge to the town of Clatskanie. The amount of money heretofore appropriated yearly for maintenance has only been applied to the stretch of the water from the town of Clatskanie down to the railroad bridge, leaving about 2 or 3 miles of the stream from the railroad bridge to the Columbia River without any money for its maintenance. The Government dredges go into the river and improve the upper portion of it, but they are not allowed, in passing in or out, to remove any obstruction that may exist in the lower river. Consequently the improvement of the upper river does not accomplish very much good in the movement of commerce. This amendment of mine does not increase the appropriation at all, but simply allows them to use on the entire stretch of the river the amount of money available for its maintenance.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, from the reading of the amendment I am not sure that I get the purport; but unless I misunderstand the gentleman, his amendment contemplates a modification of an existing project.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know whether that would be a correct interpretation or not. There is an existing project on the lower river of 40 feet in width and 6 feet in depth, and the engineers have reported, as the gentleman knows, a new project covering the entire river and making it into one project instead of two.

It now consists of two units instead of one and is a very short river. This would not be the adoption of a new project, but simply make available for removing small obstructions in the lower river—which has been improved by the Government and on which there is an existing project—the moneys available for the improvement or maintenance of any part of the river.

Mr. SMALL. I may say to the gentleman that under existing law and under the provision carried in this bill any part of this appropriation may be applied to any improvement within the group. Any part of the $25,500 carried for this group may be applied to any improvement named in this group of items.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is a balance for this river now on the books of the Treasury of $1,154.27, which can be used for the maintenance of the channel from Clatskanie down to the railroad bridge. It is manifestly insufficient to improve the upper portion of the river unless the lower portion is maintained accordingly, and this amendment will allow the money to be used on the entire stretch of the river some 4 miles, so that there may be uniform depth of water, and boats seeking the upper river can go in there and get their cargoes and depart with an even depth of water in all places.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman say whether that part of the river is at present under improvement, under existing projects, the part the gentleman wishes the money expended on?

Mr. HAWLEY. The lower part, which is the part I wish the money expended on, was a project completed in 1902—6 feet in depth, 40 feet in width. It is an existing project. Subsequent to that time an association engaged in dyking the lands agreed to maintain the river in connection with their dyking work, and they did that for a time. They have completed their dyking work and they no longer have any interest in maintaining the river.

The river now remains unmaintained in the lower portion, and this amendment would enable the money to be used for the maintenance of existing project completed in 1902.

Mr. SMALL. Then if the only effect of this amendment is to authorize the money to be used on a project which has already been adopted, the engineers already have that authority, and the amendment would be surplusage. On the other hand, if the amendment contemplates work which is not embraced in any existing project—that is, a project heretofore adopted by Congress—then it would be improper, and ought not to be adopted. So in one case it would be surplusage and in the other case it would be improper.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman I think will agree that the balance now to the credit of this river of $1,154.27, appropriated specifically for the maintenance of the river from the railroad bridge to the town of Clatskanie, can not be used for the maintenance of the lower part of the river unless that authorization is extended to cover the other project adopted and completed by the Government?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, with the consent of the gentleman, of course, that we may pass over this amendment until the end of the bill, and in the meantime we will endeavor to understand it more fully.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the paragraph and amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon be passed over. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 16, after line 11, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For improvement of the channel in the inner harbor of Coos Bay, Oreg., from the entrance to Smiths Mill, in accordance with the recommendation contained in House Document No. 325, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, and in accordance with the conditions set forth in said document, $130,000."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, the people of Coos Bay, under the laws of the State of Oregon, organized a port district and created a port commission. This commission has the power to levy taxes and sell bonds. Under its powers the port commission sold about $650,000 worth of bonds. This entire amount of money, and some more obtained from citizens who bought the material dredged out of the bay for the purpose of filling in their lots in the lower parts of the city, was expended in opening a channel 25 feet in depth from the entrance to Smiths Mill, of a suitable and convenient width, with two large turning basins opposite the towns of North Bend and Marshfield. Under the law the port commission is limited in the amount of indebtedness it may incur, and in the expenditure of this $650,000 it has attained the limit of its power to incur an indebtedness. There is existing on the bay, or was before the commission undertook to improve the bay, a Government project of an 18-foot depth, and for a long period of years the Government maintained such a channel. But an 18-foot depth was not sufficient to accommodate the commerce of the place. The water on the bar is ample to accommodate any vessel drawing 25 feet of water or more. During the last three years some portions of this channel built by the port commission have silted in. The bottom of the bay is, in part, of soft material, and the sides of the channel made by the port have silted in to some extent in places. There is a project favorably reported by the engineers, pending before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and before the House for a 22-foot channel from the entrance to Smiths Mill, and that is the one I am advocating at this time.

The people have put about $650,000 into this improvement. They ask the Government now to put up $1 where they have put $5 to maintain that improvement. They are sawing lumber on the bay at the rate, I should say, of about 600,000 feet at least per day. The greater proportion of that lumber is sent south to California, and a considerable part of it is used in the making of ships for the service of the Government in the war.

This is one of the best spruce sections of the West. The great spruce section runs from northern California to southwestern Washington, and this is one of the best parts of the spruce section. They are sawing spruce for the making of Government aeroplanes, and some of the finest spruce that ever has grown, I suppose, anywhere grows in this country. Now, unless they can ship out the other lumber cut from the logs—and only about 5 or 10 per cent of the spruce log goes into aeroplane stock by any possibility, and therefore it leaves 90 or 95 per cent of the log—and unless they can ship that out profitably they must discontinue the cutting of spruce. There is one other thing to be mentioned. Both the towns of North Bend and Marshfield have public docks to which the public has access and service at all times. Since the people have done this amount of work they now ask the Government to restore and maintain the channel constructed by them to a depth of 22 feet. The $130,000 recommended by the engineers will make available the depth of water through the main channel necessary to accommodate for the present the great and growing commerce of that section. It seems to me that the proposition is a reasonable one, when $1 is to be appropriated by the Congress is matched by $5 expended by the community. I trust it will meet the favor of the committee.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this is a new project and does not come within the policy adopted by the committee for a new project. As I stated before, the committee have, after mature deliberation, determined to include no new projects in this bill except such as were intimately associated with the prosecution of the war and so recommended by the Secretary of War. This new project was not so recommended. It is not at all necessary in opposing this amendment to say anything in disparagement of the project. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], whom we all so highly esteem, came before the committee and presented this project, as well as several other new projects in his State. He presented them clearly and strongly and did all in his power to convince the committee that it ought to be included in the bill, and if the committee were inclined to yield to anyone they would certainly have been inclined to yield to the gentleman who now offers this amendment. I have here before me a large list of new projects in different sections of the country just as important, I may say, as the new project advocated by the gentleman. It would not be fair to them and to other Members and to other sections if any project were permitted to stay in the bill which does not come within this policy of the committee, and as we supposed and still believe to be a policy which has the approval of the House. With that statement, I hope the committee will vote against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 16, after line 11, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"For the improvement of the bar, entrance, and harbor of the Coquille River, Oreg., in accordance with the recommendation contained in House Document No. 207, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, and in accordance with the conditions set forth in said document, $64,000."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I say frankly to the committee that this is also a new project, but it seems to me to possess such merit that it merits a brief statement in the consideration of the bill.

The people of the Coquille River Valley have formed a port and created a port commission under the authority of State law, and for the improvement of the port and immediate entrance to the river have tendered to the Government dollar for dollar, and in addition to that they have already expended a considerable sum in the improvement of the river, and they intend to spend a considerable sum more in addition to this $64,000 which they pledged themselves to spend to supplement the equal amount of $64,000 to be furnished by the Government if this amendment is inserted in the bill.

There are a number of mills on the river. During this past summer, when they had some important spruce-cutting contracts with the Aircraft Board, a shoal formed about a thousand feet inside the mouth of the river, and the mills were compelled to close down their operations three days out of six several times. They could not ship the side cut of the lumber out of the river on account of this obstruction.

Now, the $64,000 asked to be appropriated by Congress, to be used in connection with a similar sum or a larger amount to be furnished by the port commission, will remove this obstruction and prevent its recurrence by means of improvement at the mouth of the river.

It is important to the Government that it has this airplane stock. As I said in connection with Coos Bay, this section has some of the best spruce found anywhere. You can get a greater percentage of fine stock from spruce grown there than from that grown in almost any other section of the country, and it is necessary that the Government should have this airplane stock. The allies need it. There is a demand for it on the part of England and on the part of France. We can furnish it, but we must sell the side cut when we furnish the spruce for the airplane stock, and that is the reason why I take the time of the committee to submit this project for its consideration. It has merit. The people are willing to put in dollar for dollar with the Government, and more, showing their confidence in it. It is not a scheme to do anything in the nature of boosting a community. It is a plan to enable them to continue to do business profitably to themselves and to serve the country at this time. The proposed improvement is favorably reported by the engineers in House Document No. 70, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, and describes at length the public advantages to be derived from the improvement.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am not sufficiently familiar with the project which the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] has just presented to discuss that alone, but I want very much to commend the spirit of the vicinity and State which he represents in their plan of putting some money of their own into these projects.

I have long contended that the great objection to these river and harbor bills would be done away with if every community was required to put up dollar for dollar with the amount the Government was expected to put into the projects. It is a plan, however, that has not been adopted or insisted upon by the Government to any great extent. It has been done in some river and harbor bills, but so far as I know very few, and the result is that only in a few cases like this which the gentleman from Oregon has mentioned have the communities most benefited by the projects been willing to put any of their own money into them. They ought to be required in all cases to at least equal the amount that the Government supplies. If they were called upon in every instance to advance that amount, or to make good their power to produce it, when the Government puts its money into a project, there would not be very much trouble with these river and harbor bills. The good faith of the project and those who prompted it would be shown at the outset. There would be no doubt about the question whether it was in reality a scheme to get money out of the Government rather than to benefit the country at large. Of course, the country at large always benefits by the improvement of rivers and harbors, but the immediate community, the town itself, where the work is done, always benefits the most, and that community or that town, as the case may be, ought to be required to put up a similar amount of money, as in the case that the gentleman from Oregon has spoken of. I hope that that will commend itself to the further attention of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

An objection is sometimes made that this would not be practical in the case of the improvement of rivers flowing through different States, but in such cases the construction of terminal facilities could be required. We have spent millions on rivers like the Ohio, and then found that the river so improved was not used because the towns on its banks had no facilities to enable boats to use the river. We should require these towns to build suitable wharves, to provide machinery for loading and unloading and to make the wharves accessible. When we have done this and made the railroads connect with the water transportation, we shall have a system which will be a matter of pride instead of a disgrace.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I shall occupy only a moment. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] candidly admits that this is a new project and that it does not come within the policy adopted by the committee, which I have just had the honor to state. What I might say about this project would simply be a repetition of what I expressed in the committee about the former amendment, and for these reasons we hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 16, after line 11, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"For the improvement of the Yaquina Bar, Bay, and Harbor, Oreg., in accordance with the recommendation contained in House Document No. 109, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, and in accordance with the conditions set forth in said document."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say frankly this is a new project. The people on the Yaquina Bay and River have formed the port of Toledo and the port of Newport, and have submitted a proposition to the Engineer Department to supply half the money necessary to improve the bar entrance and harbor. They have, under the permission of the War Department, already undertaken this improvement. They entered into a contract with a gentleman formerly an engineer in the War Department to supervise the expenditure of the money provided by them. They have issued $150,000 worth of bonds, and have sold them, I understand, and have let contracts for the beginning of the improvement at the bar. The improvement will cost about $836,000, as recommended by the engineers. One-half of that the community will provide—$418,000.

The purpose of this amendment, however, is not to appropriate any money at this time on the part of the Government, but it is for the Government to take over the project and to conduct the improvement under the supervision of the engineers, so that hereafter, if Congress should adopt the project—and I am confident it will—the community will be entitled to full credit on its proportion of the expenditure without question for all the money it is now expending. The Engineer's Office reports favorably on the project. There are about 30,000,000,000 feet of timber as one item for development there to furnish tonnage for the waterway, and the engineers, in House Document No. 109, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, state at length the advantages to be realized from this improvement and favorably recommend it. But the point I rose to explain was that this amendment does not ask any money for the improvement. It merely gives authority to the engineers to take over and take charge of the improvement, so that the money now being advanced by the port for the improvement may be properly expended under engineering directions. It is a very worthy project, and the people of the locality have shown their good faith in providing so large a sum of money.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman admits, this is a new project, which he presented to the committee along with several other Pacific coast projects, which the committee could not include in the bill under the policy they adopted and which they applied to every section of the country. We therefore hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have been much interested in and desire to indorse the statements presented by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], who is the senior Representative in Congress of the great Northwest. The presentations he has made in behalf of important projects, and which technically are in reality projects under way at important harbors on the coast of Oregon, apply equally and with full force to the harbors on the extreme north Pacific coast of the United States, that is, the State of Washington, and to the harbors in the Puget Sound district. My colleague, Mr. HADLEY, and myself represent districts which include all of the Pacific Ocean coast of the State of Washington, and our districts together the whole of Puget Sound, except that part in front of and across the bay from the city of Seattle, represented by our colleague, Mr. MILLER. In addition, my district carries a large part of the Columbia River, while Mr. HADLEY's district carries the length of the straits of Fuca—in all, a great stretch of navigable water and many important harbors. At these harbors are improvement projects, some in abeyance and some coming under the head of new projects. My colleague [Mr. HADLEY] and myself have presented them to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and in accordance with the policy of that committee made necessary by the war, now refrain from pressing them on the floor. We withhold our proposed amendments, inasmuch as our arguments would be along exactly the lines of those presented by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], and the answer of the chairman of the committee [Mr. SMALL] of course would be quite the same, and the action of the House the same. So neither Mr. HADLEY nor myself will take the time of the Members. We realize that our projects will be advanced exactly as will other new projects when war conditions permit. I desire to congratulate the Rivers and Harbors Committee on having drawn and presented a tight, economical, and proper war-time bill. The time will come, of course, when the committee will take in these meritorious so-called new projects on the north Pacific.

I was pleased to hear the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] discuss the matter of local contributions. As the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee know, nearly all of our newer and rapidly growing Northwest places have gone into the port commission plan, by which the people of all the community immediately benefited tax themselves to do their part of their particular river and harbor improvements, and then call upon the Government to help finish them on the Government's plan, and to contribute part of the maintenance.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Puget Sound and its tributary waters, Olympia, Tacoma, and Bellingham Harbors, Lake Washington Ship Canal, Snohomish and Skagit Rivers, Swinomish Slough, waterway connecting Port Townsend Bay and Oak Bay, Columbia River between Wenatchee and Kettle Falls, Wash.: For maintenance, $10,000.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, we have now completed section 1, which authorizes all the appropriations, with the exception of one item, the Ohio River, which by unanimous consent was passed over on yesterday. I now ask to return to the item for the Ohio River.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee will now return to the item for the Ohio River, beginning with line 24, on page 10, and ending with line 25, on page 11. There is an amendment pending offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to strike out certain language and insert.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the committee simply to say for the information of the committee that some question arose as to whether the language in the bill would modify unequivocally the existing project, and I stated to him with others that by the uniform construction of such language by the War Department it would not definitely modify the project, but would only give the War Department the opportunity of endeavoring by experiment to ascertain whether a stable 9-foot channel could be maintained below Lock and Dam No. 48 by open-channel work. But in order to relieve any fear upon that point, at the proper time, I shall offer an amendment which will read as follows:

Provided, That the modification of the existing project by omitting locks and dams below Dam No. 48, as herein authorized, shall not become effective until it shall be satisfactorily demonstrated that the project depth of 9 feet on that section of the river can be maintained by open-channel work.

I will say that I have submitted this amendment to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] and also to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], who interested themselves in the matter, and I think it has also been submitted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. I just wish to make this statement at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I am entitled to any further time in argument of this motion or not. Yesterday I occupied 10 minutes, or a part of 10 minutes, and if the Chair will recognize me now I shall not take very much of the time of the committee.

This language in the bill, in the proviso as it now stands, authorizes the Secretary of War to modify the Ohio River project by eliminating all locks and dams below Lock No. 48. In Gen. Black's recommendation or report to the Secretary of War he states that experience has demonstrated that it is very improbable, owing to the slackness of the water in the Ohio River between Lock 48 and the mouth of the Tennessee, that an open channel can be maintained by dredging. He goes far enough to state that it can not be demonstrated whether it can until they have experimented with the dredging of the river at that point, and he simply recommends that not only the locks and dams be held in abeyance but the question of whether to construct locks and dams or to maintain a channel by open-channel work both be held in abeyance until experience has demonstrated whether dredging is feasible, or which is more feasible than the other. Now, my motion was made to strike out this language because the power and authority ought not to be given to the Secretary of War to determine whether this project shall be modified. Congress adopted this project in the beginning, and all that ought to be done, if anything is done, is to give the War Department power, if it has not the power now, to conduct experiments to determine whether it is feasible to maintain this 9-foot channel by open-channel work, and then report back to Congress their findings upon the subject, and allow Congress to determine whether the project shall be modified in accordance with these suggestions.

Gen. Black states that that is going to be done. It is not necessary to have further authority to do it. It is going to be done under the existing project for open-channel improvements. So this language is not necessary in the bill. It will in all probability be two or three years before they determine whether it is feasible to maintain it by dredging, and by that time Congress will have had the information and will not in advance give the Secretary of War the power to modify the project, because the Chief of Engineers states that it is very doubtful whether it can be done between Lock 48 and the mouth of the Tennessee River, although the circumstances may be more favorable below the mouth of the Tennessee River.

I hope the proviso will be stricken out of the bill. Evidently the War Department will go ahead, as it proposes to experiment and see whether it can be modified, and if they report back to Congress that it can be modified Congress can take the matter up and determine it for itself.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the committee for two or three minutes. We are discussing a comparatively unimportant matter in the Ohio River and omitting a most important feature involved in this paragraph.

Criticism has been made in the past that commerce upon many of our interior rivers did not exist in sufficient volume to justify the appropriations which have been made by Congress and expended. There has been some ground for the criticism, and it is my purpose very briefly to point out the cause and the remedy.

The underlying cause has been that the country, including Congress, were of the opinion that the mere creating of a deeper channel which made the stream navigable would promote commerce. That is only one of the essentials. Universal experience has shown that a mere channel does not make commerce. The best students of the subject say that some of the essentials in addition to navigable channels are adequate boat lines, adequate water terminals, and a system for the interchange of traffic between the water lines and the railroads.

Every one of these essentials must be provided under our present scheme of improvements of rivers and harbors by the respective localities contiguous to the improved rivers. Unless we have boat lines of a proper type, unless we have water terminals, unless we have an interchange of traffic between railroads and water lines, we can not have a commerce which will be commensurate with the expenditures necessary for the improvement of the channels of these rivers.

The committee concluded to take the Ohio River as an object lesson. That river is 968 miles long from Pittsburgh to Cairo. In the river and harbor act of 1910 we adopted a project for the improvement of that great river, contemplating 54 locks and dams at a total cost of more than $60,000,000.

It is a proper inquiry, Is the country going to get a return for its investment of $60,000,000? It will not get that return unless there are boat lines, unless there are water terminals and interchange of traffic.

We requested the Chief of Engineers to detail an engineer of the corps to make an investigation of the Ohio River, of every city and considerable town, as to the existence of water terminals, and he made a report showing that there was not a city or town upon that river that had a municipally owned terminal, or a terminal of any kind which was adequate and sufficient to meet the demands of traffic which would be expected to develop when the improvement was completed.

The committee held up the appropriation of $5,000,000 for the Ohio River for a little while until we could receive some assurance. These assurances were only partially satisfactory and complete. And, by direction of the committee, I wish to serve notice upon the cities and towns contiguous to the Ohio that if they wish this large annual appropriation of $5,000,000 to continue they must get busy, and must submit to the committee in the formulation of the next bill assurances which will be satisfactory that they will do their duty; that they will put on boat lines of the proper number and type and that they will construct adequate terminals. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMALL. If that is not done, the committee will not continue to recommend appropriations for this great river. Of course we understand that in this policy we are simply the servants of the House, and we ask the House for its approval.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to ask the gentleman how that proposition affects the amendment before the House. There is no effort to strike out that part of the bill that authorizes an investigation as to terminals. Therefore the gentleman's remarks are not appropriate to the particular proviso under consideration.

While I am asking that I would like to get an idea of what sort of terminal facilities the gentleman has in view. He says not a single city has a municipally owned terminal or a water wharfage sufficient to accommodate commerce that would justify this expenditure. What has the gentleman in mind by stating that railroad terminals must be constructed on rivers so as to bring about an interchange of commerce? I do not get what the gentleman has in view. There are many towns where they would have to move the entire depot or freight yards in order to comply with that condition.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I have not the time now to explain what is an adequate water terminal nor its relationship to local traffic or through traffic, which means traffic going partly by rail and partly by water. When I presented this bill I had the honor of going into that somewhat fully, and if gentlemen will read those remarks when printed in the RECORD perhaps they may give some information.

I also commend to the gentleman from Kentucky the reading of the report of Maj. Stewart, which is printed in the committee hearings, and I also commend to gentlemen of the House the third volume of a Report on Water Transportation by Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, the former Commissioner of Corporations, in which is discussed in that volume the subject of water terminals. It is one of the most informing and useful publications which has ever been authorized by Congress upon the subject of water transportation.

Coming now to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I submit that if these six locks and dams below Lock and Dam 48 can be omitted and we can maintain a stable channel of 9 feet by open-channel work, it ought to be done.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. In a moment. Under the language that is in the bill there is no doubt in the world that it does not eliminate locks and dams unconditionally, but only permits the Chief of Engineers for a few seasons to experiment and see if it can be maintained by open-channel work. In the meantime they will be occupied in the construction of locks and dams above Lock and Dam No. 48. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. I understand that the gentleman, in case the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky shall fail, will offer the amendment which he read?

Mr. SMALL. That is correct.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I wish to take exception at least to a part of the remarks made by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with reference to the fact that there are no terminal facilities on the Ohio River. At the city of Pittsburgh there is a very capacious wharf that is used entirely by steamers of the Ohio River, and the Monongahela River, and those that ply on the lower waters of the Allegheny River. There is a large wharf boat maintained there for the use of those steamers.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. A very general misconception exists on that point. My old and good friend Col. Vance wrote me a letter in which he said they have terminals on the Ohio. I heard the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] yesterday suggest that Cincinnati was provided with terminals. I have heard other gentlemen dispute that, but I am content with the verdict of any gentleman who will give study to this matter and reach a final conclusion. The kind of terminals necessary for commerce on our interior rivers do not exist upon the Ohio River at any city or town.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, that just raises the question suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky as to the character of terminals that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are going to require, that must be provided.

In former days when the Ohio River was a great highway of commerce and before the railroads were constructed, so as to take away that river commerce, this wharf that is now open in the city of Pittsburgh from the point at the junction of the two rivers clear up to Smithfield Street along the river front was lined with boats plying upon those rivers. There are but three or four lines of steamers plying down the Ohio River and but two or three plying up the Monongahela River now, but that wharf is still there, nearly a mile in length, extending from Water Street clear down to the low water of the Monongahela River, and there is a large wharf boat maintained there, and the same facilities are there for developing the commerce that always have existed ever since Pittsburgh was first a navigable port. But if you are going to insist that you must establish in the midst of a populous city like Pittsburgh terminal facilities which carry with it a rail connection, with a wharf boat into which freight can be discharged, then you are setting up an impossible condition; it can not be done. You have got to go outside of the city of Pittsburgh, just as you would have to go outside the city of Wheeling, or the city of Steubenville, and get a point where the railroad can be built down to the river and where a wharf boat can be maintained and transfer facilities built up and freight transferred direct from a boat on the river into a railroad car. That can not be now built in the city of Pittsburgh, but it can be built, I submit, either up the Monongahela or up the Allegheny, at which point the various railroads of the country run along and extend along down either bank of the river. There seems to be a mistaken impression that there is not now an increase in the commerce on the navigable rivers of western Pennsylvania. That is farthest from the truth. Let me read statistics from Locks 3 and 4 on the Monongahela River, taken on the 1st of April, this year, for the month of March. Through Lock 3, one end of which is located in my district, there was passed 1,392,400 tons of coal in the month of March, as against 1,073,000 tons last year, or an increase of 318,000 tons, exceeding all prior records.

There was also locked through at the same time 43,500 tons of coke, 69,460 tons of sand and stone, and there were 1,260 lockages through that lock in the month of April, and for three days it was closed on account of high water. Through Lock 4, which also has one end on one side of the river in my district, there passed 2,599,000 bushels of coal during that month, 1,658,000 bushels of coke, 47,000 cubic feet of lumber, and there were 1,061 lockages, showing larger increase in every part of the tonnage of the Monongahela River, and yet it is lined with a railroad on either bank. The wharves in most of the small towns have been occupied by the railroads, and all these towns and ports need along the river in order to develop them and bring back a return of this commerce is to improve this Ohio River so that you can get somewhere with the commerce developed on these rivers which form the Ohio.

The city of Pittsburgh has preserved for the use of navigation on the Monongahela and Allegheny Rivers, which join within the city limits and form the Ohio, long stretches of river front or wharfage, and this has been kept and preserved especially for the use of boats plying on the Ohio, Monongahela, and Allegheny Rivers and their tributaries. Large amounts of coal, sand, stone, lumber, and other material are handled from these docks at the present time. Steamers regularly plying on the Ohio and Monongahela Rivers carry passengers, freight, farm produce, and a great amount of the manufactured commodities from the Pittsburgh mills.

There is more coal moved down the Monongahela River than any other similar stream of water in the world. But it must be remembered that the Ohio is navigable only a portion of the year, hence it is not possible to develop a steady, regular river business between Pittsburgh and the lower river ports because of the frequent interruption on account of low water in the Ohio. The improvement of the Monongahela has shown steady and continued increase in coal and other freight, and that is because it is constantly open and ready for use. Transportation of coal, coke, stone, and other freight over the Monongahela River is one-third to one-half less in point of cost than transportation of the same commodity by rail and very much quicker and more regular and in greater volume.

Much of the greatness of Pittsburgh is due to the early river traffic coming up the Ohio and down the Monongahela and Allegheny and being transferred at Pittsburgh into larger boats for the lower river traffic.

A study of the situation and the possibility of water-borne commerce in and around Pittsburgh has convinced everyone who has given it serious and thorough attention of this fact, that as soon as the Ohio is so improved that commerce will move all the year freight will develop in abundance on the Ohio River. It has even been the subject of a special report of the Government engineers at Pittsburgh that by the improvement of the Youghiogheny River, at a cost of considerably less than $1,000,000, a large transfer wharf could be established at Suterville, 28 miles above Pittsburgh, at which point the Baltimore & Ohio, the Western Maryland, the New York Central, and the Pennsylvania Railroad all come down to the water's edge of that river. This would relieve the congestion in Pittsburgh on the railroads by enabling them to send their freight south and west by water through this transfer point, and freight could be brought by the river up to this point, relieving Pittsburgh of its congested condition for eastbound traffic, and transferred from boats to cars and sent east over these three trunk-line railroads. Now that the Government has control of both the rivers and the railroads, this plan is entirely feasible, and in the opinion of the Government engineers will relieve the congestion existing in and around Pittsburgh on the railroads and in the first pool of the Monongahela River.

Therefore I am strongly in favor of completing the improvement of the Ohio River by the erection of the remaining locks and dams therein required to carry slack water to Cincinnati.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to say at this point that I most earnestly hope and believe that the House will give hearty support to the program as outlined by the chairman of the committee. I come from the city of St. Louis, and those from that section will remember many hard-fought battles on this floor for the saving of any appropriations for the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers. The experiment referred to a while ago by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] has been sufficiently successful thus far very materially to silence those who have said that transportation was forever impossible on those upper rivers. I not only believe, but I feel I absolutely know, that those rivers will come back to their rightful place of service in the Mississippi Valley commerce. St. Louis, and I may say Kansas City and some of the other cities, but St. Louis has taken well the point made by the chairman of this committee some two years ago. The city of St. Louis realized that if we did have the commerce we did not have the modern facilities with which to handle this freight and the purchase of the line that is to be run along by the river, the installment of new and modern loading and unloading devices are being pushed as rapidly as can be. It will mean much to the men who represent the districts along those rivers if they will see to it that in their municipal campaigns in the years that are just before us, this be made a part of the municipal policy for the cities and that dockage fronts and freight transportation and things of that sort shall be brought back once more to the attention of the cities and receive their support. It has been a matter of education and agitation in St. Louis. A few years ago when you talked about reviving river transportation you were laughed at even there in the city, but in the last few years the people have begun to believe that it is possible, that it is practicable, and the appropriations have begun to come from the city treasury and the support has begun to come more strongly from the organizations throughout the city generally. I only want to say at this time that we realize that the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is a gentleman with a rather stiff spine and when he says something must be done he generally means just what he says. I hope that the men, especially from along the river districts throughout the entire Nation, shall see to it that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have the most loyal support by going back to their municipalities and to their districts where these docks and harbors and freight stations are to be placed and not only urge upon them but demand that these municipalities shall make the greatest endeavor and shall come across with their part of the expenses before they can be expected to support these appropriations as they come in the committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "Provided further," in lines 5 and 6, page 11, insert the following: "That the modification of existing projects by omitting locks and dams below Dam No. 48 as herein authorized shall not become effective until it shall be satisfactorily demonstrated that the project depth of 9 feet on that section of the river can be maintained by open-channel work: And provided further."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARKLEY: Page 11, line 1, after the word "Provided," strike out the remainder of the proviso and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to conduct experimental open-channel dredging below Lock No. 48, with a view to determining whether the projected 9-foot channel can be maintained by that method to greater advantage than by constructing locks and dams, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1094, second session, Sixty-fourth Congress; and he is directed to report to Congress annually the progress and result of such experiments."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] states that the object he has in view in his amendment and proviso is to give the department authority to make this experimental dredging, yet his amendment carries with it the proposition that the Secretary of War shall have final authority to modify this project without ever coming back to Congress or making any report about it. My substitute simply authorizes the department to go ahead with this experiment below Dam No. 48 to determine whether it is feasible to substitute that method for the lock-and-dam method and then to report back to Congress the progress and result of that experiment. I think that is the better way to do it, because it keeps Congress not only advised, but it leaves it in the hands of Congress to determine later by reason of these experiments whether the project shall be modified or left as originally enacted into law by the original canalization act. I hope the substitute to the gentleman's amendment will be adopted. I regret that the committee did not strike out the entire provision about modifying the original project; but as that could not be done, my substitute would leave the matter in a better situation and ought to be adopted.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Where is Lock 48—just at what point on the Ohio River?

Mr. SMALL. It is 6 miles below Henderson, Ky.

Mr. ROBBINS. What is the stage of water at that point that would warrant the change of this method of improving the channel?

Mr. SMALL. That varies, of course, with flood conditions and the amount of water coming down the river, but the adoption of this project simply authorizes an experiment in open-channel work with a view of obtaining the project depth of 9 feet below Lock 48 to the mouth of the river, and ascertain if it is possible thereby to avoid the large expenditure necessary in the construction of locks and dams. Mr. Chairman, just this expression about the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky: The substitute is both improper and unnecessary. It is unnecessary because the same purpose which the gentleman has in view by his substitute is accomplished by the language in the bill, and if there is any doubt whether the language in the bill accomplishes it, then unequivocally it is done by the amendment which I have offered by direction of the committee, so that the purpose the gentleman has in mind in his substitute is fully accomplished by the provision in the bill plus the committee amendment which I have offered. Now, the gentleman's substitute is improper for these reasons. This report which we adopt here gives the Secretary of War the authority to substitute a fixed dam at or near Emsworth, Pa., for the old Locks and Dams No. 1 and 2. It also authorizes the Secretary of War to substitute fixed for movable dams wherever in his judgment it may be advisable to do, and, third, it gives him the right to experiment with a view to substituting open-channel work below Lock and Dam No. 48. Therefore the amendment of the gentleman in striking out this report here which it is proposed to adopt takes out two of the most valuable features which are recommended.

I would like to say to the gentleman and also to others that he misconstrues the language in the amendment as reported in the bill of the committee. The language there conforms to the usual verbiage and adopts as a part of the law the recommendations in the report. The word "modify" there has no further effect than to refer to the report itself, and the modification is limited by the recommendation in the report. It would be unfortunate if the gentleman's substitute should be adopted, and his purpose is accomplished by the provision in the bill plus the amendment which the committee has submitted.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. DIXON. Do I understand your interpretation of your amendment is that this provision is limited absolutely to the dams below 48, and that it in no way modifies the project of the other locks and dams above No. 48?

Mr. SMALL. Absolutely; and in addition to that, if I should be a Member of the House—and I say it now, binding this committee as far as I can—if they can not get a project depth of 9 feet below Lock and Dam No. 48 by open-channel work, you will find the committee anxious and willing at any time to provide for the construction of locks and dams, because we are under promise to complete this improvement, provided always, of course, we are going to get some commerce there adequate to the expenditure when the improvement is completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Chair will ask the gentleman from North Carolina if it is the purpose to take up the Oregon item now?

Mr. SMALL. It was my purpose to return to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon after we had completed the other sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Where separate works or items are consolidated herein and an aggregate amount is appropriated therefor, the amount so appropriated shall, unless otherwise expressed, be expended in securing the maintenance and improvement according to the respective projects adopted by Congress after giving due regard to the respective needs of traffic. The allotments to the respective works so consolidated shall be made by the Chief of Engineers as authorized by the Secretary of War. In case such works or items are consolidated and separate amounts are given to individual projects, the amounts so named shall be expended upon such separate projects unless, in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, another allotment or division should be made of the same. Any balances remaining to the credit of the consolidated items shall be carried to the credit of the respective aggregate amounts appropriated for the consolidated items.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. I do so in order to inquire of the chairman of the committee if this section is identical with the existing law?

Mr. SMALL. Section 2 is the one the gentleman is referring to?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. I will say it is.

Mr. WALSH. Then I would like to ask the gentleman as to the first sentence on page 17:

In case such works or items are consolidated and separate amounts are given to individual projects, the amounts so named shall be expended upon such separate projects, unless, in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, another allotment or division should be made of the same.

That means that if we appropriate for specific items in a paragraph the Chief of Engineers or the Secretary of War can disregard that specific item?

Mr. SMALL. Yes. May I say to the gentleman it means a little more than that? Take one of these groups here, containing seven improvements, say. For four of those improvements recommendations or estimates of appropriations are made; for the other three estimates are not submitted, either because no work of maintenance is necessary or because the available balance on hand is assumed to be sufficient. Now, we will assume that the gross amount recommended for the four items of improvement is $40,000, or $10,000 each.

The Chief of Engineers, through the district engineer, will expend $10,000 on each of the items, unless in the meantime conditions shall change, so that more than $10,000 is necessary on one of the items, or if the amount available on some item for which no estimate was made turns out to be insufficient, then the Chief of Engineers has the right to make a reallotment out of the gross appropriation in order to meet the contingency subsequently occurring.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has explained why a lump-sum appropriation is made for a group of items. Take for instance an item on page 7, Mobile Harbor and Bar, where for maintenance $160,000 is appropriated, and for continuing improvement $100,000 is appropriated for the same item. Now, does that mean that if, for continuing the improvement, the department should need more than $100,000, they could take $60,000 of the maintenance and put it into the appropriation for continuing the improvement, and have only $100,000 left for maintenance?

Mr. SMALL. Ordinarily the line of demarcation between maintenance and further improvement is plain, but sometimes it becomes confused. By the usual interpretation of the Chief of Engineers the amount appropriated for maintenance would be confined to maintenance, and the amount for further improvement under the projects heretofore adopted would be confined to further improvement. That would be the ordinary plan. But sometimes maintenance may be at the same time in continuation of the improvement on a project. Where there is that confusion the expenditure is made regardless of whether it is appropriated for maintenance or for further improvement, but usually the distinction is made.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, when that transfer is made, when that is done, it appears in the annual report submitted to Congress?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That for examinations, surveys, and contingencies for rivers and harbors for which there may be no special appropriation, the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania: Page 17, line 12, after the word "appropriated," strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following: "And so much of this sum as may be necessary is hereby authorized to be expended for a survey of the Delaware River from a point opposite Allegheny Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., to Trenton, N. J., with a view of deepening the channel for war purposes."

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in order to emphasize the importance of my amendment I asked for a few extra minutes so that I may have an opportunity to describe one of the Government shipyards; and if the ambition of the Shipping Board is realized, then this yard will be one of the model plants of the world, and I do not hesitate to say that Bristol on the Delaware will be the home of the greatest shipyard of the world.

It is admirably situated. It is bounded on the north by a rich and fertile agricultural district, where the thousands of employees and their families may be served with food at normal prices. The plant is within very few hours by rail of the coal fields and the steel industries of the great State of Pennsylvania. Through the property passes the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad from north to south, and just beyond the railroad is the Delaware division of the Pennsylvania Canal. The street called Radcliffe Street was the old post road in the Revolutionary times between New York and Philadelphia. While passing, will the committee permit me to relate a bit of local history?

In 1824 Lafayette, in his triumphal tour in America, passed along Radcliffe Street, and I recall that when I was a boy one of the old judges of my town, who was an eyewitness of the occasion, described to me that Lafayette was a handsome man; that he rode in a barouche drawn by six buckskin-colored horses; and that Lafayette bowed and smiled to the thousands of men, women, and children who lined either side of the highway to see the great general pass by—a man who perhaps did more than any other general to assist Washington in establishing our Republic. [Applause.] Only a few weeks ago I read that Pershing went to the grave of Lafayette and said, "Lafayette, we are here." [Applause.]

The lines on the chart which I show you represent the 12 ways that are now completed. In three of them the keels are laid. The Government has contracted for 60 transports to be built at this yard. Each vessel is to be 9,000 tons, 410 feet long, 56 feet beam, and 2,750 horsepower. Eighty per cent of these ships are standardized. A machine shop 1,000 feet long has been completed, where the steel plates will be curved to fit the bows and sterns of the ships. In September, when the contract was entered into, the estimated cost of each vessel was $1,305,408, but since then the prices of material have advanced, labor has increased, thus each vessel will cost about $300,000 more than the estimate in September. Under no conditions, however, will the shipbuilding plant at Bristol make more than $64,000 on each vessel, and not less than $50,000. If the boats are completed for less than the estimated cost, then the amount saved will be divided as follows: One-third to the Government, one-third to the Merchant Shipbuilding Corporation, and one-third to the workmen, but under no circumstances will the contractor make more than 4 per cent upon the contract. Thirty-five to forty per cent of the cost of the vessels will be returned to the Government in the way of taxes.

In January in all the waters of the United States there were about 3,051,000 tonnage carrying the American flag, which included 684,000 tonnage of the German and Austrian ships that were interned. Recently we have added 560,000 tonnage belonging to the Dutch. We have to-day not more than 5,500,000 tonnage of ships in all waters of the world. The Shipping Board has contracted with 160 different corporations for 1,299 boats, with a tonnage of 7,846,000. To-day on the Atlantic Ocean we have but 2,486,000 tonnage carrying the American flag.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state how far Bristol, at which this shipyard is located, is above the city of Philadelphia?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. It is 22 miles above Philadelphia. I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some gentlemen here have asked me, and I wanted them to know that this plant is above Philadelphia, which is about 100 miles from the sea.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes; it is above Philadelphia.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Toward Trenton and New York?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes. Now, when we realize that it takes seven tons of shipping to take care of each soldier in the trenches, that means if we want to send 1,000,000 men to the trenches we must have 7,000,000 tons of shipping. To-day we have only five and one-half million tons, and we can not get our boys to Europe as fast as we wish, therefore I believe that the American people should understand and appreciate the seriousness of the hour. Now, when we estimate that there were about 10,000,000 tons of shipping in the trans-Atlantic trade one year ago, and that 7,500,000 of that tonnage was sunk by the U-boats, and that only 4,800,000 tons were added last year, it will not take a very great mathematician to solve the problem of how many years it will require when there would not be a boat on the Atlantic Ocean. We can not aid our allies unless we have ships, and if Germany forces France and England to terms of peace, it is a possibility that future battles will be fought over here. Thank God we are one people. Never in our history has our bond of union been so close as it is to-day. We are a unit, a complete entirety of the whole. We will win. We can not be beaten. [Applause.]

Now, I want to speak for a moment on the importance of my amendment.

The basin opposite the ways will be dredged by the Shipping Board. Of course they have no authority to dredge the channel between Bristol and Philadelphia. These boats when completed will draw 20 feet of water, and 12 feet without ballast. From this point to the 35-foot channel at Philadelphia the mean depth of the channel is only 12 feet at low tide and 18 feet at high tide. Therefore these boats can be floated to Philadelphia if they have no ballast.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his colleague may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. There is only $59,000 in the Treasury for the purpose of taking care of this channel from Trenton to Philadelphia. This channel, like all other channels, will fill up with sand bars, and after the $59,000 is expended this board will not have one dollar left in 1919 to maintain the channel in order to get these boats when completed to the sea.

It is the intention of the Government at this yard to build boats over 500 feet long, drawing 22 feet of water. The ways are constructed for the purpose of building these large boats. Just beyond this plant 1,200 acres have been purchased by a corporation, and just below here is another shipyard where 30 boats are being constructed. Therefore I urge and call upon the wisdom of the committee to permit my amendment to become a law, in order that next year in 1919 the engineers after making their survey may see proper to ask the Rivers and Harbors Committee to report an appropriation for deepening this channel.

I think I have explained the importance of getting these boats to the sea. I have explained the importance of providing a channel deep enough to meet the growing commerce of the upper Delaware. While it is not deep enough now, yet if we expend the $59,000 this summer we will not have a dollar to dig out the channel in another year.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. Why do you say it is deep enough now, when you have only 18 feet in high water and vessels draw 22 feet?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Because the vessels will not draw but 12½ feet without ballast. They will have the machinery in them and be sent to Philadelphia without ballast, and will be floated down at high tide. There is not a harbor in the world where the channels do not have to be kept open, and the channels of the Delaware River are no exception to the rule.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the gentleman insists on his amendment or not.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. SMALL. The amendment proposes a survey, and there are no surveys authorized in the bill. Quite a number of Members have advocated surveys before the committee. I think it would be unwise to adopt this amendment authorizing a survey of this specific locality. Besides, I do not think any greater depth is necessary for the immediate utilization of this shipyard.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This section makes an appropriation of $200,000 for examinations, surveys, and contingencies.

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does that contemplate new examinations and surveys?

Mr. SMALL. No. The explanation is that this authorization for examinations and surveys in past rivers and harbors bills will require a larger expenditure than the existing appropriation, and this appropriation of $200,000 in this bill is simply to meet increased costs of former authorizations for examinations and surveys.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is in the nature of a deficiency appropriation and does not contemplate new surveys?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Otherwise, I should think the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON] would be in order.

Mr. SMALL. Otherwise, there would be no necessity for the paragraph. The original estimate was $300,000, but the committee reduced it to $200,000.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the committee knows that this is not a new survey. The department has surveyed the river and has a chart of it. It will cost us very little money. The report of the committee is as follows:

> Again, it was not thought advisable during this critical period of the war to authorize any additional surveys unless it could be shown that they were essential as being associated with the prosecution of the war.

Certainly the getting our battleships to the sea is one thing that is very essential to the prosecution of the war. It is not a new survey, it is taking up an old project, and therefore I can not understand why the distinguished chairman of the committe should not be in favor of this amendment.

Mr. FREAR. The chairman and gentlemen will remember that when the representatives of the Shipping Board were before us they said they had authority to dredge out in front of the shipyards to a sufficient depth for the vessels to be taken out. They will take care of that. They said they had authority to do that under the authorization.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. It is true that they have authority to dig out the basin, as I explained it, but they have not the authority to dig out the channel 20 miles long.

Mr. FREAR. That is not the length of the channel. It is only 16 miles. But here is the fault of the argument, in my judgment. It is a dangerous thing to build a boat drawing 22 feet of water on a stream that only has 12 feet of water.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. There is water enough to get the boats down at present.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the evidence before the committee was to the effect that there was sufficient water in the Delaware River channel opposite Bristol and the shipbuilding plant to accommodate these ships after they were built, but there was not sufficient water between the main channel and the shipbuilding plant. As to dredging the basin there the Shipping Board said they would undertake to do that work.

Now, the existing project on the Delaware River from Philadelphia to Trenton is 12 feet. That depth exists in that part of the river opposite Bristol. Any authorization for examination and survey would of necessity contemplate a greater depth. It would introduce into the bill an amendment which has been denied to Members in other sections of the country, and I think to that extent would be unfair. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania) there were—16 ayes and 24 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 17, line 12, after the word "appropriated." strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "$5,000 of which sum, or so much as may be necessary, shall be used for making a survey of the power sites on the Missouri River in South Dakota."

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, this bill does not carry an appropriation for the Missouri River above Kansas City. I want to take a few moments' time to tell you about our contemplated improvement of the Missouri River as a State project. When the ice breaks up in the river we frequently get ice gorges which throws the water out of the river banks, and thousands of acres of land are flooded.

Again, when the June rise comes, we also have floods, caused by the melting of the mountain snows. These floods in March and June are doing a vast amount of damage to the property along the Missouri River, sometimes running into hundreds of thousands of dollars. The banks are caved in and eaten away, so that whole farms are sometimes devastated by the cutting of the banks. A few years ago Congress made numerous appropriations for revetment work, but during the last five or six years these projects have been abandoned. I think the time will ultimately come when a new plan will be adopted in reference to preventing these floods by dikes and dams along these rivers that come from the mountains; by so doing the waters may be impounded and used for irrigation purposes, and thus the waters may be withheld during the flood periods, which causes the destruction of property. Recently the legislature of my State, in session in 1917, proposed an amendment to the constitution, which reads as follows:

> SEC. 10. The State may purchase, own, develop, and operate plants for development of power upon the streams of this State and at coal mines upon land owned by this State, and may transmit such power and supply the same to the people of the State. The State may pledge such plants and accessories thereto to provide funds for such purchase and development, anything in the constitution to the contrary notwithstanding. The legislature, by a two-thirds vote of the members elected to each house, shall provide by law for carrying the provisions of this act into effect.

This proposed constitutional amendment will go to the people of my State at the next November election. I want here at this time to accord my hearty approval of this provision, which will permit us to engage in State internal improvement. I think our State will adopt this constitutional amendment; if so, we will engage in constructing dams across these rivers, thereby giving us power sufficient to run all of the machinery in the State, creating light, heat, and power for our homes and machinery and bring to our people a wonderful development of our industries.

Along the Missouri River are some ten or twelve power sites. We have a fall of 317 feet. We can generate power to the extent of 552,000 horsepower, which can be readily, cheaply, and easily developed, because the bed of the river in certain places where these power sites are located is a rocky bottom. I call attention to simply two of those power sites—at Little Bend and Big Bend. We were in hopes that the Government might adopt Little Bend or Big Bend for the nitrate plant that was recently established, but not so. At Big Bend there is a bend in the river winding 24 miles, and which curves back, forming a neck of only 1¾ miles across.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DILLON. At Little Bend the curve is about 18 miles in length, coming back to a narrow neck which is only 1¾ miles across, so that we have these power sites by which the drilling of a sewer, so to speak, will give us vast resources of power. We are going to engage in these internal improvements, as I believe, and we will be here asking you to help us in a way, not that we want you to do it all, but we want a little help. We would like for you to show your good faith by allowing us to have a little money for this survey.

BIG BEND.

> The detour at Big Bend is from mile 286 to mile 310 being a distance of 24 miles. The distance across the neck is 1¾ miles and the height of the hill in the gorge is, according to Nelson's survey, 298 feet. The water level on the south side is 1,421 feet and upon the north side 1,441 feet, making the net fall across the bend 20 feet, as shown by the contour map of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, for 1889. As will be seen from an examination of the contour map published herewith there is a wide flat area on the north side of the river on the upper side of the neck of Big Bend. That flat has been produced by the slow progress of the river in cutting away the gorge, so that all of the area, fully 5 miles wide, now a magnificent subirrigated meadow, is former river bed, across which it would be impracticable to build a dam. Consequently about the only practicable method of development for power purposes at Big Bend will be by tunnel of sufficient capacity to divert and carry the minimum flow of the stream. A tunnel 30 by 15 feet wide will do this at no extraordinary expense, producing about 18,000 horsepower. The tunnel proper will be about 1 mile in length, the remainder of the distance may be negotiated by open canal. To this extent Big Bend can be developed much more cheaply than any other tentative power site upon the river. It has been asked if the process of erosion above referred to will not continue and ultimately the neck be cut away. It is not impossible that this may occur but only after many hundreds, perhaps many thousands, of years. Lewis and Clark measured the neck 113 years ago and found it practically what it is to-day.

LITTLE BEND.

The Little Bend begins at mile 406 and ends at mile 424, being 18 miles around the detour. The neck is of the same width as that at Big Bend, being 1⅞ miles. The hill in the gorge is 271 feet above low water. The development here will be by diversion dam and canal; that is, the flow of the stream around the bend will be wholly cut off except for extremely high water, and the flow will be diverted through a canal across the neck, in which canal the power house and navigation locks will be erected. The dam in the canal will be a bulkhead over which the water will never pass; floods will fall over the barrier in the old channel and pass around the bend. The dam upon the north side will be 4,600 feet long and 41 feet high above standard low water, which added to the natural fall across the neck of 16.5 feet will give a total head of 57.5 feet and will produce at the lowest water known 52,000 effective horsepower constantly. This will be an expensive development, but the great power produced will justify the outlay.

Little Bend has been reported upon by Gen. George W. Davis, engineer of the Panama Canal, Maj. Edward Schultz, United States engineer in charge of the Missouri River, Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co., and by W. H. Finley, chief engineer of the Chicago & North Western Railway, all of whom have declared the physical conditions well adapted to power development, by at least a 40-foot dam.

HARNESSING A HOPE.

[By Doans Robinson in the Dakota Farmer.]

There were some doings in South Dakota, about 150,000 years ago. George Fitch would not then have ventured to slander the Missouri River, for it was a stream of Amazonian bigness, in whose flood the zeuglodon disported himself, the brontosaurus waddled through the bordering marshes, the titanothere crunched the tropical vegetation, the mammoth mosied over the mesas, and the eohippus hopped hopefully on the heaths—when one day a shiver shook the longitudinal vertebrae of these primitive Dakotans and they looked up to observe an obstructive glacier poking his icy nose into the valley. Slowly but majestically he made his way, marching straight into the bosom of the outraged Missouri, chasing the live stock from the ranges or grinding into bone meal such as opposed his passage. The war which ensued between the river and the trespasser involved questions of inherent rights which yielded to no court of arbitration. For centuries the contest was unrelentingly waged, the mighty river throwing its terrific strength upon its lethargic but irresistible enemy, until finally Old Ice was able to look back from the western coteau upon his titantic body filling the continental valley, while the baffled river slunk away into the mountain fastnesses about its upper reaches.

The victory of the ice was not for long. Forty leagues only had he made his way westward from the bed of the vanquished river before he encountered another enemy, before whose seductive caresses he unwittingly surrendered. The mild breath of the Pacific wrung cold and debilitating perspiration from his massive brow, consumed his substance and stopped his progress. The waiting and watchful river, quick to discover the weakening of its foe, marshalled its forces and, rushing upon him, flanked his western border, bored out a new valley, and again made its unvexed passage to the sea.

THE MISSOURI VALLEY.

This, geologically, new valley, extending from the mouth of the Yellowstone to the mouth of the James, for most of its length is eroded through the stratified shales laid down by Old Ocean in that period which even science can measure only in eons. Chiefly, the flood plain is narrow—a couple of miles wide in North Dakota—contracting to a mile or less in South Dakota, expanding again as the Nebraska line is approached, and at the mouth of the James is 4 or 5 miles in width. The actual breadth of the stream is about 2,000 feet and its slope is a foot to the mile. Through the quicksand flood plain the rapid, roily stream wanders at will, changing its bed over night, throwing up sand bars, plowing up meadows, swallowing farms, stealing villages, wrecking railroads, and driving navigators to desperation and drink. Those most familiar with it regard it as a blot upon the landscape, and it has been graphically characterized as "a stretch of country too thin to cultivate and too thick to navigate." In the family of great North American rivers it is admittedly the drabbled Ovis, and its nearest relatives have been sorely tempted to abandon it in sheer despair.

Yet it has not quite given up. True, the steamboat no longer battles its steep channel and the annual pittance doled from the rivers and harbors pork barrel does little to restrain its vagrant and criminal propensities—but there has lingered a faith in many heads that some time, some way, the Missouri River would be tamed, harnessed, and made to serve the public welfare. The modern development of hydroelectric enterprises has given new impulse to this faith, and the conviction is growing that God provided the Missouri to generate the marvelous fluid which has revolutionized the affairs of men. That it is practicable to harness the stream for hydroelectric development is no longer questioned.

At any point where the trough of the Missouri is not more than 1 mile wide the engineers deem it entirely practicable to dam it. Many borings demonstrate that the bedrock floor of this trough is practically level and that the side walls are abrupt. The floor is about 45 feet below water and superimposed upon it is about 25 feet of soft conglomerate composed of hard mud, silt, gravel, bowlders, bone quarries, and other débris, and upon this conglomerate bed is a soil-covered quicksand from 20 to 40 feet in depth through which runs the true channel of the stream, the immediate banks of which hold 16 feet of rise before the plain is flooded.

MANY DAMS POSSIBLE.

Within South Dakota, at intervals of about 25 miles each, there are at least 12 points where the trough is less than 1 mile wide and where dams are feasible to heads varying from 22 feet to 45 feet, giving in the aggregate 317 feet over which the flood of the Missouri may be poured. The consideration of this possibility, reduced to terms of horsepower, presents a prospect bewildering in stupendousness, dazzling in potentiality, absorbing in interest.

To so dam the Missouri it will be necessary to erect great barriers of masonry, set firmly into the bedrock and extending entirely across the trough from rim to rim. To do so involves no untried engineering problems. In fact, concrete has been placed in the bedrock underlying the stream at many places and to a much greater depth than will be demanded by the dams. Railroad bridges resting upon subriver masonry have been built at Plattsmouth, Omaha, Blair, Sioux City, Pierre, Mobridge, Bismarck, and other points. At Pierre 12,000 cubic yards were put down to a maximum depth of 65 feet at a cost of $24 per yard. A very large percentage of this cost was charged to plant. Indeed, the plant provided for sinking these piers would have been sufficient for building a dam. A dam would not necessarily be sunk deeper than 50 feet below low water. Perhaps $15 or $16 per cubic yard would place the concrete for a dam and locks in a structure involving the use of nearly a half million cubic yards.

TREMENDOUS POWER.

The Missouri River is a stream of notably irregular flow, but there is a minimum below which it has not been known to go. This minimum in the South Dakota region is 10,000 second-feet, and the power generated from this flow could always be delivered. This minimum over the 12 dams would produce the poorest day in the year 281,000 actual horsepower, using only 80 per cent efficiency of the turbines. As horsepower is commercially rated in eight-hour days, we would have 843,000 horsepower dependable at any moment, transmissible to every city, hamlet, and farm in the State, for the commerce, the convenience, and the comfort of the people.

This 843,000 horsepower always deliverable is but the beginning of the marvelous hope. The upper Missouri flows through a semiarid region, where irrigation for insurance against drought in half the years is imperative. Fortunately the higher-water season and the irrigation season fall contemporaneously; any practical development of the potential power of the Missouri must include provision for the utilization of the high water for pumping to supply irrigation to the thirsty land. The accumulated higher water acting for a period of 30 days amounts to more than 5,000,000 horsepower, amply sufficient to pump an abundance of water upon 6,000,000 acres of as fertile land as God has made—soil crying for the drink and anxious and ready to pay the price.

Six million acres of this deep, black prairie soil is to-day pleading with Congress to be permitted to subject itself to the cost of this development. Should the 12 units mentioned average the high cost of $20,000,000 each, it would be but $40 per acre of the land to be benefited. At that it would be a fine bargain for the landowner, for every acre of it would leap from its present value of $25 to $100 or more the instant that the water was turned into the ditches.

DREAM OF THE DAKOTAN.

This, then, is the dream of the Dakotan: Through cooperation with his State and Federal Governments to harness the mighty Missouri and pour its tremendous flood over more than 300 feet of fall; transmute its power into "white coal"; transmit the energy to the borders of the State and beyond for the advantage and comfort of the people who, free from grasping corporation or grinding monopoly, shall pay for, own, and operate this great gift of the gods; through it to develop commercially, agriculturally, and mechanically to the highest estate which unequaled opportunities permit.

An incident of the suggested development will be the final settlement of the navigation problem through the region affected. The dams and locks will appear at intervals of 25 miles, and in each case the backwater will extend to the tailrace of the dam above. Thus will boats no longer struggle against the slope of the stream nor dodge sand bars, but ride upon flat, still, deep water through a succession of beautiful lakes.

That this attractive dream is in the way of realization and that the next five years will see the beginning of development is my confident prediction.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this provision authorizes the diversion of this appropriation for the purpose of making surveys of water-power sites. I do not think that it is appropriate or that it ought to go into the bill. In the first place, the subject of water-power legislation is now being considered by a special committee of the House and this authorization ought not to be made pending legislation following a report of that committee. In the second place, it does amount to an authorization for examination and survey of a part of the Missouri River which presumably is navigable. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction of the development of water power on navigable rivers, and if this river is navigable it will be within the jurisdiction of the committee, but because this general matter of water power is now under investigation awaiting the report from a special committee and because it would be unfair to other sections if this amendment were adopted, I hope the committee will not adopt it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DILLON) there were—ayes 5, noes 25.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That no part of the funds herein or hereafter appropriated for works of river and harbor improvement shall be used to pay for any work done by private contract if the contract price is more than 25 per cent in excess of the estimated cost of doing the work by Government plant.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I went before the Subcommittee on Rivers and Harbors, and they informed me that no inlets would be included in this bill. I therefore have not offered any amendment to the bill. Briefly I would like to call the attention of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and the Committee of the Whole to the fact that at Jacksonville, on account of the war, the Board of Engineers recommended that no appropriation be made. I would say that while the channel is 30 feet at two or three places, there are only 27½ feet of water, and as the chain is only so strong as its weakest link, unless they will promptly remove these points, it will make, to a certain extent, useless the terminals on which the people of Jacksonville have expended a million dollars. I represent more than 500 miles of seacoast and 1,500 miles of rivers. I had in the bill only $20,000 until the Committee of the Whole put in the Key West amendment. I have not asked for anything else other than that, and stated to the committee that I would not do so, because of war conditions. Where they stated in the report of the Board of Engineers that on account of war conditions no estimate was made, I kept my faith with the committee.

But I believe I have shown the Members of this House from document No. 185, dated June of last year, after we went into the war, indorsed by more than six Government engineers, that the appropriation was urgent and necessary, and that Key West should have been placed in the bill by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I want to thank the Members of the House for their patience in listening to me, and I can say that I believe they will vote on any proposition as they see it, and if it is meritorious they will support it. That is the attitude I have always assumed in the House, and it is the attitude I shall continue to assume, and I would not ask any of my colleagues to do more than I would do myself. But I sincerely believed the other day, and believe now, that there is not a more urgent or worthy proposition in the bill than the item relating to Key West.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That, within limits to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, it shall not be lawful to throw, discharge, or deposit, or cause, suffer, or procure to be thrown, discharged, or deposited from any source whatever any free acid or acid waste in any form, either directly or indirectly, into any navigable water of the United States or into any tributary of any navigable water; and every person and every corporation that shall violate, or that shall knowingly aid, abet, authorize, or instigate a violation of the foregoing provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,500 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) for not less than 30 days nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court: Provided, That this section may be enforced as provided in section 17 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, the provisions whereof are hereby made applicable thereto.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say the amendment——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. TREADWAY, Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, and Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the gentleman from Missouri reserve the point of order. The Chair will state to the gentlemen that it is necessary to dispose of the point of order——

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, may not the amendment which the gentleman desires to offer be read for information while the point of order is still reserved?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent that can be done.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Chair having held in a case somewhat analagous to this that a point of order took precedence over a motion such as is now made by the gentleman from North Carolina, are the rights of those who reserved the point of order in any way impaired by the consideration of the substitute or the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the amendment is only offered to be read for information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the rights under the reservation of the point of order are preserved?

The CHAIRMAN. Exactly. The rights of gentlemen who reserve the point of order will not be affected by the reading of the amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, if there is any question about the point of order, I make the point of order on the section. It has no place in this bill and ought to go out.

Mr. SMALL. Well, we will have the point of order if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] not to insist upon his point of order.

Mr. SNYDER. I will reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the proposed amendment will be read for information.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment. Strike out all of section 5 on lines 17 and 18 and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War shall cause an investigation to be made regarding the discharge or deposit into any of the navigable waters of the United States, or into any tributaries of same, of free acid or acid waste in any form, and the extent of same, together with any injurious results affecting the navigability of such waters, or any works of improvement made thereon by the United States or upon any vessels navigating the same, and submit a report, with any recommendation it may deem appropriate, and any necessary expenses connected therewith shall be paid out of the available funds herein or heretofore appropriated for examinations, surveys, and contingencies."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, if it is agreeable to the committee, that the committee may vote upon the amendment, and if the amendment should not carry, then that it shall be in order to press the point of order.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask if the amendment is submitted as a substitute so that an amendment can be offered to it, or is it in such form that a further amendment to the proposed amendment would not be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. TREADWAY. That permits an amendment to it to be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. That being understood, that I have an opportunity to offer an amendment when it comes before the House, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If this amendment is voted in the bill, the paragraph now in the bill goes out?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I believe the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors preferred a request that there be a vote taken on this amendment and then the point of order could be made or ruled upon if it should fail. While the Chair did not put the request to the committee, I desire to say I object to that. I do not think that is the proper way or good practice to try to get around a parliamentary situation by reason of the making of a reservation of a point of order. If the gentleman is willing to concede the point of order to offer this amendment, which has been read for information——

Mr. SMALL. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt. Let us have the point of order decided. If the Chair wishes to hear me, I desire to be heard. There is not any question about the jurisdiction of the committee upon this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has simply been reserved. Does any gentleman desire to make the point of order?

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I do desire to make it against this bill, because it means the destruction of the coal industries of Pennsylvania, and I can not stand for that.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. ROBBINS. That it is not germane to a bill of this kind, that it is legislation, that it is foreign to a river and harbor bill, that it is new legislation entirely, and not proper on this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word on that, in order to establish the fact that it is new legislation. But I wish to say to the chairman of the committee that I understood this was to go out, and I am entirely in accord with that proposition.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to the gentleman getting time, but I do object to his discussing the merits of this proposition on the point of order now. I must insist that the gentleman confine himself to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been raised. The gentleman will be heard as to the point of order.

Mr. ROBBINS. We are considering here a river and harbor bill. That is a navigation proposition entirely, with the necessary incidents that go to improving channels and fixing up the stream for navigable purposes. This section 5 of the bill, which has just been read, refers entirely to the discharge of acids and impurities into the waters of streams. It is a different question altogether, and the point of order is made against it because it is not relevant or pertinent to the purpose of the bill. Waters are navigable or otherwise, and whether they are pure or impure makes no difference. The discharge of acids into a river does not affect its navigability, but it does affect the use of water for culinary purposes and potable purposes, and it may have an effect on the iron used in the construction of locks. But that is remote from the main proposition here. If we are to deal with the question of whether acids or impurities are discharged into a stream, that is a proposition that ought to be dealt with in connection with the police power and in connection with the health authorities of a State, or something of that sort. It is a different question altogether from navigation. This section 5 is extraneous to and foreign to the purposes of this bill.

It is difficult to discuss this narrow proposition without also adverting to associated causes. It is a fact that this acid comes into the streams from coal mines, from paper mills, from chemical works, from dyeing establishments. It can not be kept out of these streams. This proposes not only to reach out to the navigable streams, but it reaches out to the tributaries of those navigable streams Take western Pennsylvania, the district in which I live. There we have the Monongahela River, which is navigable; also we have the Allegheny, which is partly navigable, and the Youghiogheny, which is partly navigable, and the Conemaugh, nonnavigable. Into every one of those streams there are smaller streams that discharge water from coal mines, and as it comes from some of them it is almost blood red in some places on account of this acid with which it is impregnated as it comes out of the mines.

If we are to reach out to the tributaries and take in the little creeks and interfere with the situation to that extent we will find that every small run, every rivulet, every creek, every brook that pours into these navigable rivers must be purified, and that is going far beyond the reach of navigation legislation over which alone Congress has jurisdiction. It is extending our control over the small streams that have nothing to do with this bill, which proposes to establish and improve navigation on the navigable streams of the United States.

Mr. FARR. Does it refer to sulphur water?

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes; it refers to sulphur in the water, and almost every stream in eastern Ohio and western Pennsylvania and West Virginia is affected by sulphur. In these States it is the subject of police regulation and of regulation by the health authorities.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Will not the discharges from these mines and these chemical plants deepen the streams and make them more navigable?

Mr. ROBBINS. Not at all.

Mr. MEEKER. It would increase their navigability.

Mr. ROBBINS. It does not affect the channels. It affects the water. It has nothing to do with the channels or the navigability of the channels.

Mr. FARR. This legislation would close up many of the anthracite mines of Pennsylvania, and result seriously in the aggravation of the coal shortage that is already threatening the country for the coming winter.

Mr. ROBBINS. I have no doubt of it. It would close up all the bituminous mines in western Pennsylvania. I am not familiar with the anthracite mines.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am told, Mr. Chairman—and I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what he thinks about this as affecting navigation—I am told by a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that there was testimony had before the committee to the effect that the acids poured into these navigable streams directly and indirectly coming from these mines did very seriously interfere with navigation, because the acids ate out the iron and the metal on the boats and lessened their usefulness by 30 or 50 per cent. That is a direct injury to navigation.

Mr. ROBBINS. That can also be said as to salt water. Salt water eats out and rusts the iron of bridges and the metal of ships, and you can not use that in boilers any more than you can use sulphur water in boilers.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Lord put it in the salt water, but He did not put it into the streams of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROBBINS. Oh, yes; He put it in the coal seams. It is claimed that this has nothing to do with the point of order. It has to do with it. If this sulphur water has to be purified, it would not improve navigation. You can not take the sulphur out of the water as it comes from the coal mines. That is an impossible proposition at this late date.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that this bill ought not to be loaded down with a proposition that is not pertinent to it. If we are going to deal with this sulphur-water proposition, we should go about it as it is done in the State of Pennsylvania, and it is purely a State affair and should be left to the States. There it is regulated by the police department and by the health department. We realize that it is impossible to eliminate the sulphur from the mine water, and the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania has decided in the celebrated case of Sanderson against the Pennsylvania Coal Co. that the pouring of sulphur into a stream, while it may be injurious and may injure property, and in that case destroyed the plumbing in a spacious dwelling house, the plaintiff was not allowed to recover damages because the supreme court said the coal could not be mined without discharging mine water carrying sulphur, and therefore it was a matter upon which no damages would lie, being "damnum absque injuria." Therefore if there is anything in this bill that is going to strike terror to the mining industries of this country at a time, too, when we are clamoring for coal and when there is a shortage of fuel all over the country, it is the proposition that you are going to compel the producers of coal to purify the waters that come from the mines and that carry sulphur with it and deposits the same in the surface streams and is carried thence into the rivers.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter that the Chair has nothing to do with—the merits of the proposition.

Mr. ROBBINS. I want to show the magnitude of the proposition. It is no insignificant act as applied to the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As written in the bill the paragraph provides a fine and imprisonment.

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may be a little beyond the jurisdiction of this committee. But the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] proposes to strike that out and substitute a paragraph which contemplates an inquiry, so that, so far as the merits are concerned, the situation is entirely changed, it seems to me. I submit that to my colleague. If the gentleman from North Carolina holds to his present purpose, the danger that the gentleman points out is reduced.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SMALL. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that by the direction of the committee I shall move to strike out the paragraph and simply insert one authorizing an investigation.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, as I understood——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I have not given up the floor.

Mr. SNELL. I believe the Chair recognized me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania had concluded.

Mr. ROBBINS. No. Does the gentleman from North Carolina state that it is the position he still intends to take, to strike out this paragraph?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Then, if that is true, I will not insist on the point of order again.

Mr. MEEKER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MEEKER. If the point of order is made against the paragraph as it stands, the gentleman from North Carolina can then offer the other as an amendment, can he not?

The CHAIRMAN. He can offer it as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. MEEKER. As a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. Without desiring to avoid the responsibility of making a ruling, the Chair will state that, with this amendment stricken from the bill on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina, there will be no necessity for arguing the point of order. Of course, the gentleman from North Carolina will then be in order to offer an amendment.

Mr. MEEKER. I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I thought the chairman of the committee had announced his intention to withdraw the text of the paragraph in the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I have yielded once or twice, and I demand the floor. As I understand, the gentleman from North Carolina is willing to allow this section to go out of the bill. If he is, I do not care to be heard on the point of order. Is that right?

Mr. SMALL. I have offered an amendment to that effect, which is pending, to strike out and substitute.

Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some difficulty in making clear the position of the committee. The motion I sent up by direction of the committee was to strike out this paragraph and insert a paragraph authorizing simply an investigation.

But the gentleman insists upon making the point of order, and we are willing to have the point of order discussed and passed on by the Chair. At the proper time I simply want to put to the Chair a brief argument in favor of the jurisdiction of the committee over this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit the Chair, this seems to be a case of tweedledum and tweedledee. If the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] is adopted and the paragraph goes out of the bill, of course that avoids all necessity of making the point of order, and then the gentleman from North Carolina can offer his amendment.

Mr. WALSH. How is the gentleman from North Carolina going to submit his amendment with the point of order pending?

Mr. ROBBINS. We are going to withdraw it.

Mr. WALSH. No; the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was simply making the suggestion that a great deal of time might be saved and the same thing accomplished that all gentlemen are trying to accomplish by permitting the gentleman from North Carolina to make his motion to strike out the paragraph, and thereby avoid the necessity of considering the point of order.

Mr. WALSH Suppose that motion should be defeated after the point of order had been withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. If the motion should be defeated, of course the paragraph would remain in the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not a fact that if the amendment is adopted a point of order will not then lie against it? If the point of order is to be made at all, it is to be made now to this paragraph, together with any amendments that are to be offered.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think there has been some misapprehension upon this side of the House. Some gentlemen do not seem to understand that the gentleman from North Carolina states officially that by instruction of the committee he proposes to move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. SMALL. I do.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That being so, what is the use of debating the point of order? The point of order would lie equally well against the amendment, if anybody desires to make it. I think some gentlemen do not understand that the chairman of the committee has announced that he proposes to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman from Ohio know that that motion will be agreed to by the House?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from North Carolina has stated officially that he proposes to move to strike it out. Now, everybody on this side is in favor of that, so why waste all this time?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. He proposes to strike out and insert, and that which he desires to insert may be subject to the point of order, if anyone wants to make it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May not the point of order be made against the substitute just the same as against the original paragraph?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. DOWELL. The point is that if you adopt the amendment you can not then raise the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have the right to debate the amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. The question comes on the adoption of an amendment which proposes to insert certain language.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio demands the regular order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the point of order is against the provision as it appears in the bill in section 5. What is that provision? It makes it unlawful to throw or discharge free acid and acid waste into any navigable river or tributary of a navigable river. It appears in the report of the committee, upon official evidence, on page 5, that the result of this discharge of such material into a navigable river is to cause destruction to the hulls of steel vessels, to the boilers of steamboats, and also to the metallic parts of locks and dams and other improvements in navigable rivers. In other words, by the action of an industry along the banks of a river in discharging certain materials into that river works of the United States which it has constructed to improve the navigation of that river are subjected to destruction. Yet gentlemen take the position that a provision of law to prevent the destruction of the works of improvement in a river, put there to improve navigation, are not within the jurisdiction of this committee.

Mr. MEEKER. In view of what has been said as to the substitute, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts renews the point of order.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, what is the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors? Under the rules it has jurisdiction of subjects relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors; and when we propose a provision of law intended to preserve the improvement which we put in a river to promote its navigability gentlemen say it is not within the jurisdiction of this committee. If not, pray what committee of this House would have jurisdiction of it? Tell me a single committee, if you please, which has jurisdiction superior to that of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors over such a subject? Why, it is stated in the memorandum of the Chief of Engineers that so long as these deleterious substances were put into navigable rivers, affecting only the potability of the water, or killing the fish, it was not and never has been the intention of the War Department to ask Congress to legislate upon it, because those subjects are local and within the jurisdiction of the State, relating as they do to the preserving of the domestic water supply and to preserving the supply of fish. But when it comes to putting a substance in a navigable stream which destroys the instrumentalities of commerce upon these rivers, which destroys locks and dams constructed in these rivers to improve navigation, they say that Congress has nothing to do with it and that as to this committee it is new legislation. Congress has authority to maintain and preserve the navigability of its rivers, and it follows conclusively that it has authority to do whatever is necessary to preserve and maintain the work that you put upon these rivers in furtherance of their navigation.

So far as the new legislation is concerned, of course this committee has a right to propose new legislation. It is only a question of whether this provision is connected with the improvement of rivers and harbors, and if it is, it is within the jurisdiction of the committee If it is not within the jurisdiction of this committee, no committee in the House has jurisdiction. We are not insisting on the paragraph, and I beg the indulgence of the House to make this brief statement. This is an injury to the navigability of streams, and the reason the committee upon further deliberation authorized the chairman to strike it out is because of war conditions. We did not desire to put these industries near these rivers in fear because we did not desire to do the least thing to impair their efficiency during the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As bearing upon the importance of this measure, which I think is somewhat exaggerated, is it not true that in the letter that came to the committee from the Chief of Engineers the deterioration, not loss, but deterioration due to the acid in the waters is not less than $25,000 a year in the Monongahela and not less than $32,000 in the Ohio? That is to say, the total loss is less than the cost of the inquiry. I merely want to bring that fact out, and it is a fact, is it not?

Mr. SMALL. It is so stated.

Mr. WALSH. What has that to do with the point of order? Mr. Chairman, of course, this is not one of the general appropriation bills, but this section has to do with the subject of the jurisdiction which, peculiarly enough, is sometimes lodged in the Rivers and Harbors Committee and sometimes in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Now, the chairman of the committee having this matter in charge asks what committee would have jurisdiction over a subject like this, and I submit that the committee having jurisdiction over the regulations of rivers and harbors and placing the works therein, and such as might constitute obstructions and interfere with the navigation of it, has jurisdiction over and to prevent and regulate matters of that sort. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, under the rules of the House, is vested with jurisdiction relative to the improvement of rivers and harbors. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has jurisdiction over matters relating to commerce other than appropriations for Life-Saving Service and the lighthouses.

Now, this section attempts to make a part of the criminal law of this country not matters that are obstructions to navigation because the deposit of this acid would not make the river impassable, but might make the waters to a certain extent injurious to certain classes of vessels. It would not impede the navigability of the river. The deposit of these acids would interfere with commerce, because it might injure the instrumentalities which navigate the river. It would have an injurious effect upon iron and steel vessels or barges which ply up and down these rivers. The deposit of this substance in the river would have a detrimental effect upon the carriers engaged in commerce, but it does not do any injury to the river. If it is anything that relates to the injury of bridges or dams I submit that under the rules of the House legislation to cure that would go to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

Now, there is another provision in this section which seems to me to be extremely unusual, and that is the imposing of a penalty for the doing of what is prohibited. It is not imposing a penalty necessarily upon persons who are using the river for navigation, but it would be imposing a penalty upon persons engaged in the manufacture of articles which might later enter into commerce.

Then it is provided at the end of the section, which nobody, I think, outside of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors knows what it means, that the section should be enforced as provided in section 17 of the rivers and harbors act of 1899, the provisions of which are made applicable.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is not a proper matter to legislate upon in a bill relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors and to the maintenance of improvements already made. It throws into this bill an entirely new matter, something that does not impede or destroy the navigability of the river, because if it injured one class of vessels another class of vessels would proceed to use the river. It interferes with commerce. That is what this seeks to do; it seeks to permit the doing of some act that interferes with commerce. I submit in answer to the distinguished chairman and equally distinguished Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that the appropriate committee for legislation of this sort is the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and not the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Would the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have jurisdiction where the stream did not cross the State line?

Mr. WALSH. I think if a stream did not cross the State line that it would not necessarily follow that the use of the river was not in interstate commerce, for it might cross the State and go to a railroad landing where it would go into another State or run to the ocean, and thus be a part of an interstate marine highway.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Would it not follow, as a matter of necessity, that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce would have jurisdiction of very few of these matters, and that you would have to sort them out and first determine whether——

Mr. WALSH. They have to be sorted out anyhow.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, no; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction over all navigable waters, which would include all waters which are navigable, and this applies only to navigable waters.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is wrong there. The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has jurisdiction over all navigable waters.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That are interstate waters—not over waters wholly within a State.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes; over waters wholly within a State.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not think so.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, they have jurisdiction over harbors that are wholly within a State, over rivers that are wholly within a State, over streams that are wholly within a State, and they have exercised it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that anyone will seriously contend that the subject matter in this provision is not germane to the bill. Rule XXI, section 2, makes certain provisions that are not in order to a general appropriation bill, but it has been continually ruled that the river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill, and by referring to Hinds' Precedents, section 3897 and section 3903, each one a situation similar to the one before us now, it will be seen that where points of order were made similar to this, the Chair in each case overruled the point of order upon the ground that it was not a general appropriation bill and this legislation or amendment was germane to the general legislation in the bill and not subject to the point of order. Therefore, I maintain that the section is in order, and it can not be overruled on the point of order under these precedents.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the Chair's attention to one thing in this paragraph to which the attention of the Chair has not been called. Leaving out a portion of the language, the paragraph reads:

It shall not be lawful to throw, discharge, or deposit, or cause, suffer, or procure to be thrown, discharged, or deposited from any source whatever any free acid or acid waste in any form, either directly or indirectly, into any navigable water of the United States or into any tributary of any navigable water.

This provision not only attempts to regulate the navigable streams, but it attempts to regulate every tributary to a navigable stream, no matter how small, no matter how little the creek may be. In intends here to give the Committee on Rivers and Harbors jurisdiction over the waters in a little creek if it is tributary to a navigable water. It is true this committee is all powerful, but I never heard it contended before that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had jurisdiction over small creeks, no matter how small, if perchance the waters were tributary to some navigable stream.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not contend that this committee does not have jurisdiction over navigable streams, however small?

Mr. GOOD. I am not talking about that. I am talking about the little tributaries to the navigable streams. Does the gentleman mean to say that because a little creek is tributary to a navigable stream that it also is navigable?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Missouri is tributary to the Mississippi.

Mr. GOOD. But the Missouri is a navigable stream. But Bear Creek and Skunk Creek are brought within the provisions of this law, even if they do not have more than 6 inches of water in spring freshets.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If they are navigable; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes a point of order against section 5 of the bill, which, in substance, makes it unlawful to discharge any free acid or acid waste in any form, either directly or indirectly, into any navigable water of the United States. It has been uniformly held that the river and harbor appropriation bill is not one of the general appropriation bills as to which restrictions in the way of legislation on an appropriation bill apply. Therefore, while the section carries with it legislation, if it be germane, and if it relates to the improvement of a river or harbor, then, in the opinion of the Chair, it is in order. The chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has made the statement from the floor that the discharge of free acid or acid waste into navigable waters does interfere with the improvement of such rivers. The attention of the Chair has also been called to a report or memorandum of the Chief of Engineers, in which the statement is made that "the presence of acid and acid salts in the water results in deterioration of the boilers and hulls of steamboats and damage to the submerged metal parts of the Government locks and dams." He further states that "the damage done to the Government locks and dams is extensive." While the Chair is not altogether clear upon the subject, the Chair is inclined to think that this section is in order as bearing upon the improvement of navigable streams, because it is perfectly manifest that if the discharge of free acid and acid waste into navigable streams has the effect of destroying the locks and dams which are placed in the streams for the purpose of improving and making them navigable, then its presence is a very serious detriment and hindrance to the governmental work of improvement on such streams, and the River and Harbor Committee, in the opinion of the Chair, would have jurisdiction to report legislation having for its object the elimination or prevention of such injury. Under such circumstances it seems to the Chair that the committee is as much authorized to report legislation removing the acid or acid waste from navigable streams, constituting, as it has been stated, an obstruction to navigation, as it is to report legislation removing snags or similar obstructions from a navigable river, a right which the Chair understands has not been denied.

It is a question for the committee to decide as to whether or not such waste shall be allowed in navigable streams, and in overruling the point of order the Chair wishes to say, inasmuch as a great deal has been said upon the floor as to the merits of this proposition, that of course that is something which rests entirely with the committee and with which the Chair in passing upon this question has nothing whatever to do. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the Chair yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I understand the effect of the ruling of the Chair is that any legislation whatever provided it is only germane is in order upon the rivers and harbors bill?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair has not announced any such ruling. The Chair undertook to say that in his opinion any legislation relating to an improvement of a river or harbor was in order upon a river and harbor appropriation bill under the rules of the House, subject to the limitations announced.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If it was germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; it must be germane to the bill, to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. My understanding of the ruling of the Chair—I am only speaking of it now as to the precedent it may have—goes to the full extent of saying that no matter whether it may be new legislation or not providing it is only germane it is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. That has been the ruling, as the Chair understands the precedents, for a great number of years.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I understand; but I do not remember a case where we went so far as to permit the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to provide a punishment—to make it unlawful and provide a very severe punishment—for an infringement of the law.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I could cite the gentleman to dozens of instances.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not recall an instance of that kind.

Mr. SMALL. I will cite the gentleman later.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBBINS. If I am dissatisfied with this ruling can I appeal to the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; the gentleman can. The Chair will be glad to entertain it and have the committee pass upon it.

Mr. ROBBINS. Well, I do appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, after a conference with the other two Members, particularly the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], I ask unanimous consent to amend my substitute so as to strike out those words in the third line, "or into any tributaries of same."

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman does not have to do that, because the amendment was only read for information.

Mr. SMALL. Then I offer the amendment with those words omitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 5, on pages 17 and 18, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War shall cause an investigation to be made regarding the discharge or deposit into any of the navigable waters of the United States of free acid or acid waste in any form, and the extent of same, together with any injurious results affecting the navigability of such waters, or any works of improvement made thereon by the United States, or upon any vessels navigating the same, and submit a report of any recommendations which may be deemed appropriate, and any necessary expenses connected therewith shall be paid out of available funds herein or heretofore appropriated for examinations, surveys, and contingencies."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I should like to have that part of the amendment again reported which referred to examination of the effect of these acids on vessels navigating the streams. Is that in there?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. I shall not undertake to cover the ground that has been covered heretofore. If I understood correctly the conclusions of the Chair, they were based upon the fact that this acid might have effect upon the material in the locks because that would affect the navigability of the stream, but I did not understand the former ruling of the Chair to go to the extent of saying that the effect of these acids poured into the water might affect the craft navigating the stream was a proper matter for legislation by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors under the rules of the House.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. SMALL. To submit a unanimous-consent request. Mr. Chairman, in order to make haste and eliminate any discussion I ask unanimous consent to strike out those words, "or upon any vessels navigating the same."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object for a moment, and I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire to say to the gentleman from North Carolina that what he proposes to omit seems to be one of the most important subjects for investigation. It appears to me preposterous to suppose that Congress will appropriate money to promote the navigability of a stream, to deepen the water, to put in dams, and the Government itself build boats to be placed upon those streams, and yet the committee which reports the bill for an appropriation for these specific purposes can not at the same time do anything to protect the very vessels—not even the Government's vessels—which seek to navigate those streams. You might dig a stream as deep as you please, build as many dams as you please, but if you put into the water a substance that interferes with vessels seeking to navigate it you, to that extent, virtually destroy its navigability. Certainly the providing of a remedy for that ought to be within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I can suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin a remedy for that, and that is that Congress decline to make appropriations to improve rivers that are polluted in any such way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that is not at all new. For 20 years and more efforts have been made to destroy the police powers of the States by just such movements as this.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. Did the gentleman vote to amend the Federal Constitution for national prohibition?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I did.

Mr. SMALL. Did you also vote to amend the Constitution for woman suffrage?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I did not.

Mr. SMALL. Well, I do not know how you made the distinction, but I do not understand how a gentleman who voted for national prohibition can complain very much about invading the rights of the States.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Chairman, of course if the gentleman does not distinguish between that which is a moral wrong and the navigability of a stream, of course I can not hope to convince him of anything, or that I would be consistent in any way about it. [Laughter.] I voted to amend the Constitution. The gentleman brings in a proposition and asks its passage, despite the Constitution.

Now, if the gentleman withdraws that language, of course, under the prior ruling of the Chair—and to be entirely frank, I do not concur in the ruling made a few moments ago—I realize that the Chair would hold the same way again; but if the gentleman withdraws that language, there will be, of course, no necessity for our pressing the point of order any further.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, simply in the interest of saving time, I ask that those words be stricken from the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks permission to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Chairman. If this is done simply in the interest of time—and there is no merit in the withdrawal unless it is withdrawn for the purpose of making the language more in keeping with the responsibility placed upon Congress and its power to act—I think the gentleman ought not to be permitted to withdraw it. It is rather joking with a very important and serious subject, it seems to me. I do not want to object, but I think the gentleman from North Carolina ought to be permitted to change his reasons for his withdrawal. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMALL. I think I will adopt any reasons the gentleman may suggest. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I will object if it is to withdraw that investigation so far as it goes to an investigation of the effect of acids upon boats.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has heretofore stated that according to his interpretation of the rules and the precedents the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has the authority to report legislation upon a river and harbor bill which relates to the improvement of rivers and harbors and which is germane to the subject matter of the bill. The amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] proposes that an investigation shall be made by the Secretary of War regarding "the discharge or deposit into any of the navigable waters of the United States of free acid or acid waste in any form and the extent of same, together with any injurious results affecting the navigability of such waters, or any works of improvement made thereon by the United States, or upon any vessels navigating the same."

Now the Chair fails to see how the question as to the injury that may arise to vessels upon navigable streams has any direct relation to the improvement of a river or harbor for purposes of navigation. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment with those words stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not an amendment already pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The former amendment went out on a point of order.

Mr. SMALL. Strike out the words "or upon any vessel navigating the same." I ask that the modified amendment be read, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment. Strike out all of section 5, on pages 17 and 18, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War shall cause an investigation to be made regarding the discharge or deposit in any of the navigable waters of the United States, of free acid or acid waste in any form, and the extent of same, together with any injurious results affecting the navigability of such waters, or any works of improvement made thereon by the United States, and submit a report with any recommendations which may be deemed appropriate, and any expenses connected therewith shall be paid out of the available funds herein or heretofore appropriated for examinations, surveys, and contingencies."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman from North Carolina going to speak on his amendment? I desire to do so.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, at this time I desire to see if we can not have an agreement as to the debate on this paragraph. I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in five minutes.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would like to have some time on this.

Mr. SMALL. I would not take the gentleman from Pennsylvania off his feet.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed now.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order that that is not in order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

Mr. MADDEN. The time has come when we should finish this bill.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is getting impatient all of a sudden.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I now make the request that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have three minutes.

Mr. SMALL. In eight minutes, then.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would like to have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. ROBBINS. Can I have three minutes?

Mr. SMALL. Then, Mr. Chairman, make it 11 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I am going to object to that. We might as well close this thing up.

Mr. SMALL. We are trying to adjust things.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I know, but we have been adjusting things for three or four days, and the bill ought to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 11 minutes.

Mr. GARLAND. I want to be included in that for two minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Then make it 13 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I object.

Mr. SMALL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 13 minutes.

Mr. GARNER. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. You must have some debate before that motion can be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much not to agree with the committee on this proposition. It seems to me that the amendment which has been suggested is inexpedient at this time. In all large centers of population full use is being made of our industries for war purposes, and it is possible that many of them are discharging waste into navigable streams. I question whether this is the time to harass these great industrial enterprises by annoying investigations. The Chief of Engineers, in his letter to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, has stated that this matter had been fully investigated; that there had been careful tests along the Monongahela and the Ohio Rivers in particular, and that these tests indicated that the deterioration in one year due to the acid waste going into the Monongahela has been $25,000, and upon the entire 900 miles of the Ohio River, $32,000. It is proposed by this amendment to start a new inquiry over and above the one already conducted by the Chief of Engineers and his assistants, and no one knows what the cost of that inquiry is to be, or how much annoyance it is to bring to the various manufacturers and others who are doing the best they can now to further the business of the war. This legislation ought not to come up in the river and harbor bill, anyhow. It would more properly come up in a separate measure from the Rivers and Harbors Committee, or it might come up from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, within the jurisdiction of the Steamboat-Inspection Service of the United States. It is not clearly a question of navigation. It involves the pollution of streams, and the States have laws relating to the pollution of streams. By this inquiry it is possible to interfere with the measures already enacted by the States in the matter of sanitation and the discharge of waste into streams. I repeat, this is not a time to start an inquiry of this kind. It ought to go over, or come up in a separate measure. So important a matter should not come in as a rider on the river and harbor bill, and I submit that at this time the public interest demands that this amendment be defeated.

Mr. SMALL. I now ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments close in eight minutes, to be divided, three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS], three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], and two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in eight minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Gentlemen of the committee, I recognize that you are all weary, and that probably anything that I say will not influence a vote at this late hour of the day, but this proposed amendment is so important to the mining interests of western Pennsylvania, where is the congressional district which I have the honor to represent, that I can not let it pass without entering a vigorous protest.

It is proposed to appoint a commission to investigate the waters of western Pennsylvania and elsewhere with reference to mine water and other impurities and report some legislation prohibiting the same. That is plainly what is intended.

The district that I represent mined last year 20,000,000 tons of bituminous coal, and out of every one of those mines, not only the ones that are active, but a large number of old mines in that district that have been worked out or abandoned, is pouring a stream of water that is impregnated with sulphur. For more than half a century the mines of western Pennsylvania have been operated. They were first developed above the water level. In the mining of coal generally the surface of the ground and the coal seam are severed, and the title is vested in different owners. When these mines are worked out and abandoned, there is no fixed ownership of the space from which the coal has been removed; but by the mining of the coal the overlying surface cracks, subsides, and falls in, and the water that naturally found its vent on the surface in springs is now precipitated into the coal seam, and is pouring out at the pit's mouth into the streams, impregnating them with sulphur and other impurities. To adopt legislation here and attempt to exclude that water from flowing in natural watercourses into the rivers would simply mean to close up the mines of western Pennsylvania.

Not only that, but it is unnecessary. On August 5, 1886, and June 29, 1888, Congress passed two laws which now prevent the depositing in the navigable streams of the United States, of any substance, like "sawdust, slag, slate, and so forth, or any material of that kind," that would impede navigation, so that it is not necessary to legislate here to exclude this mine water, and that is what this means.

More than that, this is an invasion of the rights of the State of Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania has a completely organized system of inspection of the waters within the State under "a water commission" and "a health commission." They exclude from the streams everything that can be excluded. They have looked into this matter most carefully, and they have found that it is absolutely impossible to stop the running of coal-mine water into the streams.

We have had this same question up in our supreme court, and it was settled in our jurisdiction in the well-known case of Sanderson against the Pennsylvania Coal Co., that you can not prevent the water from a coal mine from flowing into the surface streams and flowing in natural watercourses, and you can not be required to purify it. The gentleman from Wisconsin has asked the question whether the rivers of western Pennsylvania are not 30 per cent mine water. They are 30 per cent mine water, because many of the hills of western Pennsylvania are being hollowed out by our mining operations, and the sources from which this water comes in part are through these worked-out mines. And I want to say to the chairman of the River and Harbor Committee that if he proposes to cripple the mining industry of Pennsylvania and Ohio tributary to these improved rivers, that there will not be any freight for these rivers that will need transportation by slack-water navigation.

By the striking out of section 5 and the substitution of the new section which proposes to provide for the appointment of a commission to ascertain the amount of acid and other impurities in the water that are flowing into the rivers and make recommendation of legislation required to prevent it we are starting on a dangerous course which is bound to result disastrously to the mining industries of the country.

The report made by experts, engineers, or chemists would, of course, show that the rivers of my district, to wit, the Allegheny, Monongahela, and Youghiogheny, which flow either along or through it, contain large quantities of sulphur, which attacks and destroys iron, also lime, magnesia, and other impurities which render the water unfit for domestic use or steam purposes.

When such a report is obtained and brought before Congress it would furnish a basis for an act of Congress to prohibit water containing these deleterious substances from being permitted to flow into the navigable streams. This would be a menace to the industries of my district and my State.

I am opposed to even giving countenance to this matter to the extent of appointing a commission and spending public money on a useless investigation of this kind. I do not want to have it even countenanced by being seriously considered in an act of Congress. Let the States work this situation out in their own way, as Pennsylvania is now doing.

Even if it were possible to purify the waters from coal mines, it would entail an expense on the mining industry that would close up every coal mine in western Pennsylvania. What good will it do to purify the water from the mines that are now active, and let the water flow from the old openings, to which no responsible ownership can now be found, into the streams and defile them? The whole proposition is impossible.

I urge you, my colleagues, to vote to strike out not only section 5 but to refuse to insert the substitution offered by the chairman of the River and Harbor Committee to create a commission to look into this water question.

Let us end the whole matter by voting both the section and the proposed substitute out of the bill, allowing this matter to rest with the States. Let us acknowledge that the States have still some rights that even Congress "is bound to respect."

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to add my testimony to the facts stated by my colleague [Mr. ROBBINS]. This provision would apply not only to the mines, but every rolling mill situated along the rivers in western Pennsylvania uses more or less acid in cleaning the iron, and for other purposes. Not only that, but the tanneries and innumerable paper mills, and all the great industries situated in western Pennsylvania, discharge some acid into these rivers.

Now, there have been demands made to stop this. Fifteen years ago they went out and attempted to enforce it. They provided that the rolling mills must dig vats in the earth to take the water before it entered into the river. They found that that did no good. They had to set that aside. They have been trying everything possible to prevent it. The sawmills are burning up all their stuff, but there comes rains and floods that takes the stuff into the river. So far as that is concerned, we have a great deal of navigation on that river, and have had for 100 years. We have had damage to navigation, but it has been so slight that the people have not complained of it. The piers put down by the Government are cement and stone. There is very little iron used.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in reply I beg to remind gentlemen that this is not the ordinary question of the mere pollution of streams, an evil which is subject to the police powers of the States. On the contrary, it is a question of appointing a commission to investigate and make a report with a view to the possible removal of substances—acids and acid wastes—which, it is said, directly interfere with navigation. The evidence by Government experts is clear and uncontradicted that the great amount of free acids and acid waste now pouring into these streams eats out the boilers in steamboats and in steam barges and dredges owned by the Government, and in the machinery in dams and other Government improvements. Here is therefore a direct obstruction to navigation. The Congress has exclusive jurisdiction to remove obstructions from navigable streams.

These substances would in time so cripple the engines in steamboats and steam barges as to make it impossible for them to go upstream. In other words their presence in the stream directly interferes with navigation.

With all respect to the Chair and to the gentleman from North Carolina, I think the withdrawal of that clause was a mistake, and I hope, because of the precedent this may establish, that some day the position of the Chair on that point will be changed.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] says that for 100 years there has been acid in the streams and that it has not interfered with navigation. But during 50 and, in many instances, 75 of those 100 years there was only a small amount of acid running into the navigable streams compared with what is pouring into them now. This great increase in the volume of acids in these streams does, according to the testimony of Government engineers, interfere seriously with navigation. The Government dredges the channels, and it ought certainly to be able to remove from them whatever interferes with vessels—at least its own vessels—wishing to navigate them.

Mr. GARLAND. What would be the use of stopping the acid coming into the water if you thereby stop the industries? What good is that to navigation?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, I think, misunderstands the question now before us. The proposition here is only to have an expert committee appointed to investigate and report to the House.

Mr. ROBBINS. What it is proposed to do is to get an investigation and a report by a lot of experts and bring it in here, where they do not know anything about it, and enact legislation that would shut up the coal mines.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will be here, and also other men will be here, who know all about it, and no mere committee report could, while they are present, compel Congress to enact a law to do a thing like that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The original paragraph, which is more objectionable than the amendment, still stands in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out section 5.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, we passed over, by unanimous consent, an amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY]. I understand that he wishes to withdraw his amendment and propose another.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment and substitute another.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 8, after the word "Yamhill," insert the word "River." Strike out the word "rivers," in line 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "river from the mouth of Clatskanie."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this will meet with no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the only effect of this amendment as it has been re-formed is to enable the appropriation for this group to be expended on all that part of the river which is under the existing project. It is not a new project, but simply modifies it to that extent. I do not think it is necessary, but the gentleman thinks so, and I defer to his opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill do pass. Pending that I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may be authorized to renumber the sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may be permitted to renumber the sections. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. SMALL was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. KITCHIN] having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10069, the rivers and harbors bill, and had instructed him to report the same with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I expect to move the previous question, but before doing so I desire to be heard briefly by the House. I shall ask for a separate vote on the amendment inserted by the Committee of the Whole adopting a new project at Key West, Fla., and I beg the attention of the House briefly to a statement which I shall make.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to state this: The gentleman is asking unanimous consent?

Mr. SMALL. Oh, no; I am not. I have the floor, and I have an hour, as I understand it, if I wish to use it; but I expect to use only a part of it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is that the rule, that the gentleman has an hour in presenting the bill in this way to the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He has, until the previous question is ordered.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield me 10 minutes and reserve for himself 50 minutes?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, this matter was thoroughly discussed, and the gentleman had ample time. If I should yield to the gentleman for five minutes now, would that be sufficient?

Mr. SEARS. At the end of the gentleman's time, if I care to take it.

Mr. SMALL. Oh, I have the floor, and I want to close the matter.

Mr. SEARS. Yes; I will be very glad to have five minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, am I yielding the floor in yielding to the gentleman for five minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman would be yielding the floor to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. SMALL. And at the end of five minutes would I resume the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended taking any more of the time of this House. The gentleman from North Carolina has stated that I had plenty of time to argue the Key West proposition. I suggest that the gentleman also had plenty of time; but I want to say this to my colleagues, as I said this afternoon briefly: I believe the Key West proposition is a war proposition, that it is meritorious, and, as I said in the conclusion of my argument the other day, with a naval base, with a torpedo base located at Key West, with all of the Government properties and interests located there, with a torpedo boat about a year ago destroyed because of the lack of proper facilities in the harbor, with a Government collier going aground, with hundreds of cars loaded waiting for ships so they could be unloaded, with the Mallory Steamship Co. taking off a steamer, with the Navy Department spending more than half a million on an aviation station and other improvements, if that does not constitute a war proposition, then I fail to see what a war proposition is. All I ask of the membership of this House, and evidently the chairman of this committee does not agree with me, is that they shall vote according to the merits of the proposition. On a viva voce vote and on a division in the committee the amendment was agreed to.

The committee lacked four votes of having a quorum, and a point of order of no quorum was raised. A quorum was secured and on a teller vote, with the membership of this House here to vote on this question, it was again adopted by about 32 votes. I believe the membership of this House will stand by that vote, and that you knew what you were doing then and what you will do now. In June, 1917, after we had declared war, Gen. Abbott, Gen. Black, and all of the Army engineers indorsed the report of Lieut. Col. Ladue that the improvement at Key West was urgent and necessary, and I contend that is an indorsement of the proposition. As I said to my colleagues this afternoon, in the case of Jacksonville, where the Board of Engineers stated that no estimate was made for Jacksonville because of war conditions, I refused to and would not ask the committee to make an appropriation, because I am in hearty accord with it. Neither would I ask for an appropriation at Miami, because of the funds on hand being sufficient. With 560 miles of seacoast, I did not ask the committee to give me a single dollar, except at Key West, which—according to admirals of unquestioned ability, to wit, Admiral Helm and Admiral Benton—is to the United States, if we would only make it so, what Heligoland is to Germany. There is no need of my taking up more of your time, and I simply say in conclusion, giving the gentleman 55 minutes in which to reply, that I believe my amendment is a meritorious one; that it is a worthy proposition; that it is a war proposition; that the freight congestion makes it one; and I also believe that my colleagues are convinced that the same is true, and, so believing, they will not force me to go to some board, not elected by anyone, to try to get an indorsement of a meritorious proposition before they will vote for it. If you are in accord with these sentiments, I ask you to vote with me; if you are not, then it is your duty to vote against me. [Applause.]

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Florida says that he defeated the committee. If that were the only issue involved, the chairman of the committee is broad enough to accept the judgment of the Committee of the Whole upon any matter, but the House upon a separate vote ought to reject this amendmen for a new project at Key West for broad reasons. It is contrary to the policy of the committee in the formulation of the bill and will seriously jeopardize the passage of any bill whatever at this session.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman in that connection?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman states that this is a new project. I want to ask the gentleman if he expects to call for a separate vote on what is known as the Dempsey amendment, the New York amendment?

Mr. SMALL. For the East River?

Mr. GARNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMALL. It is not the intention of the chairman of the committee to do it.

Mr. GARNER. Is not that in the same category as Key West?

Mr. SMALL. Not at all.

Mr. GARNER. Is not that a new project, a 40-foot project?

Mr. SMALL. Not at all. The river and harbor act last session, approved August 8, 1917, adopted that project of 40 feet and the only effect of the amendment is to expedite the improvement, that is all.

Mr. GARNER. Did not the gentleman from North Carolina just make the reverse statement in discussing that amendment on the floor of the House?

Mr. SMALL. I did not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMALL. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why did not the committee carry that amendment of the gentleman from New York as an original proposition in the bill?

Mr. SMALL. Because the committee did not think it wise and does not now think it is wise.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then, why does not the committee now oppose its adoption?

Mr. SMALL. The question the gentleman from Texas asked was whether there is any difference between them. There is quite a distinction. The amendment as to the East River simply expedites the improvement. Key West is a new project absolutely.

Now, let me present this matter to the House, and let the House do what it deems best in wisdom and fairness to do. This, as I said, is a new project, and I ask the attention of gentlemen, because I am going to be brief.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. SMALL. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I suggest that this is a very unusual procedure. I have never, if the gentleman will permit——

Mr. SMALL. I did not yield for a speech, I yielded for a question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have never seen, after the completion of a bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, an argument then had in the House. Now, if it is for the purpose of convincing the House, in order to have a full vote of the House we ought to have a full House here.

Mr. SMALL. I have no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not wish to do anything objectionable to the gentleman.

Mr. SMALL. I have no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee makes a point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided: and there were—ayes 13, noes 64.

So the call of the House was refused.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Texas that he withhold that for a moment.

Mr. GARNER. I will withhold it for a moment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings on to-morrow may be dispensed with in order that the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill may be called up.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In the situation we now find ourselves I submit that that request is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is well taken. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Is this division upon the demand for the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I demanded the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. FOSTER. I do. I want to see how many of this House are willing to quit at this hour of the afternoon with business of importance pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Illinois did not answer the Chair's question. Did the gentleman ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. FOSTER. I do, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those in favor of the yeas and nays will stand and be counted. [After counting.] Twenty gentlemen have arisen; not a sufficient number——

Mr. FOSTER. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 20, noes 80.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 54, nays 245, not voting 133, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is present. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] is recognized.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, nothing but a sense of duty impels the committee to ask for a separate vote upon the new project for Key West, and upon that I wish to make a brief statement, and I ask not to be interrupted until I have completed my presentation.

When the committee took up the river and harbor bill at this session for consideration its first thought was to have no new projects in the bill. The reasons for that course are manifest. We are engaged in a great war. The prosecution of that war demands all of the labor, all of the material, and all of the resources of the country which are not of necessity dedicated to other important uses. Therefore the committee concluded that there should be no new projects in the bill.

Subsequently that was amended so as to permit the inclusion of such new projects as were intimately associated with the prosecution of the war and were so recommended by the Secretary of War. With the exception of Key West, adopted in the Committee of the Whole, there is no new project in this bill except such as were recommended by the Secretary of War because they were intimately associated with the prosecution of the war.

This project was presented to the committee among a large number of other projects. The chairman of this committee has spent hours in examining the new projects which have been heretofore reported to Congress, which number nearly 200, and here is a list of new projects which I hold in my hand which it was insisted should be included in the pending bill. Let me name just a few of them: Beverly Harbor, Mass.; Taunton River, Mass.; Stamford Harbor, Conn.; Buffalo Harbor, N. Y.; Oswego Harbor, N. Y.; Key West Harbor, Fla.; waterway, Mississippi River to Bayou Teche; Vermilion River, La., and channel to connect with inland waterway; Cumberland River above Nashville; Livingstone Channel, Detroit River, Mich., which connects Lake Erie and Lake St. Clair and through which the great commerce of the Lakes passes; Siuslaw River, Oreg., Acme to entrance; Yaquina Bar, Bay, and Harbor, Oreg., for which the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] offered an amendment this afternoon in the Committee of the Whole and which the Committee of the Whole refused to adopt; Coos Bay Harbor, Oreg., which the gentleman from Oregon also endeavored to induce the Committee of the Whole to adopt by amendment, but which they refused to do; Anacortes Harbor, Wash.; Nawiliwili Harbor, Kauai, Hawaii; Hackensack River, N. J.; Tangier Channel, Va.; Brunswick Harbor, Ga.; Cape Fear River below Wilmington, N. C.; Connecticut River below Hartford, Conn.; Newtown Creek, N. Y.

And so I might enumerate to you, if time permitted, other new projects which were impressed upon the committee, all of which the committee declined to include in the bill because they did not come within the policy of the committee.

If you should permit the project for Key West Harbor to remain in the bill, would it be fair, would it be just to these other new projects? Would it be giving a square deal to all other sections of the country? I have always found the House fair and just. I believe the House will deal fairly and justly in this matter.

There was another reason particularly why we could not have adopted the project for Key West, because it involved either the construction or the purchase of a dredging plant. The committee adopted a policy that they could not at this time recommend any provision which would result in either the purchase or the construction of a dredge. In this critical time, when the United States Shipping Board is telling Congress and the country that every resource of our shipyards and our man power should be exerted in the construction of merchant ships, we concluded that we could not in justice to the country authorize the purchase or construction of any dredge.

Gentlemen, there is another feature involved in this new project. If the House decides to adopt in the bill the new project for Key West, then, what will be the policy of the other body when they come to consider this bill? Suppose they amend this bill by putting in a large number of new projects? You will disagree to all of the Senate amendments and direct the conferees to act for you in conference with the committee of the other body. What argument will we have against those new projects when we shall have put in a new project which is no more meritorious, perhaps, than those other projects which the Senate shall have added to the bill? You can see that you fetter the hands of your conference committee. You must appreciate the difficult situation you would create. But if the House is willing for the other body to adopt a number of new projects as amendments to this bill, and you are willing when that bill comes back to adopt those new projects, then you should vote to keep Key West in. Otherwise, you should vote to exclude it.

I tell you, gentlemen of the House, that the bill is in jeopardy. We had not believed that any bill could pass this House which contained a number of new projects which were not associated with the prosecution of the war. It is for the House to say this evening whether or not we were correct in our estimate of the attitude of the House upon this question.

If it is the attitude of the House that there should be no new projects in this bill except such as are associated with the prosecution of the war, and so recommended by the Secretary of War, is it the opinion of the House that you can consistently let in one new project which does not comply with that condition? If that is the attitude of the House, we have nothing whatever to say.

Now, gentlemen, only this word in conclusion. During the time that the roll was being called gentlemen came to me and said there is a personal viewpoint to this. I will not quote their language. I know that the gentleman from Florida, whom I esteem as highly as any gentleman in the House, has been insistent in importuning Members to vote to keep Key West in the bill. I think I am amiable. I think my course in this House shows that, except when it is a violation of a plain duty, I will go as far as any Member in responding to the personal request of another; and if I could, with a sense of duty to this bill and to the House, decline to ask a separate vote upon this amendment, I would do so. I have endeavored to give you briefly some reason why the House should vote to strike out this amendment for Key West. We have no pride of opinion in the matter. We realize that we are the servants of the House, and having made this presentation to the House we realize quite fully that the House can do what it pleases upon a separate vote regarding the new project at Key West. Now, Mr. Speaker ——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to the final passage.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to ask the gentleman, will he not be fair enough now to yield to my colleague [Mr. SEARS] five minutes? There are many Members present who were not here before.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. SMALL. I think I ought not to yield now. The gentleman has already had five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. All right, if the gentleman thinks that is fair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina for the previous question on the bill and all amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote upon each amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A separate vote is to be taken on the Key West amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The demand having been made for a vote on each one of the amendments, is it not in order that each amendment be taken up as it appears in the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist on his demand?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: Line 24, page 2, after the numerals "$2,200,000," add the following: "and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to prosecute the work of improvement, with a view to securing a depth of 40 feet in the channel through East River and Hell Gate as soon as practicable."

The question being taken on the amendment, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 140, noes 14.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Strike out line 20, page 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Improvement and for maintenance, including the channel to Newport News, $1,940,000."

The question being taken on the amendment, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 182, noes 0.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 4, strike out the period at the end of line 25, insert in lieu thereof a colon, and add the following words: "Provided, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, make such minor changes in the waterways as he may deem advisable in the interest of navigation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 5, strike out the period at the end of line 21, insert in lieu thereof a semicolon, and add the following: "For improvement to provide a channel 40 feet deep and 1,000 feet wide extending from the sea to the Charleston Navy Yard, $1,500,000: Provided, That this work shall not be undertaken until the proposed new dry dock at this navy yard, carrying a depth of 40 feet of water over the blocks, has been authorized. In all, $1,610,000."

The question being taken on the amendment, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 158, noes 9.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. How many more amendments are there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to inform the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I think the votes that have already been taken includ the larger projects which have been put into the bill, namely, Hell Gate and Charleston, and I withdraw the demand for a separate vote on the others.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws his demand for a separate vote.

Mr. WALSH. As long as gentlemen are willing to stay here I can renew it, I presume.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws his demand for a separate vote. The Chair will put all the other amendments en bloc, except the amendment for Key West, on which a separate vote is demanded by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

The other amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Key West amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment with respect to the Key West proposition.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. SEARS and Mr. CLARK of Florida) there were—ayes 133, noes 98.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 151, nays 133, answered "present" 2, not voting 146, as follows:

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent (at the request of Mr. SANDERS of Indiana), leave of absence was granted to Mr. VESTAL indefinitely, to attend the funeral of his law partner.

CONFERENCE REPORT—AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with proceedings in order on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow, in order to take up the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I presume that that will not deprive the Committee on Banking and Currency from the following Wednesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not interfere with that committee having the following Wednesday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TAKING OVER CERTAIN TRANSPORTATION SYSTEMS.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. This is the same request that I submitted this morning, and I would state that all of the details in relation to it have been agreed upon between myself and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. My request is that following a bill to be presented by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] and one to be brought in by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] and not to interfere with the business on Monday next of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the bill S. 3388, to amend the emergency shipping fund provisions of the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved June 15, 1917, so as to empower the President and his designated agents to take over certain transportation systems for the transportation of shipyard and plant employees, and for other purposes, shall be a special order. Further that there shall be one hour of general debate on same, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] and one-half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], and the bill to be then taken up under the five-minute rule for disposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that after the disposition of a bill to be presented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], a bill to be presented by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] that it shall be in order to consider the bill S. 3388, not to interfere with conference reports; that one hour of general debate be allowed, one half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] and the other half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE]. Is there objection?

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would that interfere with District day, which comes next Monday?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That was specifically excluded in my request. Moreover action on this bill is not to interfere with the consideration of conference reports.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman what effect this agreement will have on the consideration of the annual naval appropriation bill?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. PADGETT, and myself, had that up this morning. He said he had two bills that he was interested in, and that one of them would not take very long. That bill is to come up ahead of the bill from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BRITTEN. The consideration of the naval bill is very important.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] says that his bill was not expected to take more than an hour or two.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. PADGETT. I told him that I would have no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. One hour to be given to general debate. Does the gentleman have any idea of how much will be consumed under the five-minute rule?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not think that the bill will require much time for its disposition after the general debate. No one can guarantee of course how much time may be taken. The members of the committee are perfectly agreed upon the bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. There is no minority report?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. I make this request at the suggestion of the entire committee.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire what two gentlemen are to have the privilege of presenting bills?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, Mr. PADGETT, has a bill of urgency to present.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is it a war measure?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Decidedly so.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the other?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The other is an amendment to the war-risk insurance act, I think, which it is said will take but a little time, and is also of great importance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman from Virginia where he would be left if unamimous consent were refused for the consideration of these other two bills?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I would come in, instanter.

Mr. GILLETT. Not under this agreement.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, I would think so. If these gentlemen could not get in, I would get in. Failure on their part to get their bills up, would be sufficient action on these bills to comply with the meaning of my request. My request is that following the bills to be presented by these gentlemen, this bill is to be in order. If these gentlemen ask for their bills to be taken up, and consent is refused, then this bill from my committee would follow the other bills, and be in order. I think that is the plain meaning of my request.

Mr. WALSH. Not under the request as the gentleman stated it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then I would modify the request by adding that in the event these other gentlemen are not able to get in, that my bill shall be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman as modified?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the request, it is that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] shall be recognized to call up the bill which has been indicated; that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] shall be recognized immediately after that for the consideration of his bill; and that then the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] shall be recognized, not to interfere with District matters in order on Monday next.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is substantially my request.

Mr. GILLETT. That is not the request, with all respect to the gentleman, and it seems to me that would have been the natural and logical way to have had the gentlemen who want to come first, first to make their request.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I stated specifically that after the bills to be brought up by these gentlemen, which I may say will have to be done by unanimous consent, the bill from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, was to be the next in order, that is, would come immediately next.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there objection to this suggestion?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think there is, but it strikes me the proper way for them is to have asked——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But I have stated specifically that these gentlemen are to have the right to bring up by unanimous consent their bills first and thereafter when those bills were concluded, the bill to which I refer shall be in order.

Mr. FLOOD. I object to that——

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, regular order!

Mr. FLOOD. I should object to letting everything in——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No, simply two emergency bills like the one from my committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. WALSH. I object to this request, if it puts these two others in by unanimous consent.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SMALL. I will ask the gentleman to withhold that for a moment. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting some data and other information which I did not wish to take up the time of the House in presenting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. Will the engrossed copy of the river and harbor bill be laid before the House to-morrow morning the first thing?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We hope so.

The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting some data with respect to the river and harbor bill. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my demand for the regular order.

Mr. WALSH. It has been objected to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the river and harbor bill only.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 17, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 17, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy favor and guidance for the duties of the day. As we look out upon the task committed to our hands we stand amazed and yet unafraid in the presence of the mighty forces which seem to be arrayed against the freedom of the world; and we come to Thee, O God of nations, and lift our hearts fervently and we trust with confidence in Thy presence and power. We pray Thee to bless those who with us on the battle field this day withstand the brute force of this earth, that they may march forward for the achievement of righteousness and truth in the world. For Christ's sake. Amen.

GERMANY'S PREPARATIONS FOR THE WAR.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an article from the Bridgeport Evening Post written by a correspondent abroad purporting to give the dates and the orders issued by the German Government during the few months that preceded the war. I should like to have it read and go into the RECORD. I think it is an important disclosure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

"GERMANY'S PLANS FOR OPENING WAR FULLY REVEALED—COPIES OF AN ASTOUNDING SERIES OF MILITARY AND GOVERNMENT ORDERS SHOWING PREPARATIONS SEVEN MONTHS BEFORE STRUGGLE ACTUALLY OPENED IN HANDS OF FRENCH—AGENTS THROUGHOUT WORLD ORDERED TO CRIPPLE INDUSTRIES BY DESTRUCTIVE MEANS, REGARDLESS OF ANY CONSIDERATION—MEANS INCLUDED SABOTAGE, REVOLUTION, TERRORISM, AND CORRUPTION—AMAZING DUPLICITY MADE KNOWN.

"[By Henry Wood, United Press staff correspondent.]

"WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES IN THE FIELD,

"March 16 (by mail).

"The French have to-day in their possession copies of an astounding series of military and Government orders showing Germany's preparation for the present war from January 2, 1914, seven months before war actually was declared, down to the Kaiser's latest efforts to spread world-wide revolution and anarchy.

"The first indication that the German general staff knew war would be forced in 1914 is given in an order addressed on January 2 to the commanders of all army regions. It reads:

"BERLIN ORDERS.

"'Within three days you will telegraph the precise quantity, kinds, and distribution of all military provisions which you have intact and of all primary materials.'

"This was Germany's first step of military preparation. Her first step of financial preparation followed, on February 18, when the German minister of finance, in agreement with the Austro-Hungarian Government, sent to all the groups of German banks a secret circular which read:

"'The directors of credit establishments are designated to establish, with urgence, agencies in the following places: Lulea (southern Sweden); Hapsaranda and Varde, on the Finland frontier; and at Bergen and Amsterdam. The establishment of these agencies is indispensable for the exercise of a more active surveillance of the material interest of German stockholders in Russia, French, and English enterprises, and which may become necessary in certain circumstances modifying the organization of the financial and industrial market.'

"PLAN FOR MOBILIZATION.

"On March 8, 1914, the German Imperial staff began the census of the material it might have at its disposal for the war, then in view, with the aid of all inspectors of mines and factories. Then, on June 9, came indicative order of all. It reads as follows:

"'Twenty-four hours after the receipt of this circular telegraph orders to the proprietors of all industrial enterprises to open the sealed envelopes containing the drawings and plans of mobilizations indicated in the circular of the commission of Count Waldersee and Count Caprivi of June 27, 1887.'

"TERRORISM AND CORRUPTION.

"From the very moment it became apparent that Germany could not win the war by the sheer brute force of her military supremacy there began a second 'preparation' to win, if possible, by the other German means of sabotage, revolution, terrorism, and corruption.

"On November 2, 1914, the German general staff inaugurated this new 'preparation' by sending a circular to all of its military agents on the frontiers of Russia, France, Italy, and Norway, advising them that 'in all branches of German banks in Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, and the United States special military credits have been opened, destined for the accessory needs of the war.'

"UNLIMITED MONEY FOR DESTRUCTION.

"'The German general staff authorizes you to have recourse in unlimited proportions for the purpose of destroying buildings, factories, supply houses, and the provisions of the more important kind, both of a military and civil kind, belonging to the enemy,' the circular said.

"'While trying to bring about strikes, it is necessary to take steps for the sabotage of motors and machinery, for the destruction of vessels transporting war material to the enemy's country, to burn the reserve stocks of primary materials and manufactured goods, and to cut off the grand manufacturing centers from their supplies of electricity, coal, and food.'

"The circular concludes by saying:

"'Special agents put at your disposition will furnish you with the necessary materials for provoking explosions and fires; also a list of persons of the country under your surveillance who will act as destruction agents.'

"ORDER TO MOBILIZE 'AGENTS.'

"A little later, on November 28, the general staff of the German marine also took a hand by issuing orders to all maritime agents to mobilize all the agents of surveillance and agents of destruction in the military ports of the allies. Continuing, the circular reads:

"'It is indispensable by the intermediary or third persons having no relations with the official representatives of Germany to recruit progressively agents for the organization of explosions aboard ships en route to enemy countries, for causing delays and confusion in the taking on of cargo, and in the departure and unloading of these ships. To this end we recommend particularly to your attention the stevedores, amongst whom are many anarchists and escaped criminals.'

"RECRUIT DESTRUCTION AGENTS.

"On January 15, 1915, the German Imperial staff sent the following order to its military agents in the United States:

"'We call your attention to the possibility of recruiting destruction agents from amongst the anarchistic labor organizations.'

"From this point on Germany may be said to have begun a third 'preparation,' that of 'defeatism.' Her military preparation having failed to win the war, and then her sabotage preparation, Germany began a new preparation for the overthrow of the various governments in the war against her. This is defined in a circular issued by the press director of the German foreign office on February 23, 1915, and which was sent to all the German ambassadors, ministers, and consuls, which reads:

"PROPAGATE SOCIAL UNREST.

"'There have been established within the territory of the country where you are special bureaus for the organization of propaganda in the countries that are in the war against Germany. The propaganda will have for its object to propagate social unrest, accompanied by strikes, revolutionary explosions, separation movements, and civil war, as well as an agitation in favor of disarmament and the cessation of the present bloody war.'

"Numerous other documents showing the participation of German 'big business' in the 'preparation of defeatism' that has had such a terrible result in Russia are likewise on file. These include a copy of 'Kamarad' Scheidemann's letter of August 25, 1917, attacking Gorki and announcing the remittance to Russia of 150,000 marks. Still other documents show the remittance of large sums, even to Trotsky and Lenine.

"This brings Germany's three great 'preparations,' that of her military campaign, of her campaign of sabotage, and of her campaign of social unrest, revolution, and civil war, up to date."

HENRY F. ASHURST,
ROBERT L. OWEN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
C. D. CARTER,
CARL HAYDEN,
P. P. CAMPBELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in presenting the report it is my duty to say that the conferees have clearly violated the recently adopted rule. We have inserted matter in the report which the Senate expressly legislated against. I say this frankly to the Senate, so that it may exercise its right to reject the conference report, and I certainly hope some Senator will make a point of order against the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator if the item referred to by him is the item that affects the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; amendment numbered 60, affecting the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. SMOOT. As I remembered the number, it is 60.

Mr. ASHURST. It is amendment numbered 60.

Mr. OWEN and Mr. CURTIS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask that this report be printed and go over one day.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right. That ought to be done.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to make the point of order against the report that it is a violation of paragraph 2 of Rule XXVII.

Mr. OWEN. I think I have a right to ask that the report be printed, so that Senators may have an opportunity of reading it and to have their judgment as to whether a point of order will lie. In my opinion, the point of order will not lie as the chairman of the committee thinks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule is that when there is a motion to take up a conference report it must be decided at once and without debate. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report?

Mr. OWEN. I ask that it may go over until to-morrow and be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. I have a great deal of personal regard and respect for the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma, and I am willing on my responsibility as a Senator and on my responsibility as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to say we have violated the rule and that, too, upon a vital matter. Now, in the present posture of affairs there is but one thing to do, and that is to correct the error by allowing the point of order to be sustained. If the Senator from Oklahoma wants to have the report go over, I have no objection.

Mr. OWEN. I want to have it printed, so that Senators may vote intelligently upon the point in controversy.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Arizona pardon me?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the request made by the Senator from Oklahoma is very proper and that the report should go over and be printed. In fact, I think every conference report ought to go over one day and be printed.

Mr. ASHURST. That would be true if the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee were urging an immediate adoption of the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. I inferred from the suggestion made by the Chair that that request had been made. If not, very naturally the report will go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumed from the attitude of the Senator from Arizona that he was asking for the immediate consideration of the report.

Mr. ASHURST. I did. I asked for the immediate consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule there is nothing for the Chair to do except to put the question. That is all there is to it.

Mr. OWEN. I move that the Senate direct the report to be printed and that it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. ASHURST. I make a point of order against that motion. It is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Oklahoma is not in order. The question is, Shall the report of the committee of conference be considered? [Putting the question.] The noes have it. The report goes over, and it will be printed.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish the RECORD to show that I made a point of order against the report when it was presented.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I present resolutions adopted by the congregation of the Union Methodist Episcopal Church, of Wilmington, Del., Sunday, April 14, 1918, asking for appropriate legislation necessary to secure the uniform observance of the Christian Sabbath throughout the United States of America. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Adopted by Union Methodist Episcopal Church, Wilmington, Del., Sunday, April 14, 1918.

Whereas the European war, in which the United States of America is now engaged, has seemingly reached a critical stage; and

Whereas the future of Christian civilization is in jeopardy in case of a German victory over the allies: Therefore be it

Resolved, First, that it is essential now that we have the help of Almighty God to win this war.

Resolved, Second, that we as a Nation should show the sincerity of our faith in God by keeping the Sabbath Day as provided in our laws. We have greatly sinned in this respect, even this whole Nation. It is time for sincere repentence and earnest prayer. But faith without work is dead. We should begin in good earnest to obey God. There are Federal laws and laws on the statute books of all the States of this Nation whose design is to protect the Sabbath as a sacred day by prohibiting secular employment and amusements on the Lord's Day. The secular press often sneers at these laws as "Old Blue Laws," but the secular press has not been without sin in the matter of breaking our Sabbath laws. The secular press of the country is a powerful agency for good, but it should not be allowed to sin against God and destroy the most sacred institution of this Republic.

We urgently call upon President Woodrow Wilson, and upon our Federal Congress, to make such proclamations and enact such appropriate legislation as is necessary to secure the uniform observance of the Christian Sabbath throughout the United States of America. We believe this will help toward a speedy victory on the field of battle and a righteous settlement at the close of the war.

Resolved, Third, that copies of these resolutions be sent to President Wilson, to our Representatives in Congress, to be read before the Senate and House of Representatives, to Gov. Townsend, of the State of Delaware, and to the public press.

GEORGE A. COOK,
Minister of Methodist Episcopal Church, for a congregation of about 500 people.

Mr. CURTIS presented a memorial of sundry members of the Flathead Tribe of Indians residing on the Flathead Indian Reservation in the State of Montana, remonstrating against enactment of legislation providing for the selling of certain lands within their reservation, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Blythe, Cal., praying for the repeal of the present zone system of postage rates on second-class mail matter, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Butchers' Union, No. 120, of Oakland, Cal., favoring the conservation of suckling lambs, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Noblesboro, Me., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Winterport Village, Me., praying for the repeal of the present zone system of postage rates on second-class mail matter, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 4103) to consolidate certain forest lands within the Cache National Forest, Utah, and to add certain lands thereto, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 397) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 10027. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 398); and

H. R. 10477. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 399).

PROTECTION OF UNIFORM OF FRIENDLY NATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 4277) providing for the protection of the uniform of friendly nations, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 396) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill, if it shall not lead to any discussion, and I do not think it will.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides that it shall be unlawful for any person, within the United States or Territories, possessions, waters, or places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to wear any naval, military, police, or other official uniform, decoration, or regalia of any State, nation, or government with which the United States is at peace, or any uniform, decoration, or regalia so nearly resembling the same as to be calculated to deceive, unless such wearing be authorized by such State, nation, or government.

Any person who violates the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $300 or imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. OWEN. I am directed by the Committee on Banking and Currency to report back favorably, with several amendments, the bill (S. 4292) to conserve the gold supply of the United States; to permit the settlement in silver of trade balances adverse to the United States; to provide silver for subsidiary coinage and for commercial use; to assist foreign governments at war with the enemies of the United States; and for the above purposes to stabilize the price and encourage the production of silver; and I submit a report (No. 400) thereon.

The sum and substance of this bill, Mr. President, is to permit the Treasury Department to take $350,000,000 of the standard silver dollars and retire the silver certificates, using in lieu thereof Treasury notes as a basis of the issue of bank currency by the Federal reserve banks, and then repurchase the silver at the same fixed price of $1 an ounce, so as to restore that metallic silver to the Treasury as soon as it can be produced by American mines, and to encourage the production of silver by fixing the price of $1 an ounce until that shall have been made good. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I must object to that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object until we finish the order of the introduction of bills.

Mr. OWEN. I understood that reports of committees were in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Reports of committees are in order, as I understand, but not action upon committee reports.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. OWEN subsequently said: I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4292, reported by me a few moments ago from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of order that under the rule the bill must go over one day.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask to present, for publication in the RECORD, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], requesting that this measure be favorably considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MARCH 30, 1918.

HON. KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have examined the draft of a bill embodying the ideas which have been discussed between us for the utilization of the silver now lying unused in the Treasury of the United States. I venture to recapitulate briefly the purposes to be accomplished by the bill, and the reasons which, in my judgment, require its enactment.

The annual production of silver has varied in recent years, having fluctuated from 160,000,000 ounces to 226,000,000 ounces per annum according to the estimates of the Director of the Mint. Production for the year 1916 amounted to 156,600,000 ounces, and for the year 1917 is estimated to be approximately 160,000,000 ounces. The decline in production during recent years has been partly due to conditions in MEXICO, as the result of which Mexican mines have not been operated to their full capacity. The price of silver has varied from about 48¾ cents per fine ounce, at which price it sold during August, 1915, to $1.18 per fine ounce during September, 1917. Apart from industrial requirements, estimated at about 100,000,000 ounces per annum, silver is used by all nations for subsidiary coinage and by India and other oriental countries for major coinage. In China uncoined silver circulates as money.

The European war has greatly enlarged the demand for silver. European countries engaged in the conflict have required unusual quantities of silver coins for their armies and for the civil population. Buying power of oriental countries has been greatly enlarged, and as the importation of commodities has been limited owing to war needs of the belligerents, that buying power has been exercised to acquire silver.

China and India are the two oriental countries that absorb the largest amounts of silver. The products of India are wheat, jute, burlap, etc. The demand for Indian products has been unusual. Jute bagging is used for sugar, grain, and fertilizer bags, also as outside wrappers for cotton and other products. It is also used for trench bags and for packing many articles of military necessity. No article has been found that will serve as a substitute.

The Orient is willing to accept silver in place of gold for commodities furnished by them, and it is to the interest of the United States and its allies that foreign trade balances should, as far as possible, be settled in silver rather than in gold. The gold in this country and in the hands of its allies is needed as a base for the enormous credit structure it is necessary to erect in the process of placing Government loans, and every ounce of silver that can be used in the settlement of foreign balances is so much gained. It is better to settle trade balances by shipping silver than to make arrangements for stabilizing exchange where these are possible, as they are not in the Orient, because these exchange arrangements, whatever their form, always mean a deferred demand for gold, while the settlement of foreign balances in silver is a definite settlement calling for no future adjustments. Further, the unprecedented business activity in this country has caused an unusual demand for silver for subsidiary coinage, the needs of the United States for this purpose during the present year being greater than ever before, amounting as they do, to approximately 21,250,000 ounces.

There are now in the Treasury of the United States approximately 490,000,000 of standard silver dollars, containing approximately 375,000,000 ounces of fine silver. Against these standard silver dollars there are outstanding silver certificates, and so long as these silver certificates remain outstanding a corresponding amount of silver dollars must be held for their redemption.

The proposal is now made to borrow from the Treasury for the purposes stated above a portion of the silver so held in the Treasury, but only upon the cancellation from time to time of a corresponding amount of outstanding silver certificates. The silver having been so borrowed and used, the Secretary of the Treasury is required to repurchase from time to time at the fixed price of $1 per fine ounce an amount of silver equal to the silver so borrowed and used, and to recoin that silver into standard silver dollars, thus in time replacing in the Treasury the silver so withdrawn. In this way the large mass of silver, which is serving no useful active purpose, now can be made available for a direct war purpose. There is no intention of making any permanent change in the status of the silver certificates. The proposition is, in brief, to retire silver certificates; to borrow from the Treasury the silver for use for the war purposes above set forth; and then, as silver from time to time in the future comes on the market, to replace the silver so borrowed by purchase in the market at the fixed price of $1 per fine ounce and to replace the borrowed silver by coining the new silver acquired for that purpose into standard silver dollars. There is no limit of time within which this must be done.

The cost of producing silver, like the cost of producing all other commodities, has greatly increased. Labor is receiving very much higher wages than during normal times. Machinery is more expensive, and the chemicals and other supplies needed in the production of silver are all correspondingly higher in price. The price at which the silver is to be rebought has been fixed in the proposed bill at $1 per ounce. This price was arrived at after an examination by the Director of the Mint into the cost of producing silver in a number of different mines, and the Director of the Mint is of the opinion that $1 per fine ounce under all the conditions at present prevailing is a fair price. The silver released through the retirement of silver certificates will be sold by the Secretary of the Treasury for the war purposes stated at a price that will permit him, without loss, to rebuy at the price of $1 an ounce the silver thus sold.

The proposed measure is unquestionably in the interest of the country as a whole for the prosecution of the war. It proposes no permanent change in our existing currency arrangements. What is proposed is a temporary change, consisting of the active use for war purposes of the silver now lying inert in the Treasury. The bill provides within itself the steps necessary to reverse that position and to replace and recoin the silver.

The arrangement proposed is purely a temporary arrangement, and the pressing needs of the United States require, in my opinion, its prompt enactment into law.

Sections 5, 6, 7, and 8 seem to me the best way of dealing with the contraction of the circulating medium which would otherwise be brought about through the cancellation of silver certificates. This is accomplished by authorizing an issue of Federal reserve bank notes in small denominations in order to fill the void occasioned by the retirement of silver certificates and provides for the prompt retirement of those Federal reserve bank notes as silver certificates are from time to time reissued. There may well be differences of opinion as to the best method of counteracting such contraction. If no method of meeting the contraction be provided, the contraction will be automatically relieved through the issue of legal-tender notes in denominations of ones and twos, Federal reserve notes taking the place of the legal-tender notes. This would be perhaps the easiest way of meeting the situation were it not for the fact that Federal reserve notes are now secured by gold reserve of over 60 per cent, and the issue of additional Federal reserve notes without a corresponding addition to the gold reserve would reduce the percentage of reserve. Federal reserve bank notes, on the other hand, require a reserve of but 5 per cent; and, as there is absolutely no reason why a larger reserve for Federal reserve bank notes should be provided, it seems to me unwise to reduce the percentage of reserve under Federal reserve notes. My reason for stating that the Federal reserve bank notes, the issue of which is contemplated under the bill, require no greater reserve than 5 per cent is that those notes in small denominations will merely take the place in the pockets of the people of the silver certificates now carried by them and are thus extremely unlikely to be presented for redemption. If, and to the extent that they are presented for redemption, it will be a demonstration that these notes are not needed in the circulation, and the means for their prompt retirement is furnished by the deposit as security for these Federal reserve bank notes of short-time certificates of indebtedness or the one-year conversion notes of the United States. Whenever, therefore, these Federal reserve bank notes are presented for redemption it will only be necessary to let the maturing obligations held against them run off. The popular and well-founded feeling against a bond-secured currency, therefore, does not apply to the present issue, because (1) the issue is strictly temporary in its nature, (2) the security behind the issue automatically provides for the redemption of the issue, (3) no artificial value is given to any long-time bonds by the circulation privilege, and no vested interest is created in the circulation privilege, which, if created, it might prove burdensome for the Government or the banks to abate.

If the method suggested for dealing with the replacement of the silver certificates that may be retired does not commend itself to you as the best manner of meeting the situation, I should be glad to discuss any modifications that may be thought advisable.

Cordially, yours, W. G. MCADOO.

LOYAL APPEAL TO GERMAN-AMERICAN POPULATION.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I read an article the other day criticizing the literature that had been sent out to the country especially designed to influence the German-American population in this country. The general criticism that was urged was that the articles were written for highbrows rather than for the common people; that the ordinary reader could not understand them clearly.

I have here an article which was published in a North Dakota paper. It is an article written by a German who was born in Prussia, and is written to his German-American associates in the United States. It is written in simple and clear language, telling them why they should be patriotic Americans. I think it would do more good if articles of this kind could be freely distributed among our German-American people than does all the stuff which we have sent out concerning how this war originated. I am going to ask, in order that the article may be read by a reasonably fair number of the American people, that it may be read into the RECORD at this time by the Secretary. I hope there will be no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Valley City Times-Record.]

FRED BEIER, BORN IN PRUSSIA, WRITES STIRRING WORDS TO ALL HIS BROTHER GERMANS—HIGHLY RESPECTED GERMAN CITIZEN OF CARRINGTON IS WELL AWARE WHY HE LEFT KAISER'S KINGDOM—READ THIS LOYAL MAN'S APPEAL, ALL OF YOU.

To all people of German blood who live in this State or elsewhere in the United States, whether you are citizens or have intended to become such, I have a few words to say about what our duty is in this war.

There is much written and said these days about the Germans in America. Some of the things said about us are kind; some of them unkind. Many things are said that are unkind because we are not understood and we are not making the effort we should to show that there is no reason for people to believe as they do.

I feel that it is my duty to say a few words to the Germans for two reasons. One is, because I am a German, born in West Prussia in 1860, and lived there till I was 21 years old, so I know something about the Fatherland. The other is because I am now a citizen of the United States and have not forgotten my oath of allegiance which I swore as soon after coming here as I could get my papers. Also I see what my duty as a citizen is and want to do it as far as I am able.

One of the first questions I am often asked by people, "Why did you leave Germany?" Well, that is not hard to answer. My father was a poor man with a family of nine children. He owned only 7 acres of land. It was hard to make a living for us all, and there was no chance for me to get any part of it when I was grown up. It was not like in this country, where nearly every farmer can spare 160 acres to start his boy out with if he wants to farm. If I stayed over there and hired out as a laboring man the best wages I could earn as a common laborer was 50 cents a day. As a skilled mechanic, the best wages I could earn would be $1 a day.

The most thrifty man who worked as a common laborer could not save but about $20 in one year, and think what a long time it would take to get enough together to buy even a few acres of land when it cost from $100 to $200 per acre.

Besides, it cost more to live there, since, though the land produced well, there were extra heavy taxes over what we pay here. There was the military tax and there was the royal tax that was for the benefit of the royal family. These taxes amounted to about $20 per acre over the regular taxes such as we pay here, or as much as plenty of land can be bought for in this country.

Over in Germany there was no free homestead land like we have and which has been the start in the prosperity which many Germans now in this country enjoy. There was no land to be had only at a high price, and the poor man had no chance for getting ahead in the world.

Besides, if I had stayed in Germany I would have had to take three years of military training, and after that give about two months of each year to military work and be subject to call for active service at any time. This would have continued true until I was 45 years old, and after that I would have had to join the land reserve or home guard, as it is known here.

The only thing I could get over there that amounted to anything was a good common-school education, but there were no free higher schools and no chance for a poor fellow to better himself.

We Germans often heard and talked of America, and many who could get away were anxious to come to a land that we heard so much about, with its free lands, free schools, and freedom of all kinds that we did not enjoy there.

I was one of those who emigrated to the United States, and I have never been sorry that I did so. Instead of being sorry I am glad I came and I am proud to let it be known that I am as true an American citizen as I know how to be. Why shouldn't I be glad to be? What had Germany to offer me alongside of what America offers? I am not the biggest man in this country, far from it, but I am an independent American citizen. As long as I am honest and attend to my business I am the equal of every man here. I don't have to take off my hat to any man unless I want to, and the men in this country who are big meet me on an equal footing.

Instead of being a poor laborer in Germany I am the manager of a good, sound business institution here, and myself and my family are happy and reasonably prosperous. The other business men, no matter what their nationality or their line of business, treat me with respect and as an equal, and my family enjoy the same social advantages that theirs do.

When I look around me and see what a lot of our German people there are in this country who are worth many times what they would have been worth if they had stayed in Germany, and I think about these free homesteads that were given them and of the free schools and the right we have to vote and be part of the Government, and when I think of all the freedom we have here that we didn't have there, and when I read the papers and see what is going on over there now and what I would have had to take part in if I was over there and not here, I ask my brother and sister Germans living here to consider all of this, and if you haven't decided fully to stand by America as a true citizen should, that you do so now and forever.

Our plain duty lies in supporting this Government that is giving us homes and protecting us and our families. We must do this not only by words but by actions as well. We ought not be German at heart and American on the outside. We must not secretly rejoice when Germany wins a battle. We must not stand with one foot on each side of the line. We must get clear over on the American side and stay there. We should be glad we are free Americans. No one will blame us for being sorry for the stain that has been put on honest German blood by the Prussian power, but ours won't be honest blood unless we back up our oath of allegiance by our sympathy and love for our adopted country. If we won't be honest about it, then we should go back and never let it be said that German blood is two-faced.

We know that Germany is fighting for conquest. We know that America stood out as long as it could before going to war. We know that Americans have always fought for liberty for all the people, and when we read how the United States is to-day fighting and spending large sums of money for the little down-trodden nations that they, too, may be free and independent, just as we are, who wants to go back?

Before the war our German citizens here were spoken of with pride. We have been thrifty; we have been honest. We have worked hard and prospered. If we are loyal Americans we can still hold up our heads, and people will still respect us. So let us stand up for this Government. It is now our Government. If it needs our time and money we must give just as other citizens give, and maybe more, because we know better than others do what this free country really means to the common people.

Don't let us kick about high prices and because everything isn't done just as we want to see it done. The Government is doing its best. We have loved peace over here so much that it takes a long time to prepare for war. If we save our money and lose this war what do we gain?

We mustn't be selfish. Our boys are at the front with those boys from here of different blood. They are brothers in one cause. We must back them up, and though it hurts because some of us are on the other side, we must be fair and keep the German name on this side of the water free from the stain of guilt.

When some one argues that if we side in with America we are fighting our own blood let us tell them that fighting against its own blood is what makes America the land of the free to-day. Didn't the first settlers in the New England States fight their own blood when in the Revolutionary War they whipped England? And they whipped her because on this side they fought for freedom. When this country went through the Civil War did not brotner fight brother and father fight son? And wasn't it freedom and liberty they fought for then? And can't we now see that their fight was a good fight and that right won?

If the freedom which we now enjoy has been bought with the blood of thousands of liberty-loving men and years of strife are we who come here and share it without one cent of cost to us going to fight against it now when it needs us? If we do we are surely traitors and never again can we claim to be honest men and women.—Frederick Beier, sr.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire simply to say that that article, I believe, reflects the honest patriotic sentiment of the vast number of German-American citizens in my State.

"KNOW YOUR ENEMY."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, my attention has recently been called to a pamphlet entitled "Know Your Enemy." It is prepared by Mr. Elmer E. Rittenhouse, of the Equitable Assurance Society of New York, and has been very highly commended by the Sons of the Revolution. Its purpose is to convict Germany from the mouths of her own writers, soldiers, and philosophers of inflicting this war upon mankind for the purpose of universal dominion. It appeals to me as one of the best documents that has been called to my observation—short and to the point—for general circulation in order to neutralize the propaganda which is being made in this country by German sympathizers. I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Printing, that that committee may report it back and have it printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On April 16, 1918:

S. 3863. An act to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases; and

S. 4102. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, to construct a bridge across the Clark Fork River in Bonner County, Idaho.

On April 17, 1918:

S. 3528. An act to suspend for the period of the present war sections 45, 46, and 56 of an act entitled "An act making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes.

HOUSING OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10265) to authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10265) to authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I inquire what was the request concerning that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been laid before the Senate on motion of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has it just been reported?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was reported yesterday; it is on the calendar and, on motion, has been taken up by the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not aware that it had gone to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report was made on yesterday.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the housing bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. SWANSON. The bill was reported yesterday, was printed as reported, and all Senators who desired were given copies of it. At the same time I gave notice that I would call it up to-day. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment, the amendments reported by the committee to be first considered, and then that it be open to general amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. It is only a short bill.

Mr. SWANSON. It is a very short bill.

Mr. NELSON. What is the request of the Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with——

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand, this is not a lengthy bill, and I ask that it be first read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor, for the purpose of providing housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for such industrial workers as are engaged in arsenal and navy yards of the United States and in industries connected with and essential to the national defense, and their families, and employees of the United States whose duties require them to reside in the District of Columbia, and whose services are essential to war needs, and their families, only during the continuation of the existing war, is hereby authorized and empowered, within the limits of the amounts herein authorized—

(a) To purchase, acquire by lease, construct, requisition, or acquire by condemnation or otherwise such houses, buildings, furnishings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities and parts thereof as he may determine to be necessary for the proper conduct of the existing war.

(b) To purchase, lease, requisition, or acquire by condemnation or otherwise any improved or unimproved land, or any right, title, or interest therein on which such houses, buildings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, and parts thereof, have been or may be constructed.

(c) To equip, manage, maintain, alter, rent, lease, exchange, sell, and convey such lands, or any right, title, or interest therein, houses, buildings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, parts thereof, and equipment upon such terms and conditions as he may determine: Provided That no sale and conveyance shall be made hereunder on credit without reserving a first lien on such property for the unpaid purchase money.

(d) To aid in providing, equipping, managing, and maintaining houses, buildings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities by loan or otherwise to such person or persons and upon such terms and conditions as he may determine.

(e) To take possession of, alter, repair, improve, and suitably arrange for living purposes to be used under the terms of this act what is commonly known as the "Maltby Building," as well as all other houses on square 633, owned by the United States, together with any other houses in the District of Columbia owned by the Government and not now occupied. The Secretary of Labor shall, in the construction of buildings in the District of Columbia, make use of any lands owned by the Government of the United States deemed by him to be suitable for the purpose and which have not heretofore been dedicated by act of Congress for specific buildings.

The Secretary of Labor may exercise any power or discretion herein granted, and may enter into any arrangement or contract incidental thereto, through such agency or agencies as he may create or designate: Provided, That houses erected by the Government under the authority of this act shall be of only a temporary character whenever it is practicable: Provided further, That whenever it is practicable to use any part of the office or field force of the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department in or about any of the work contemplated by this act, the Secretary of Labor shall do so: Provided further, That the powers herein authorized shall not be exercised in the housing of Government employees in the District of Columbia except upon detailed estimates and appropriations for such purpose.

SEC. 2. That whenever the Secretary of Labor shall purchase, lease, requisition, or acquire by condemnation or otherwise such land or right, title, or interest therein, or such houses, buildings, furnishings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, and parts thereof, he shall make just compensation therefor, to be determined by him, and if the amount thereof so determined is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to such 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

SEC. 3. That upon the requisition of or the filing of a petition for the condemnation hereunder of such land, or any right, title, or interest therein, or such houses, buildings, furnishings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, and parts thereof, immediate possession thereof may be taken to the extent of the interest to be acquired and the same may be occupied and used, and the provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, providing that no public money shall be expended upon such land until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land is located has been given, shall be, and the same are hereby, suspended as to all real estate acquired hereunder.

SEC. 4. That the word "person" used herein shall include any person, trustee, firm, or corporation.

SEC. 5. That the power and authority granted herein shall cease with the termination of the present war, except the power and authority to care for and rent such property as remains undisposed of and to conclude and execute contracts for the sale of property made during the war.

SEC. 6. That at the beginning of each session of Congress the Secretary of Labor shall make to Congress a full and detailed report covering all of the transactions of his department with relation to the subject matter of this act, describing each parcel of land purchased, leased, or otherwise acquired, the improvements made thereon, together with the amount of money spent in connection therewith and the disposition of the same; descriptions of all parcels of property sold, to whom, the terms of sale, and the status of the title at the time of the making of such report; description of each piece of property purchased under the terms of this act and still owned by the Government and the estimated value; a list showing the names of all persons who have been employed in any capacity to aid in carrying out the provisions of this act, the service rendered by each and the amount of compensation, including fees, commissions, allowances, and traveling expenses paid to each, and a full, detailed, itemized statement showing each and every transaction of the department in the execution of the trust herein created, and immediately after the declaration of peace in the existing war the Secretary of Labor shall make a final report to Congress covering in detail all the operations and transactions of his department, under and by virtue of the terms of this act.

SEC. 7. That no work to be done or contract to be made under or by authority of any provision of this act shall be done or made on or under a percentage or cost-plus percentage basis, nor shall any contract be let until at least three responsible competing contractors shall have been notified and considered in connection with such contract.

SEC. 8. That for carrying out the provisions of this act and for the administration thereof the sum of $60,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized: Provided, That $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the amount hereby authorized shall be used to build or acquire, as herein provided, housing accommodations within the District of Columbia.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of Senators to this bill. It is an illustration of how we are duplicating things. Here you are mounting a new appropriation upon the $50,000,000 appropriation that we made by the act of March 1 last. At that time we passed a bill entitled "An act to authorize and empower the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to purchase, lease, requisition, or otherwise acquire, and to sell or otherwise dispose of improved or unimproved land, houses, buildings, and for other purposes." I read paragraph (a) from that act to illustrate the scope of the law:

To purchase, lease, requisition, including the requisition of the temporary use of, or acquire by condemnation or otherwise any improved or unimproved land or any interest therein suitable for the construction thereon of houses for the use of employees and the families of employees of shipyards in which ships are being constructed for the United States.

We appropriated $50,000,000 by that act of March 1, and put it in the control of this corporation. Now, by this bill you appropriate $60,000,000. You set aside $10,000,000 for the District of Columbia, leaving $50,000,000 to be disbursed and expended by the Department of Labor; and this bill provides that the money shall be expended in building housing facilities in connection with arsenals and navy yards. We have already covered navy yards by the appropriation we made by the act of March 1. That act provides that the Emergency Fleet Corporation may build houses and provide housing facilities in shipyards in which ships are being constructed for the United States; so that under that act they have authority to build houses and acquire property for housing facilities in all yards of this country in which ships are being built for the Government, whether for merchant purposes or for naval purposes.

The situation, then, is this: By the act of March 1 last we appropriated $50,000,000 for this purpose, and now you mount it with another appropriation of $50,000,000, leaving out the District of Columbia, for practically a part of the same purposes. It seems to me that this is subject to two criticisms. First, the two together amount to a most extravagant appropriation. In the next place, it leads to a conflict of authority. In the one case you have the work done under the Emergency Fleet Corporation, which is an appendage of the Shipping Board, and in the other case you have it done, under this bill, by the Department of Labor. This seems to me to be a gross case of what I call duplication of work, such as we see occurring in the executive departments; and the aggregate of the whole thing is $110,000,000, taking the $50,000,000 that we appropriated by the act of March 1 and the $60,000,000 appropriated by this bill.

I do not care to take up the time of the Senate further on this matter. I simply call it to the attention of the Senators in the majority here who have charge of this legislation, and ask them whether they think this legislation, in the form in which it comes, and in the amount in which it comes, is proper under the circumstances and under the conditions that prevail in this country now?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota is entirely mistaken as to the two bills. The Shipping Board asked that $50,000,000 out of the $800,000,000 appropriated for the construction of ships should be permitted to be used for housing where these merchant ships were being constructed; and the bill to which the Senator refers authorized them to spend $50,000,000 of that amount for housing in connection with the construction of merchant ships entirely, which they did not have the authority before that time to do.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no.

Mr. SWANSON. That bill is limited to ships that are being constructed for the Government. None of the money can be spent at arsenals, none of it can be spent at these industrial plants where they are making powder or guns, and none of it can be spent at the navy yards. The navy yards are not constructing any merchant ships that I know of. They contemplated at first having an additional appropriation of $110,000,000; but the Shipping Board felt that it could not wait, on account of the conditions at the shipyards where the merchant ships were being constructed, so it asked the privilege of using $50,000,000 of the money heretofore appropriated to it for that purpose, and I understand that the authority was given to the Shipping Board to use that money for that purpose.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. This bill is not confined to arsenals and navy yards.

Mr. SWANSON. No; I say this bill is confined——

Mr. LODGE. One moment; let me put my question. It covers industries connected with and essential to the national defense. That covers shipyards, of course, where merchant vessels are being built; and under this bill plans are now made, and properly made, to construct buildings for yards where only merchant ships are being built.

Mr. SWANSON. I think the Senator is mistaken, to this extent—that the $50,000,000 that has been set aside out of that fund will be used for housing where merchant ships are being constructed. It is contemplated that this shall be used for arsenals, for navy yards, and for other industrial plants where munitions of war and war materials are under contract and being constructed.

Mr. LODGE. That is what the Senator says, but it is not what the bill says.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, of course some of it could be used, if it were not necessary elsewhere, at places where shipping was being constructed, because that is an industry that is carried on for war purposes, and is so considered; but that is not the purpose of it.

As I was explaining, it was intended at first to have one bill of $110,000,000 for housing purposes. I wish to say in this connection that Great Britain has spent $700,000,000 for this identical purpose. It was absolutely necessary to furnish munitions of war and to care for the employees at these great munition plants.

When the bill was being considered as one proposition, the Shipping Board, anxious to have it hurried on account of the conditions in connection with the construction of merchant ships, had it segregated, and permitted $50,000,000 of their money to be designated for that purpose. Now, this bill defines what it shall be used for:

That the Secretary of Labor, under the direction of the President of the United States, for the purpose of providing housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for such industrial workers as are engaged in arsenal and navy yards of the United States and in industries connected with and essential to the national defense, and their families, and also employees of the United States whose duties require them to reside in the District of Columbia, and whose services are essential to war needs, and their families, only during the continuation of the existing war, is hereby authorized and empowered, within the limits of the amounts herein authorized—

And so forth. Now, the estimates were made, and if what is needed is furnished it will take $200,000,000 to properly house the employees at these great industrial plants that are now engaged in munition work.

I should like to say that the attention of Congress and of the War Council was first called to this matter by a survey made by the Secretary of Labor, in which he ascertained that they could not get enough employees at these various plants; that when the employees were there they frequently left, and the trouble was the need of houses. This report was made to the War Council. The War Council then investigated the matter and had a survey made. I think the President allotted $60,000 of the money Congress had given him for a survey to be made at these various industrial plants, navy yards, arsenals, the Bethlehem Steel Co., and other places where various war industries were being carried on and war materials were being produced. After this report was made it was taken up by the War Council, it was taken up in a full Cabinet meeting, and by universal consent of all those to whom the matter had been presented it was urged as being so important that these bills were sought to be passed at the earliest possible date.

In the meantime the Shipping Board was so anxious to have this work done that a separate bill was introduced for that purpose, which it was thought would be amply sufficient to take care of housing at the places where these merchant ships are being constructed. They had a survey and an investigation made of all the places where application has been made as to the necessity for the houses, the conditions, the turnover of labor, and the importance of houses being furnished there at the earliest practicable moment. This survey has been thoroughly made. Until I looked into the matter I did not know to what extent they had gone into it in detail. They have thoroughly investigated and ascertained the conditions at each one of these different plants. There are about 15 or 16 plants, including navy yards, where this is absolutely necessary in order for this war work to proceed.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I call his attention to the language on page 1, line 6:

Engaged in arsenal and navy yards of the United States and in industries connected with and essential to the national defense.

It covers everything. The Department of Labor would overlap and cover the same ground that the Shipping Board was meant to cover under the law.

Mr. SWANSON. They could possibly do that. It would not be wise to preclude them from doing that. It is limited entirely to war industries, where constructions have been made for war industries and the production of munitions of war.

Mr. LODGE. On that precise point I do not quarrel with the amount and I recognize the need; but there is no question whatever that there is a duplication here. The law which the Senator from Minnesota has read says, however, for the use of families and employees of families of shipyards in which ships are being constructed by the United States. In my State there is a large permanent yard at Fore River, where they are building great numbers of destroyers and other vessels. The United States has also a yard there known as the Victory Yard, where they are building merchant ships. There are some 15,000 or 16,000 workmen employed there. The housing is imperative. They are perfectly covered by the existing law. They are not only covered by it, but if the Senator will examine the survey he will find they are covered by this bill. There is a clear duplication. I would not call attention to the duplication except that so many Senators have been in such an agony of apprehension for fear we had too many auditors and thought all the civil departments of the Government ought to be immediately overhauled in the midst of war in order that we may effect consolidation here and there where there is duplication. So we are creating another duplication. That is the only point. It seems to me that it would be well to bring it all under one head.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator wish to offer an amendment that this money shall not be used for housing employees at shipyards?

Mr. LODGE. No; I think that is very wise; but if we have the Emergency Corporation or the Shipping Board building houses, where we have a carefully constructed commission under the Secretary of Labor to do the same thing, I much prefer that it should be under the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, they are intended to be under the same head, the Secretary of Labor, but the Shipping Board made a survey and it was very urgent and we did not know how long it would delay the Shipping Board. They simply took out of the appropriated amount $50,000,000 of money heretofore appropriated for this purpose, which the bill authorizes them to do. The bill as originally drafted provided for $110,000,000.

Mr. LODGE. Does not the Senator think it would conduce to better administration to turn over that help to the Shipping Board under that special appropriation to this commission and the Secretary of Labor and have one man do it all?

Mr. SWANSON. I would not think at this time it would be wise to do so, because the Shipping Board have proceeded, and I will say that they have an executive committee in contemplation. One member of the Shipping Board will be one of the administrative board under this bill.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad to see that hostility to duplication is subject to variation and modification.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand it, the Shipping Board was represented, as well as the Navy and the Army at the hearings, and there was a full understanding as to the expenditure.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand the administration of the law is to be in the hands of five men, one representing the Army, one representing the Navy, one representing the Shipping Board, an attorney, and a practical builder. They constitute the administrative board of five under the Secretary of Labor. One hundred and ten million dollars are absolutely needed. All the evidence shows that we could produce 25 to 50 per cent more ships, munitions, and the various products of war if we had housing for the employees.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I always like to make an amendment to a bill when it is as simple as the one I am going to suggest. Does not the Senator think that the word "arsenal," in line 1, page 6, ought to be "arsenals"?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; that is a typographical error.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that that be changed to "arsenals."

Mr. LODGE. Making it plural instead of singular.

Mr. GALLINGER. Making it plural.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The correction will be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have had little time to examine this bill. It is a most extraordinary and revolutionary bill. I suppose if the citizens are turned out of their homes they will find a field or woods where they will be unmolested, but there will not be much less left for them.

Mr. LODGE. They may have tents.

Mr. GALLINGER. They may have tents, possibly. I am not so sure as to that. However, I suppose we have got to meet it and that the bill will pass in some form, but it ought to be scanned pretty carefully.

I will ask the Senator from Virginia why, on pages 2 and 3, the words "local transportation, and other community facilities" are stricken out in several places, but on page 1 that language is left in as it is in the title?

Mr. SWANSON. The words "local transportation and other community facilities" ought to be stricken out in all parts of the bill. It is a mistake in the print.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not stricken out on page 1.

Mr. SWANSON. The amendment will be moved, when the time comes, to strike out those words where they occur in the bill and in the title.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am glad to know that the words will be stricken out. I will ask the Senator from Virginia if this is a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. SWANSON. It is a unanimous report. There were only seven of the members present when the vote was taken. If the others had been there, I understand, they would have favored the bill. Also, the bill passed the House of Representatives with only 17 votes against it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator as to the word "furnishings," on line 6, page 2. I know the committee has undertaken to qualify the powers to take the furnishings in a man's home by an amendment which they have added to the bill at the close of page 2. I suppose "furnishings" would include a man's library, would they not?

Mr. SWANSON. The word would include pictures, library, everything in the house.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the Senator think the word "furnishings" ought to be eliminated from the bill?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not, because in some places they expect to take large clubhouses and large establishments that are near the munition plants, and they will want the furniture, too. If it can be bought it will be used. In the case of clubs and apartment houses the Government takes a building, and it would be a very great hardship to people not to have an opportunity to sell the furnishings at a reasonable price to the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. The trouble is, while that may be true as to public buildings—clubhouses, for instance, or hotels—it applies to private residences as well.

Mr. SWANSON. Oh, no; no furniture in a private residence can be taken except by contract. It can not be condemned or commandeered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observe that that attempt is made by an amendment, but why not say "furnishings of clubhouses or hotels" if you are going to do that, and not alarm the people who have some paintings that they very greatly value, perhaps a single book, when they would rather give up their house than give up the book.

Mr. SWANSON. If it is a private residence it can only be disposed of by contract, by agreement.

Mr. GALLINGER. What does the Senator mean by contract?

Mr. SWANSON. I mean that the owner must agree to sell it; that the Government can not condemn it, can not requisition it, can not take it unless by private sale. That is the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. And if the owner objected to entering into a contract, would that prevent its disposal to the Government?

Mr. SWANSON. That would prevent it in all private dwellings.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that is so, of course, it is better than I thought it was, but——

Mr. BORAH. When the Senator says "private dwellings" he means to include apartment houses? I want to protect those people.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not mean private dwellings alone. You may amend the bill in every conceivable way and trouble might arise just the same, and if you are going to amend it to cover every conceivable point there is no use to pass it. If you say here that the Government can not condemn a private house except by long process in a court, it gives an opportunity to some extent to peope in a community of three or four thousand people to have a delay of four or five months, and gives an opportunity for one person to hold the Government up and to command a certain price.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator by what process has the Government taken possession of some apartment houses in this city?

Mr. SWANSON. Those apartment houses were condemned for Army purposes, not for the uses of people. All that I know is that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have authority for governmental purposes to condemn property for the Army and Navy for offices, but they have no power to put one individual in there for housing purposes. This measure extends the opportunity so that people who work for the Government may be housed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do I understand that there is a statute inhibiting the Government from taking buildings except for office purposes? Is there a law to that effect?

Mr. SWANSON. I know of none. I say that they have been condemned for office purposes entirely. I do not know of any law that authorizes the condemnation for the private occupancy of any Government agency or employee.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has seemed to me that the exercise of the power as it has been used already has been rather harsh where people have been dispossessed of their homes. If there is no statute for it, I think it would hardly be defensible.

Mr. SWANSON. There is a statute to condemn them for office purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I asked the Senator, and he said he did not know that there was.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator misunderstood me. I said I know of no law except the power of the Army and Navy to condemn houses for offices for war purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I understand the reference of the Senator. He misunderstood my question.

Mr. SWANSON. I say I know of no law which authorizes them to condemn any house, any apartment, to be occupied by any individual.

Mr. GALLINGER. I asked him specifically if there was a law and he said there was not. But the Senator misunderstood my question, so we will let that go.

Mr. President, I am not going to debate this bill, and I am not going to undertake to prevent its speedy consideration. It strikes me at first like being another step in the direction of establishing what we have been condemning and talking about as being the worst possible thing that can come to a nation, a species of autocracy that will end ultimately if this war continues for a couple of years in a private citizen having nothing that he can call his own if the Government wants it. It may be desirable that the war is to be won in that way, it may be necessary, but it does not exactly comport with my ideas. As I look at the question at the present time, we ought to appropriate money to build houses for the workers in the arsenals and in the shipbuilding plants; I would quite agree to that; but as to invading the homes of the people and dispossessing them and taking over their property, I have not yet been convinced that the necessity exists.

In fact, that has been already done to some extent. There have been people dispossessed of their homes in Washington. I do not know by what process it has been done. There have some things been done that I think have been very wrong, by which poor people have been compelled to leave their homes and other people have occupied their homes, but that probably was done without authority of law. However, it has been done to my knowledge.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to three or four matters in the bill upon which I should like to have his opinion. On page 2, line 11, the word "otherwise" occurs. In the opinion of the Senator, would that permit the Government to accept land as a gift?

Mr. SWANSON. It would. It was put in there mostly for that purpose. The word "otherwise" was eliminated by the committee, but it was reconsidered and restored.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like the Senator to turn to section 5, page 6, line 3. As I read that section, when the war ceases the power exercised under the provisions of this bill will not be inforced except to rent property. It seems to me that there would not be any power if that section becomes a law to sell any of this property.

Mr. SWANSON. I think not.

Mr. WEEKS. It seems to me that after the word "and" in line 3, page 6, the words "sell or" should be added. I do not suppose it is the purpose of the committee to continue to operate the property if it can be sold.

Mr. SWANSON. There can be no objection to inserting the words "sell or" before the word "rent."

Mr. WEEKS. Then I move that the words "sell or" be added after the word "and," in line 3, page 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. I call attention to page 5, line 17. Under the law no public money can be expended for the purchase of real estate until the title has been approved by a law officer of the Government. Apparently this would abrogate that provision of the law. I ask the Senator if he thinks it is judicious policy to provide for the purchase of real estate and to pay for it before the title has been examined.

Mr. SWANSON. I would say to the Senator that ordinarily I would not, and I would not in this case except that speed is the whole essence of this relief. A delay of one or two years or even six months would be a vital matter. If we can not get these houses quickly to increase the output of war munitions, there is no use in passing the bill. I would not consider it for one minute, except in view of the necessity for quick action. It would take a long time to examine all the titles. They will be examined in a general way I have no doubt. I have known where public buildings have been delayed for two or three years in order to perfect a title. They would not be able to construct these buildings immediately near the munition plants if that were required.

Mr. WEEKS. I think I am as urgent and insistent that housing facilities shall be provided as can be the Senator from Virginia, but it does seem to me that it is an unwise public policy to pay out public money for the purchase of real estate before an examination of the title has been made. Everyone knows that on account of conditions resulting from the war the legal profession is nearer idle than it has ever been. It seems to me there would be no difficulty in getting competent real estate lawyers to examine the titles from time to time. While I am not going to make a motion to strike out the clause, it does seem to me an unwise public policy to enter into.

Mr. SWANSON. I have had to bring in relief bills here where public buildings were authorized to be constructed and the Attorney General in such cases could not get a complete title. Yet it was a reasonable title upon which to proceed to erect a public building. If you could not spend a cent of this money until the Attorney General gives an opinion that the title is absolutely correct, and it has to be corrected by a lawsuit in a court, there would be cases where you would not get the title for such a building until after the war is over, because the present law requires that the Attorney General must give a certificate that you have an absolute title before you can proceed to put any public building on the land. I suppose they will act with reasonable care and not throw this money away; but unless you construct these buildings hurriedly and quickly and get these munitions and ships there is no use of passing the bill. It is not intended to be any permanent policy.

Mr. WEEKS. I am not going to make a motion to strike out that part of the section, but I should vote for it if the motion were made. I think, as I said before, it is unwise to proceed in this way, however much we may desire haste.

I want to direct the Senator's attention to section 7. If I understand that section, the only method that can be followed is to construct these houses by contract.

Mr. SWANSON. That is, if the amount to be expended exceeds $50,000.

Mr. WEEKS. If it exceeds $50,000. Mr. President, the congestion relating to labor in this country surrounds the very places where we want to build these houses. There is no difficulty about labor in the large percentage of the cities of the United States. I saw a statement a day or two ago coming from the Department of Labor, which is relatively correct, that, taking 30 of the leading cities of the country, there is a surplus of labor in 26 of them and a congestion in but 4, and those 4 are the cities near which this unusual construction is going on.

To take a specific case, and that located in the city of Quincy, and near the city of Boston, there are some 30,000 men employed in a locality there which has not a radius of more than 4 miles. The Fore River Shipbuilding plant is located there, as is also the Victory plant, which has recently been constructed by the Navy Department, and is now in operation; also, a very large warehouse is about to be constructed; the contracts are out for it, costing a total amount of some $20,000,000. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts is building a large dock there, for which a considerable appropriation has been made. The construction is under way.

Now, what I want to call the Senator's attention to is that in all of these operations men not only work eight hours a day, but they work extra time and get extra pay for the extra time; in some cases they work as many as 12 hours a day, getting 50 per cent more for the extra hours than they otherwise would, or time and a half. They also work on Sundays, getting extra time or extra pay; they work on Saturday afternoons, getting extra pay. If a man takes a contract to erect houses there he can not work these men more than eight hours a day. The result will be that he is not going to be able to get his labor, and putting this provision in the bill will prevent exactly what the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and all the rest of us desire, which is expedition in this construction.

My judgment is that it is extremely unwise to provide against entering into this construction under the percentage basis. For example, if $100,000 is to be expended, $5,000 or $6,000 or $7,000 would be a fair percentage to pay the contractor, not providing for a cost-plus basis—and I have as much prejudice against that as anyone—but providing for a fixed compensation for the construction and enabling the contractors to go on under those conditions and erect the buildings just as other work is being conducted in the neighborhood.

I warn the Senator from Virginia that if this provision prevails in its present shape, in my judgment, there is going to be a very great and deplorable delay in the construction of these houses.

Mr. SWANSON. I will say to the Senator that those who administer——

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, before I take my seat, I move to strike out section 7.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. Those who will administer this law are satisfied with what the other House provided in section 7. They said it would not delay construction at all, as I understand, if a cost-plus percentage basis were prohibited and notice were given to three responsible bidders. I thought that was sufficient, but those who are to administer the law state that it will not delay construction. The other members of the committee took the same view. I voted otherwise, and reserved the right to differ, but the members of the committee insisted that this provision should go into the bill:

> Nor contract for more than $50,000 shall be let except to the lowest responsible bidder after due notice is given, the bids to be opened in the presence of such bidders, the Government reserving the right to reject any and all bids.

I am satisfied that provision will delay speed in the construction of the buildings. The amendment was put in in the committee, each member of the committee reserving the right to vote in the Senate as he saw fit. I think the Senator from Massachusetts has shown that speed will not be made if all contracts have to be let to bidders as provided in the amendment, but the committee was very insistent on that being done, and the proposition was carried by a majority vote of the committee, the bill being reported with the recommendation of the committee that this provision continue as it is. I have no objection to eliminating section 7, as I believe that speed is very important, and I think the House provision would protect the Government from any injustice or misappropriation of funds. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is correct, that the amendment put on by the committee would greatly delay the work of construction.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I am sorry that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] concurs in his view. I think the committee amendment to section 7 will do as much as anything else in the bill to safeguard the measure from a waste of public funds. We have had over and over again upon this floor the statement made that these contracts for the building of cantonments and other structures throughout the country resulted in reckless extravagance, and if I am to judge from my own experience—and, Mr. President, this happens to be in my own line of business—I know that men can be obtained to perform these contracts and that the work can be done speedily under the provision which has been added to section 7. In every building trade in the country thousands of men are walking the streets idle, except only the carpenter trade.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CALDER. I do.

Mr. NELSON. Does not the Senator think that the law on the statute books prohibiting more than eight hours' labor in Government work will prove an embarrassment and a restriction? Ought not the provision of the law, if we desire to expedite the work, be removed as to those who take these contracts, and provision made that they should not be limited by the eight-hour law?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I think under the eight-hour law, to which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] refers, where there is an emergency that law can be waived, and that it has been waived. I think as to work in the navy yards the eight-hour law is permitted to be waived in an emergency.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator from Virginia refers to waiving the eight-hour law. The eight-hour law is waived in Government work, but it is only waived where the men receive additional compensation because of their working more than eight hours per day. I think that eight hours a day is long enough for any workman to labor, in ordinary times, but I would agree with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that in these war times men should be permitted to work longer than eight hours.

Mr. LODGE. I want to ask the Senator from New York a question, merely for information. What is there to prevent a contractor who has a contract in the ordinary way as the lowest bidder from working his men over eight hours' time and paying for time and a half for their working on Saturdays and Sundays, as my colleague [Mr. WEEKS] has suggested?

Mr. CALDER. There is nothing to prevent him from doing it.

Mr. LODGE. Then he is at no disadvantage as compared with the Government contractor, is he?

Mr. CALDER. I can not see that he is.

Mr. President, when interrupted I was saying that in every trade in connection with the building industry there are plenty of men to be had to-day, except possibly carpenters. When I visit New York, I am told by men in the bricklaying trade, the plastering trade, the plumbing trade, the roofing trade, and other trades, that there are plenty of men to be had, and that many of the men engaged in these lines of activity are walking the streets unemployed. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] has made the statement that a report of the Department of Labor indicates that in 26 of 30 cities investigated there was a surplus of labor. That surplus of labor is largely in the building trades.

I would leave this provision in the bill, Mr. President, for it will assure a wide competition, and I am certain that houses will be constructed just as speedily as is necessary if we have complete and full competition in bidding for their construction.

Mr. President, I have in my hand copies of letters sent out from the Treasury Department, beginning February 5, advising the public that in these war times they should refrain from extensive building operations. I will say to the Senate the effect of these letters was almost immediately to stifle the building industry throughout the Nation. Builders felt that if they attempted to pursue their trade, their work would be discouraged; savings banks and mortgage companies immediately stopped loaning money for building operations; and I will say to the Senate that, although these letters emanating from the Treasury Department were meant to be beneficial, they had as much to do as anything else with stopping building operations throughout the country.

I can speak for New York, Mr. President, when I say that in New York City to-day there is little or no home building going on. This condition is largely caused by the fact that it costs to-day about 50 per cent more to build houses than it did two years ago, and it is also due to the difficulty the builder has in obtaining mortgage loans. Most of the men who build homes go to mortgage companies, savings banks, fire or life insurance companies and arrange to borrow 50 or 60 per cent of the cost of their project. They then sell these houses to small investors, who pay on an average 25 per cent down and the difference between the amount paid down and the first mortgage in installments, putting a second mortgage on the property.

I think one of the best things in this bill is the provision which permits money to be loaned to those engaged in building houses. I am sure that if this whole scheme were properly managed, if it were handled by men who are familiar with this sort of business, it could in many instances be arranged that the people interested in conducting the munition, shipbuilding, and other plants should take over the responsibility of providing housing facilities for their own employees, the Government wherever necessary to advance loans to them on bonds or mortgages. My own judgment is that but for the letters of the Treasury Department and but for the opinion prevalent throughout the country that the Government itself would take care of the housing problem many of the shipyards and munition plants would themselves have provided proper housing facilities for their employees. I can see no reason why a shipbuilding, a munitions, or industrial plant making millions of dollars from the Government should not take care of this very matter themselves. I am strongly of the opinion that if the Government were insistent upon their doing so, they would contribute largely toward it.

I presume this legislation will have to be enacted. I know in some parts of the country, particularly where the shipbuilding plants and great industries have grown up overnight, where there are no housing facilities for the people employed, that something must be done to house them; but, as I said a moment ago, if the Government should pursue the course of advancing the money to the shipbuilding plants and make them assume part of the responsibility, then I have no doubt in the end there would simply be a loan of the Government's credit and that there would be very little loss when the war is over and these properties are turned into cash.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, under ordinary conditions I would not question the judgment of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] on a matter relating to building, because he is a trained man in that line of business and naturally would know more about it than one who claims no particular knowledge; but in this matter I can not agree with him. It may be that workmen in the city where he lives are walking the streets, but the very reason for building houses is that we can not get a sufficient number of workmen at the plants where congestion prevails without building houses. There would not be any reason for building houses if there were plenty of labor contiguous to these plants. For that reason and because of the difficulty of transportation we are providing for the erection of houses near the plants where this unusual work is going on.

I disagree with the Senator from New York also about the provision in respect to loaning money, putting the Government in the place of building and loan associations. To my mind that is one of the worst features of the bill. Building and loan associations, for the very reason that the Senator has described, are comparatively idle; there is comparatively little building in most places, and they are not finding a ready means for expending their money for that purpose. This is entirely an emergency proposition, and the very fact that we need the houses controverts the argument which the Senator from New York has made.

What I want to prevent, Mr. President, is the provision that will allow the construction of these houses on a cost-plus percentage basis. I think there have been a great many excessive costs due to that policy, and I think we ought to prevent it in this case; but I see no reason for the prevention of the erection of these houses on a percentage basis, as I described a few moments ago, or under contract. Therefore, I think the House provision is infinitely better than the Senate committee provision, with the exception of striking out the percentage basis instead of the cost-plus percentage basis. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion which I made, and I will make another one which will carry out that idea.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). Without objection, the Senator from Massachusetts withdraws his amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I think the best way would be to proceed with the bill and amend it as we go along.

Mr. WEEKS. I shall be compelled to leave the Chamber. I do not, however, wish to break in on the routine.

Mr. SWANSON. I can not consent to the Senator's amendment, because the committee has put the provision in the bill; and, although I reserved the right to vote against it, as chairman of the committee I can not consent to its elimination.

Mr. WEEKS. Well, I will make the motion at the proper time to substitute a provision along the line I have suggested.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in behalf of this bill, as I know the great necessity for it in my own State. At Newport we have a torpedo station which is doing magnificent work, but it is not able to do the work that it should on account of the shortage of labor. That shortage is due, I think, entirely to the lack of housing facilities in Newport. I know that in January they were working on two nine-hour shifts, and that something like 400 employees were not able to work in these double shifts because they were living in Fall River and the transportation was such that they could not get back and forth. I know that the Navy Department is very anxious to increase the output of torpedoes from that station, and I feel confident that they could employ 500 additional men if they had the proper housing facilities for them.

Mr. President, the type of individual that is employed in this factory is a very high and intelligent type, and I want to take this opportunity to pay a tribute to their spirit and their sense of duty, as evidenced by the fact that after a disastrous explosion had occurred in one of the highly explosive departments of the torpedo factory, in which a number of men were killed, every single person reported for duty the next day and there was no letting up in the process of manufacture.

It seems to me that these people, who are working so faithfully for the Government and who are making sacrifices such as are involved in living away off in Fall River and coming to their work at the torpedo station, should be encouraged; and not only should they be encouraged but others should be aided in coming to the Government's assistance and working in this plant, for there is no question that the increase of the output of torpedoes is a very important matter. When this war develops more sea battles, as it will in the future, it will be most essential that our Navy shall not have to consider whether or not they can spare the torpedoes. For that reason I am entirely in favor of this bill and of increasing the facilities of the torpedo station at Newport.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the first amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, after the words "Secretary of Labor," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "under the direction of the President of the United States," so as to read:

> That the Secretary of Labor, under the direction of the President of the United States, for the purpose of providing housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for such industrial workers—

And so forth.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I want to say a word on this general legislation as covered in this bill.

We have pending before this body now a bill known as an administrative measure, sent down here by the President of the United States, as we understand, through the Postmaster General, Mr. Burleson, and by him delivered over to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and brought out of the committee. By the terms of that bill it is proposed that absolute, autocratic authority shall be vested in the President of the United States to deal with every department of this Government exactly as he pleases; to abolish the Department of Labor; to abolish the Secretary of Labor; to abolish even the War Department and the Navy Department and all the other departments of the Government. We have now, by law, authority vested in the Navy Department to acquire necessary buildings. We are constantly making appropriations for the War Department for the acquisition of necessary buildings. The Congress of the United States has never yet refused to vote a necessary amount to any department for the acquisition of any necessary buildings.

What is proposed to be done here? Instead of undertaking to coordinate your legislation, as the President asks autocratic authority to coordinate the departments of the Government and to assume all their functions himself, instead of following out some line of legislation, you bring in one administration measure, then another administration measure, and then another, all conflicting the one with the others. Congress itself apparently can not coordinate, it can not get together, on measures proposed by the administration. It can not even, in its proposed legislation, coordinate administrative legislation. You have pending now as the unfinished business the proposition to abolish all of these departments, to consolidate them, to allow the President to do exactly what he pleases—to abolish this Labor Department, as I have said, if he so desires. Then you bring in a bill authorizing the Navy Department to expend forty or fifty million dollars, or as much as is necessary, in acquiring buildings.

You make appropriations for the War Department to do the same thing, and then you bring in a general bill here authorizing the Secretary of Labor to acquire properties all over the United States; not only those necessary in connection with the arsenals or the naval work of the United States, which are specifically set forth here in this bill, but, further, you authorize the Secretary of Labor—and I stake my reputation as an attorney upon it—to declare, in his discretion, that any farmhouse in any State in this broad United States is necessary for his purposes, and to condemn or take away from the farmer that farmhouse anywhere in any State. There never was such an attempt, in my judgment, in a free country, to make absolute slaves of the citizens of that country. Where in the name of God do you propose to stop?

Why, Mr. President, to say that the Secretary of Labor will not do such-and-such a thing, that I need not be afraid of the Secretary of Labor, is to attempt to make me ridiculous in my own eyes if I would consider such a proposition for a moment. To say that he will not take the farmhouse, to say that he will not take the furniture, to say that he will not go into any district where he may desire to go, in his judgment, and do what we consider an outrageous thing, and then ask me to vote him the power to do it, is, as I say, to make me ridiculous in my own opinion if I consented to listen for a moment to a proposition of that character.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. FALL. Certainly; with great pleasure.

Mr. SWANSON. After such great zeal against this bill, which is intended to prepare this country for the national defense, the Senator seeks to leave the impression that the Secretary of Labor can seize every house in this country out of mere caprice.

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. Here is an amendment that the Senator has never read.

Mr. FALL. I think I have read all the amendments.

Mr. SWANSON (reading)—

Nor shall any occupied dwelling be taken under the powers in this act given except by contract unless the necessity thereof shall be determined by a judge of the circuit or district court of the United States exercising jurisdiction in the locality on petition setting forth the reason and necessity for such taking.

Now, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. FALL. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I will wait

Mr. FALL. I have that amendment in mind, and I intended to refer to it.

Mr. SWANSON. The object of that provision is this: It is contemplated to build, in some of these places, little towns——

Mr. FALL. The Senator can make that explanation in his own time, if he pleases.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator unless he desires.

Mr. FALL. The Senator is a lawyer, or supposed to be. I have had some little legal experience, too.

Mr. SWANSON. I have not bragged about it as much as the Senator has.

Mr. FALL. The Senator, then, knows that in a matter of this kind the Supreme Court of the United States has held that when the political power has acted the courts abide by the discretion of the political power.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator is a lawyer, he has not read the amendment which says that the Secretary of Labor can not act until the court passes on the matter. The court has to pass on it.

Mr. FALL. Oh, the Senator is quibbling.

Mr. SWANSON. No, indeed.

Mr. FALL. I am speaking of the law, which is that the Secretary of Labor having decided that he would take this property, the court would not interfere under the general rule that the political power being vested with certain authority or certain discretion in a matter, the courts will not interfere with it. As to the final taking over, as to the final disposition, as to the final price to be paid for the property, the court could be brought in to take such action as appeared to be just under the circumstances.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator let me read this amendment again?

Mr. FALL. I know what the amendment is. The Senator, in my judgment, is simply blindly following the voice of the master, and I am not going to blindly follow such a voice.

Mr. SWANSON. It is mighty easy for the Senator to talk that way. I think the Senator would do mighty well to have some master at some time, and a great deal better than he does. He would not be quite as wild as he is. I think the best thing the Senator's State could do would be to get somebody to regulate the Senator in emergencies like this.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, there has not been a war measure introduced in this body which I have not earnestly and consistently supported. The so-called acid test has been put upon certain Members of Congress. When the Senator and others were meekly occupying their seats here prior to the declaration of war, I was insisting upon vesting powers in the President of the United States even to a more extreme degree than the President himself asked. The people of New Mexico have elected me. The people of New Mexico are a sovereign people. I thank the Power above us that the people of New Mexico are not so partisan and so subservient that they will not consider the claims of rival candidates nominated by the respective parties in the United States. They have not disfranchised thousands of voters for the purpose of rendering the election of a Democrat who may be nominted by the Democratic Party a "cinch," as we may say. They do not elect, and never, I believe, will they elect any man to represent them in their sovereign capacity as citizens of these United States who will come here and abjectly wear the collar of any man, in the White House or out of it. They will never, in my judgment, elect to represent them on this floor a man who will receive a measure, of whatever kind or character, delivered to him by some office boy from the White House, taking away from the people their sovereign rights as citizens of the United States, and, subserviently following, as I say, the voice of the master, urge its passage as an immediate necessity.

If the people of New Mexico ever find themselves in a frame of mind where they would elect a man as their representative who would come here, sir, and be bound by a partisan caucus, as has the Senator from time to time; if they ever find themselves in a state of mind where they would elect any man as their representative in this body who would take his orders from any source; if they ever find themselves in that condition of mind, Mr. President, they will have forgotten their ancestry. Fifty per cent of the population of my State are of the Spanish blood, and they will have forgotten that they are the sons of the conquistadors who rang the church bells of New Mexico before the English landed at Jamestown or at Plymouth Rock. They will have forgotten that they have a right to celebrate two independence days—one the 16th of September and the other the 4th of July. Anglo-Saxons, who constitute the other 50 per cent of the population of my State, will have forgotten, as apparently, from the Senator's expression, some people even here have forgotten, the traditions of those people who founded this Government—the example of those people who threw off the yoke of England and declared themselves free men—for what? To assume the yoke of partisan politics? To assume to be dictated to by a Secretary of Labor? To turn over their homes, their firesides, their property, to a Secretary of Labor? This is a high standard which the Senator from Virginia sets for the people of New Mexico, that they should castigate me.

Mr. President, I declared some time ago that I should not be a candidate for reelection to the position which I occupy. I have made that declaration firmly and strongly to the people who are interested, in New Mexico. It is generally understood not only that I shall not be a candidate, but I have gone so far as to say that were my election to be assured without a contest I would not accept a commission. Mr. President, after listening to the Senator who is in charge of this bill, if this body should vote for and enact this bill into legislation, I would thank the Lord that I had made that announcement, and had I not made it before I would make it now.

Mr. President, I have never yet found myself in a position where I would allow anyone to dictate to me. The Senator says my people had better send somebody to dictate to me what my policy should be. The Senator from the Old Dominion State, "the mother of Presidents," makes a statement of that kind on the floor of the Senate of the United States!

I am very sorry to have been led into a discussion of this character. I rose to my feet, sir, first as a lawyer to express my views upon certain phases of this bill. I rose to my feet again as a Member of the Senate who stood absolutely by the administration; and I defy the Senator from Virginia to show that he has been any more loyal, even to his President, than I have, except as his spelling of "subserviency" spells "loyalty."

I rose to my feet, sir, for the purpose, first, of pointing out, as I did in the first word, that you are now attempting to vest this absolute, autocratic power in the Secretary of Labor; and I rose to my feet to suggest that you strike out "the Secretary of Labor, under the direction of the President," and write in place of that a provision that the President of the United States is authorized to do these things. I would then vote against the bill; but at least it would be in line with the measure proposed by the Senator from North Carolina, that the President should be allowed to coordinate all branches and all departments of this Government. I am going a little further, and I will say to the Senator from Virginia and the other Senators here that

I am going to vote for the bill vesting this autocratic power in the President of the United States. I am going to do it because I have no confidence in his Cabinet members nor in their ability. In my judgment they have proven themselves absolutely inefficient. I am not going to vote to clothe any one of them with any further power. I will vote to clothe the President with absolute, autocratic power. The President stands responsible to the people of the United States for the conduct of this war. He shall not hide behind the skirts of Hoover, or Garfield, or William B. Wilson, or Baker, or anyone else, in so far as my voice and my vote are concerned. If he conducts us through this great crisis successfully, let his be the praise. Let him be perpetuated in power, if the people so choose. Let him have, as he will deserve, all credit. Let him have the vote of every man in the United States for reelection, if they choose to give it to him. I will not raise my voice against such a vote if he conducts this war successfully and conducts us through the present crisis successfully; but if he fails——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico will please suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate the executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. FALL. But if he fails let the people of the United States understand where is the responsibility for the death of the boys in the trenches, for the failure to place men behind Haig's weakened line. Let them understand where that responsibility rests—not upon Baker, Secretary of War; not upon Daniels, Secretary of the Navy; not upon the Shipping Board. The President is the Shipping Board, the President is the Secretary of War, the President is the Secretary of State, the President is the Secretary of the Navy, the President is the Secretary of Labor, and under the law he is the Fuel Administrator and the Food Administrator. Then name him and let him have the credit. Let him go down in history as having been the one man with the one brain, his effort practically the sole effort which carried this country through the greatest crisis which it has ever known.

As I said, let the people elect him time and again; you will never hear my voice raising an objection, if this man proves his ability. If he wants the power, and you are giving it to him, you shall not, so far as I am concerned, hide behind the skirts of the Secretary of Labor to excuse your abject failure.

Mr. President, I have made certain statements in reference to my understanding of this bill as a legal proposition. I have been led to make certain statements that I regret the necessity of making now, but I should have made those observations at some other time. It is well enough that they be made now, so that my position may be perfectly clear.

I regard this measure, even if it vests the power directly in the President, as the most obnoxious proposed legislation which has been presented to this or any other legislative body in the history of this country. That is my firm conviction. I can not under any circumstances support it. No one, in my judgment, that is my personal opinion, should support it except as vesting this authority in the President of the United States. In my judgment, if the Senator from North Carolina is earnest in his attempt to vest the power in the President of the United States to consolidate bureaus, and so forth, he should himself have made the objection which I have urged here. The other Senators who are in charge of other administration measures, it seems to me, if I may be allowed to suggest very frankly to those who have charge of legislation of this character, would do much better if they would get together and undertake to coordinate their legislation and to have some program of legislation, and not bring in matters of this kind piecemeal, with a measure pending to overturn them all, even if they are enacted into law. These would be my suggestions. Of course, they will not be listened to. At least the first suggestion, of a legal nature, which I made aroused the ire of the great Senator from the Old Dominion, whose idea of senatorship is that one should follow some leader.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have listened to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I for one am tired of hearing Senators discuss measures here not on their merits but simply saying you receive them as your master sent them here. I resent that, and when it comes in any such spirit as that it shows an antagonism to measures because they are supported by the administration.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator allow me to refer to a private conversation which took place between him and me a moment ago in the cloakroom?

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection.

Mr. FALL. When I referred to the fact that the Navy Department had the power and the appropriation with which to acquire buildings, and so forth, and that it should be consolidated, did not the Senator say to me personally that the Secretary of Labor thinks this matter should be left in his hands?

Mr. SWANSON. I did not say the Secretary of Labor. I said the Cabinet thought it the best way to dispose of this matter. The Secretary of the Navy thought so and the Secretary of War, as shown by the hearings. They had it up at a Cabinet meeting and it was decided. I said there was no reason why the Secretary of Labor shoud be reflected on by having him eliminated. Did I not?

Mr. FALL. I think you did.

Mr. SWANSON. For one, Mr. President, I am tired of gentlemen who always display partisanship in the Senate, referring to every measure as being sent here by your master. It is not courteous, it is not true, and it shows the spirit of that Senator and a desire to produce antagonism to measures regardless of the merits of a measure and antagonism to the President himself. The President never sent this measure to me; not a Cabinet minister sent it to me, except so far as they came before the committee. I never saw the Secretary of Labor about this measure, except so far as the other members of the committee saw him. If the Senator has a spirit like that, if he thinks that is senatorial courtesy, it is well that he should be regulated by somebody, and I do not care from what source. I am tired of it for one. If these measures that are brought here reported from committees are right, discuss them on their merits. Discuss the question whether they are wise or unwise. I for one am tired of being eternally rebuked and talked to in any such manner as that your master told you to do so and so. I have no master.

I say one thing, however, that I am going to support the President as Commander in Chief of the Army in all measures, that whenever he recommends a measure to win this war I am going to presume that it is right, and where his vision is greater than mine, where his knowledge is greater than mine, and his information greater than mine, as it is in most cases, I am going to follow him. I never saw an Army yet that was so well organized with so many generals and leaders.

The Senator talks about the unification of power. I stated here that the Cabinet, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of the Navy, and those who are to administer this law had reached the conclusion that it would be administered better by the Secretary of Labor than by anyone else. Why was it first put there? The Secretary of Labor himself testified in the hearing that he had made a survey of all the conditions at the various plants, navy yards, arsenals, and industrial enterprises where munitions of war were being produced. In his department he has the employment bureau of the Government now. If they need people at any of the navy yards; if they need them at munition plants he has the employment bureau that tries to get the labor there; he tries to provide the means of doing the work. He saw a great many places where they did not have houses to house the people. He saw a great many places where the people did not stay longer than 10, 15, or 30 days and he ascertained the necessity of housing the employees, the necessity of having proper residences for them to live in. He made a report and that report went to the War Industries Board. Then it was carried to the Cabinet, and a survey was made, and it was thought wise that he should administer it. That is why it was put in the bill. I see no reason why it should not be put there. He knows the difficulties, he knows the necessity of furnishing labor as far as he can and as far as any official of the Government can do it for these plants to meet the necessities where they exist, and consequently I see no reason why the Secretary of Labor, under the direction of the President, should not have this authority and this power.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, I am in favor of the measure which has just been laid aside, the so-called housing bill, which I believe provides for a very urgent necessity. But I shall not undertake now to discuss its features, for it is my purpose at this time to address myself to the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee, and which has just been laid before the Senate, known as the Overman bill. I ask the indulgence of the Senate while I submit some observations on that measure.

Again, Mr. President, we find in the discussion of this important measure the fundamental question raised as to the war powers of the President of the United States.

Since this country entered into the present war one year ago many serious and imperative war measures have been before Congress, and much valuable time has been consumed in debating the question as to how far the executive branch of the Government should be intrusted with the necessary and indispensable powers to carry on the war. Every inch of ground has been vigorously and tenaciously disputed by those who seem to believe that the same constitutional restrictions should be placed upon the executive department of the Government in time of war as are admittedly proper to place upon it in time of peace. They have expressed grave fears that the liberties of our people might be in danger and the Constitution of our country might be sacrificed if we should remove any of the limitations upon executive authority, and unshackle its hands that it might more easily and successfully combat our foreign foes.

Time and time again they have ably and profoundly discoursed upon the elementary doctrine that our Government is divided into three distinct branches, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial; and sometimes they have so earnestly and jealously emphasized these distinctions that their arguments would seem to lead us to the belief that the safety of our institutions and the liberties of our people could be preserved only when each of these three departments of the Government was fighting the others, and that our real danger would come if ever they should get together and work with perfect cooperation and harmony with each other. In listening to some of these debates in the past year, and at times under the spell of the fervid oratory of some of our strict constructionist friends, I have occasionally wondered whether after all our country would be in greater danger from the barbarous hordes of the German armies, if turned loose upon our land, than from the evil designs of an American President, armed with increased powers with which to wage successful warfare; and whether, in very truth, we did not really have less to fear from William Hohenzollern, with his bad reputation and his powerful war machine, than from Woodrow Wilson, with a little more power in his hands to use in quickly raising and equipping an adequate Army and Navy to fight under the Stars and Stripes. At such times, Mr. President, when these warnings have been thundered in the Senate Chamber I have almost lost sight of the dangers from a triumphant Kaiser, and shuddered at the thought that possibly the President of the United States, if endowed with such additional powers, might turn these great armies and our superb Navy upon the trusting and unsuspecting people of his own land.

Scarcely any war measure has been proposed in the Senate that these alarms have not been sounded, and much valuable time has been lost by the almost interminable debates, in which the discussions seemed to be directed not so much upon the best and quickest way to whip the Germans, but upon the question as to how far we could trust the President of the United States with the power and authority to accomplish that purpose. So much time has been consumed in this way that there is no doubt in my mind but that our war program has been thereby delayed many months. In the consideration and passage of some of these measures weeks and sometimes months have been taken in debate, oftentimes profitless, and the bills would finally pass with very few votes in the Senate against them.

The rules of the Senate which permit unlimited debate have been an especial disadvantage to the country in the last year. If there is any justification for such rules in times of peace, there is certainly none in times of war. It would have helped our war program very materially and hastened our preparation for effective service in it if the Senate immediately after the declaration of war had adopted a rule providing for the previous question for a period at least until the close of the war. We complain that in some instances there have been evidences of serious delays in war preparations and with the lack of energy and efficiency in some governmental agencies, and yet we have certainly not set them a good example in the delays which have so often occurred in this body in the passage of measures so essential and so urgent for the proper conduct of the war.

The Senate recently spent about 10 days in debating an important measure manifestly necessary to strengthen the arm of the Government in dealing with German agents and spies in this country. Although disastrous fires were occurring in our munition factories and criminal activities of German spies in some of our war industries, we spent two days in the discussion of whether the word "calculated" or the word "intended" should be used in that measure, and yet there were so few against the passage of the bill that when it came to its final passage not even a roll call was demanded. We could greatly repair the mistake already made and accelerate our preparations for war if we would start right here in the Senate and have the Committee on Rules report without further delay a rule permitting the use of the previous question in our proceedings here during the war, and if the Senate would adopt such a rule.

There are many evidences, Mr. President, that the people of the country are becoming aroused more than ever to the gravity and peril of this war, and becoming impatient and intolerant of any unnecessary delays in Congress or elsewhere in the organization of our strength and forces for complete and successful participation in the war. We can observe this feeling growing in every section. In many places it has broken out in mob violence. Impatient of the law's delays, the citizens in many parts of the country have begun to take the law in their own hands in their efforts to stamp out treason and the evil activities of the German agents in this country. This is an unfortunate condition, for the mob spirit is likely to increase unless the Government is given sufficient power to deal effectively with these evils and crimes.

No war ever has been won or ever will be won by a debating society. Learned and eloquent disquisitions upon theories of government, profound and exhaustive addresses upon constitutional limitations may have their place in a period of peace, but in this fateful crisis of world history there is no time for them, and only action, vigorous, forceful action, can meet the situation or satisfy the demands of our people. When millions of men are lined up in a life-and-death struggle upon the long battle field of western Europe, when the civilization of the world is trembling in the balance, when hundreds of thousands of brave young American soldiers are in that battle line with their brothers in arms, sacrificing their lives in the righteous cause of human freedom, and when the American people each day while this tremendous conflict is going on are watching with intense anxiety every bulletin that comes to us from the battle fields, it is not surprising that we should see so many manifestations of impatience throughout the country when we hesitate here in Congress so often and so long to give to the President sufficient power, not only to maintain our Army and our Navy abroad but to suppress the very dangerous and grave activities of bold and defiant German agents in this country.

There may be some Senators who conscientiously fear the policy of placing too much power in the hands of the Executive, but I am confident, Mr. President, that I am not mistaken when I say that at least 95 per cent of the American people have no such fear and are willing to trust him with unlimited power in the prosecution of this war. I do not believe that the President of the United States would abuse that power in the least, and I have great confidence in his patriotism, his widsom, and his devotion to the Constitution and the laws of our land. The extraordinary powers which we give him will be promptly surrendered by him when the war is over and the danger is passed.

The great Lincoln, as we have so often been told, was bitterly assailed and called a dictator and a tyrant because when the Union was threatened in the Civil War he assumed and exercised powers not specifically warranted in the Constitution. He did it in order to save the Constitution and the Union, and who is there to-day that would dare to criticize him for what he did? Who is there now that doubts the purpose of Lincoln to surrender every one of those extraordinary powers at the close of the war and the end of its dangers?

The biggest undertaking, Mr. President, which this Government ever encountered was one year ago when we entered into this world struggle for the defense not only of the civilization of Europe but for the safety and peace of our own people. Upon a moment's notice, as it were, we had to suddenly begin transforming a democracy of 100,000,000 of peace-loving people and a Government established for such a people and for such conditions into a warlike organization to meet the most perfectly equipped war machine in the history of the world. It has been no easy or simple task. It has been one to test to the uttermost the wisdom, the patience, and the genius of the man at the head of our Government, and of those associated with him in the great work before them. That some mistakes have been made, that some disappointments and failures have occurred is undeniable, but the dispassionate historian of the future will undoubtedly pay tribute to the marvelous and splendid work that has been done, and place that work far in excess of any mistakes or failures.

I shall not take up the time of the Senate in an effort to describe or enumerate the many great achievements accomplished in the last year, for the Senate is familiar with them, and so are the people of the country. It is inconceivable that in so gigantic a task some mistakes should not have occurred, and there is no reason to conceal them. Neither is there reason to exaggerate or magnify them. The work is going on tremendously and successfully. Back of it all stands the unwavering determination of the united American people to devote their all, if necessary, to the successful conclusion of this war. Back of it, too, stands the great President of the United States, whose clear and ringing words in behalf of human freedom have awakened the oppressed people in every land on the globe, and have thrilled our allies with a new spirit of indomitable courage on the battle fields and in their homes.

We should do our utmost in this vast work. Congress should not withhold from the President any power or any means which he considers necessary in this enormous undertaking. He is the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy. We must trust him just as soldiers must trust their general when they go into battle. We are serving the enemy and not our country whenever we delay unnecessarily the grant of power and funds which he may need. Congress has done much excellent work since this country declared war upon Germany, and less partisanship has been shown in the two Houses in that time than at any other time in the last half a century. Democrats and Republicans alike have shown an admirable spirit of patriotism, and only with rare exceptions have evidences of partisanship been exhibited. But there is much more work to be done by us, and I believe it should be done more speedily and with less caviling and contention about the powers of the Executive and the strict adherence to the letter of the Constitution.

I yield to no man in my reverence and devotion to that Constitution. From my childhood I have been taught and I now believe that it is the great charter of our liberty and a sacred instrument, which must be protected and respected if our Republic is to endure. But, Mr. President, let me say that in my opinion it was never the intention of those who framed the Constitution that any of its provisions should ever be invoked in time of war and national peril to restrict the power of the Government in the defense of the Nation and of its institutions.

Great Britain, too, has a constitution. In no other nation on earth at the time the European war began did the people possess more liberty of thought or action than did the people of Great Britain. They reverenced their constitution with its safeguards upon their liberties just as much as we reverence ours, but when war burst upon them, and as the magnitude of their danger increased, they found it necessary to yield during the period of national peril most of the liberties insured to them by the constitution.

The changes which have taken place in the British Government in the last three years should furnish interesting and valuable lessons to us. The transformation of their governmental agencies from a peace basis to a war basis was slowly—it may be too slowly—but surely accomplished, and we see in that process of evolution the peace-time government of the able and amiable Asquith changed into a powerful war-time organization under the more vigorous Lloyd-George. No one need to doubt that when war is over and peace again established the British democracy will come into its own again more firmly established, if possible, than it was before the war. And no one here need doubt that no matter how great the power we may vest in our Executive, democracy again in this country when peace comes will be fully restored to every power which it may have surrendered during the war.

I need not take up the time of the Senate in discussing similar conditions which existed in the early part of our Civil War and the embarrassment which President Lincoln experienced in the efforts of many Members of Congress to hold him to the strictest limitations in the letter of our Constitution. It was only after his hands were unfettered by such technical restrictions that he was able to marshal the forces of the Union and bring about a successful conclusion of the war. I repeat, Mr. President, that our people are in no spirit or temper to tolerate any delays in Congress or elsewhere, nor to show any patience with those who would consume precious time in these critical days in seeking to limit the powers which the President must have if we are to achieve victory in this war.

We find this restlessness and impatience upon the part of the people throughout the country, especially in reference to the fact that the Government and the courts under existing laws have not been able to accomplish more in the suppression of the German propaganda and to prevent the disastrous losses brought about in many institutions and industries by German agents and spies. Many of these agents are escaping any punishment at all; some of them are receiving sentences of imprisonment, which amounts to no punishment to them, where similar crimes in the other belligerent countries would be summarily punished to the fullest extent. The time has about come, Mr. President, when it should be seriously considered whether or not the President should in some cases suspend the writ of habeas corpus and declare martial law to cover these offenses of alien enemies in the country. It was done in the Civil War, and there seems to be far greater reason why it should be done at this time. If we do not very soon more vigorously and effectively show the power of the Government under existing processes to sufficiently punish these enemies, then we may expect an alarming increase in mob violence and in lawlessness throughout the land.

A mob once in a while gets the right man, but too often it may persecute or murder an innocent one. The extension of the jurisdiction of courts-martial in these cases may become necessary. There is no cause to reflect upon the administration of the laws by our Department of Justice or by our courts, for they have done much good work; but it is becoming more apparent that the ordinary processes of our courts under existing laws are not sufficient to adequately combat this danger. Therefore, I say, Mr. President, more power to the President of the United States and less quibbling about constitutional objections in this hour of grave danger.

In this bill before the Senate, which bears the name of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the President is not asking for more actual power, but is seeking to have Congress give him the authority that he may "coordinate or consolidate the executive bureaus, agencies, and offices in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government." In brief, he is simply asking that he be allowed to redistribute in a more businesslike and efficient manner the power which he already has.

Although this is only a war measure, some such authority really should be given to the President in times of peace, because it is a well-known fact that there is great duplication of work, many instances of unnecessary waste and extravagance in the present organization of our departments and bureaus. The attention of Congress and of the people has been called to this fact for many years. We are all familiar with what Senator Aldrich said some years ago, to the effect that our Government, even in those times, on a more businesslike basis could be conducted for $300,000,000 less than it did cost without sacrifice to the public service. President Taft on numerous occasions pointed out the cumbersome, clumsy, and expensive features of the present system. Other distinguished men and officials have time and time again commented upon it, and yet nothing was ever done to remedy it. If such reforms were needed under conditions of peace, how much more are they needed now under the present conditions.

Some Senators express the fear that the President may go too far in this work and possibly impair the service and efficiency of some of our governmental agencies. They fear that the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Federal Reserve System or some other branch of the Government service might be sacrificed or impaired by him if such power was given him. I have no such fear myself, nor, do I believe that the vast majority of the American people entertain such a fear. There are some who insist that the President indicate specifically what changes or consolidations or coordinations he desires to make before authority is granted him by Congress to do it.

This, Mr. President, it seems to me, is manifestly impracticable, if not impossible. It is a case where I feel that we can with utmost safety trust the President, who is more responsible than any other official or citizen in this country, to use that discretion, intelligence, and wisdom with which he is justly credited. We can certainly try the experiment without risk or danger for the period of the war, and it would not surprise me if, in many instances, the changes brought about would prove to be so satisfactory and successful that Congress, after the war, would be ready to continue them on a permanent basis.

It might be that the President already possesses much, if not all, of the authority which this bill proposes to give him. As Commander in Chief in time of war, he might assume, without legislative sanction, to do many things contemplated in this measure toward the reorganization of the executive branches of the Government upon a more businesslike and effective basis. As an illustration, it is probable that he already has the right to coordinate the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission with the office of the Director General of Railroads under the act of Congress, giving him the authority to take over the railroads of the country in time of war.

Modern war is very different from what it used to be. It requires now not merely the operation of armies and navies. It is far more comprehensive, and takes within its omnivorous scope almost every activity and industry of human life. With vastly increased demands it calls upon the farmer, the laborer, the artisan, the captain of industry, the scientist, the chemist, the artist, and men and women from every walk of life. The fields, the factories, the commercial organizations, the laboratories, and nearly all, if not all, of the industrial agencies of peace conditions are now brought into direct touch with the war organization and are important and essential factors in it. The so-called peace departments of the executive branch of Government have their warlike functions to perform just as necessary as those of the War Department or of the Navy Department. It seems, therefore, that the President should have broader authority during the war to organize wherever advisable any of the executive branches for more useful and capable service in the war, and I believe that this measure which undertakes to grant, if not to confirm, such authority in his hands should be passed substantially as it has been reported by the committee.

Mr. President, the most important element now in the determination of this awful world conflict is speed. Nothing can more endanger our success and the success of our allies in the final struggle than delay. Every hour, every day, is more valuable now than at any other time in human history. No one need to have fear of the result if this great Nation, with its immense wealth, its inexhaustible resources, and its energetic and patriotic people, loses no further time in marshaling its strength for service upon the stage of this world tragedy. Never before in the history of the human race was the issue at stake greater or more far-reaching than it is to-day. Never before did any people have as great an opportunity to render service to mankind as the American people have at the present. We breathlessly and anxiously await day and night for each message that flashes across the seas, telling us of the events of the titanic struggle now going on in Belgium and in northern France. No braver soldiers ever marched to the battle front than those American, British, and French heroes who are right now along that battle line holding back the onrushing waves of the barbarous hosts of Germany. Their success in holding those lines and in driving back the ruthless foes depend upon how fast can we rush to their aid men and supplies.

The American Government is meeting this duty nobly and to the fullest extent possible. Our troops are going over faster than ever before. The necessary munitions and supplies are also going. In this crucial hour every American citizen should speed this work to its utmost. Every sacrifice that is needed to help should be cheerfully made. A disaster to the armies of our allies would be our disaster. For nearly four long years, the bloodiest and darkest in all history, these allies have been giving up the best of their life's blood and all their treasure in a struggle against the forces of destruction and wickedness. Never before in history was there a contest between men or between nations where the line of demarcation between right and wrong, between democracy and autocracy, between justice and cruelty, and between civilization and barbarity so clearly defined as it is in this struggle. All hope of success and the salvation of future generations depend now upon how soon and how strong we can be there with our aid. There should be no let-up in our work nor suggestion of peace until victory, complete victory, is won from that nation which has dealt the foulest and most brutal blow to the people of the earth in all history.

No temporary peace for ourselves, with the threat of war for our children and our children's children hanging over them. No peace until never again will it be possible for the war-mad and diabolical rulers of Germany to plunge her own people and the rest of the world into the horrors of war. Let us, Mr. President, do our utmost. Let us urge upon every man and woman in America to do all that in them lies and to make any needed sacrifice in the heroic struggle to secure a peace that will be enduring and upon a foundation as firm as a rock. And while we are calling upon them for speed, speed, speed, let not the United States Senate in this great work set any bad example of delay.

Mr. OVERMAN rose.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask if the bill in charge of the Senator from North Carolina is now before the Senate?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is. The housing bill was laid aside. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is in charge of that bill, is not present. He asked me if I would not allow my bill to be laid aside and have his bill proceeded with. He, however, has not returned to the Chamber, therefore we may proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to address myself to the housing bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I so understood, and that is the reason I rose. I think that probably the housing bill should be passed; but I repeat, the Senator from Virginia is not now present, so I desire to proceed with the bill of which I am in charge.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then, I will say what I was going to say. Very likely in the meantime the Senator from Virginia will return to the Chamber.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I think there is great necessity for the immediate passage of the housing bill. The fact of the need of imperative haste in the solution of the housing problem has been brought to my attention, because I have been sitting with the subcommittee upon the antirent profiteering bill, and the needs of the District of Columbia in the way of housing have therefore become very apparent to us. There are now almost no houses in the District that are not fully occupied. Employees are coming into the District by the thousand every month, and they will continue to do so, as we are assured, during the balance of this year. People owning houses who have never before taken boarders or rented their rooms have been appealed to to now rent rooms as a patriotic service. They have responded in a very generous and patriotic spirit, but the limit of their resources has now been reached.

This bill carries an appropriation of $10,000,000 for the erection of houses in the District of Columbia, and those of us who are on the District of Columbia Committee have a special interest in the subject. I wish to say a word as to why the money is appropriated to be expended by the Secretary of Labor. As I said last week, the labor problem is a very acute problem in various departments, not only in the Navy Department and the War Department, but also in the Shipping Board, and with the District of Columbia itself. Each of the departments has all the different kinds of labor trouble—the question of getting labor, having fair prices, proper sanitary conditions, and safe conditions for the employees to work.

The problem was very carefully studied by the commission during the past summer and fall. The War and Navy Departments and the Shipping Board were reluctant to give up their control over it, but they finally agreed that it was better, in the interest of greater efficiency, to put all of the labor problems in all the departments in the hands of the Secretary of Labor. That included the housing problem, and the Shipping Board, which has an appropriation for housing, has held up its plan, waiting for this additional power to be conferred on the Secretary of Labor.

I make this explanation in order that the Senate may understand that this appropriation is not provided to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor because he has asked for it or demanded it, but because it is in accordance with the plan of the administration to have all the labor problems, including employment, wages, and housing, handled in that department.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the unfinished business is before the Senate, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). It is.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is no other Senator who desires to speak upon the housing bill, which has been laid aside, I know there are a number of Senators who desire to speak upon the unfinished business who are absent from the Chamber at this particular time. Therefore, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Suggestion of the absence of a quorum is made, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	New	Smoot
Baird	Hale	Norris	Sterling
Beckham	Harding	Nugent	Swanson
Borah	Hardwick	Overman	Thomas
Brandegee	Henderson	Page	Tillman
Calder	Hollis	Phelan	Townsend
Chamberlain	Johnson, Cal.	Pittman	Trammell
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Underwood
Cummins	Kellogg	Pomerene	Warren
Curtis	McCumber	Sheppard	Williams
Dillingham	McKellar	Shields	Wolcott
Fletcher	McNary	Smith, Ga.
France	Martin	Smith, Md.
Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, S. C.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. KENDRICK] is absent on business of the Senate. I will ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is absent in connection with the liberty loan campaign and will be absent for several days.

Mr. POMERENE. I wish to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] are detained in attendance on the funeral of the late Senator BROUSSARD.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHcock], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are detained in attendance on the funeral of the late Senator STONE. I also wish to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are detained, taking part in the third liberty loan campaign.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

HOUSING OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask the Senator from North Carolina, in charge of the unfinished business, temporarily to lay it aside, so that we may dispose of House bill 10265, the speedy enactment of which is of the utmost importance.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I was rather impressed with what the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] said about this bill, and I think it ought to pass as soon as possible. I will therefore agree that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and ask unanimous consent that that may be done, in order that the housing bill may be taken up. I wish to say, however, that I shall not ask the Senate to lay the unfinished business aside for any purpose after 2 o'clock to-morrow. I say that in order that the Senate may have notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I also want to say that the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire was very significant in view of the fact that some time ago we were urged especially to pass the bill providing for housing in connection with the shipbuilding plants. It was urged that legislation must be passed giving the Shipping Board authority to spend $50,000,000 to provide housing facilities; and yet it is announced to-day that they have held that work up waiting for the passage of this bill. If that is the way to expedite war preparations, it is quite different from the kind of expedition that I have in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not going to object, and yet I think we ought to bring ourselves to a frame of mind whereby we may expedite and pass one bill before we take up another.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator is right about that; and I have given notice that hereafter I will not ask the Senate to lay the unfinished business aside.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not object to the request, although I regret the necessity for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the so-called housing bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10265) to authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be proceeded with by paragraphs, and that committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed with the bill by paragraphs. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. And that the committee amendments be first considered.

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; that the committee amendments be first considered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not willing to consent that committee amendments shall be first considered. I can see reason for such a request in the case of an appropriation bill, but I think there are many reasons why we should not follow that practice in the case of a bill of this character.

Mr. SWANSON. Very well; I will modify the request, and merely ask that the consideration of the bill be proceeded with by paragraphs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, can the Senator from Virginia tell us what has become of the $50,000,000 voted to the Shipping Board for the purpose of providing housing facilities? The appropriation carried by this bill, if enacted, and that in the law to enable the Shipping Board to provide housing facilities will make $110,000,000 for building houses. If it is necessary, and the amount will be properly used, very well; but I should like to know about it.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator from Georgia had been in the Chamber——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator has already gone over that matter, I will not ask him to do so again.

Mr. SWANSON. We had quite a prolonged discussion as to the difference between this bill and the Shipping Board housing bill. It developed that the Shipping Board housing bill simply authorized——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not want the Senator to answer the question if he has already done so. I ought to have been here.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I hope the Senator from Georgia will insist on his question, because I do not think it has been explained what has been done with the $50,000,000 already appropriated for the Shipping Board.

Mr. SWANSON. The Shipping Board housing bill simply authorizes the Shipping Board to use $50,000,000 for housing purposes out of the $800,000,000 already appropriated. As to what disposition they have made of that money I do not know. It is not a matter that came to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The members of the Commerce Committee would know far better than I do as to what disposition was made of that money.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia will allow me, I wish to say that even before the Committee on Commerce reported that bill—and it became a law on the 1st of March—the Shipping Board, out of the money appropriated, had already commenced to build houses at Newport News. They construed that they had the general power under the shipping law to do that, and they had already made arrangements for building quite a number of houses in carrying on the work there long before the housing bill was passed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, I was out of the Chamber a moment ago, but I have been told that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] stated on the floor that the Shipping Board has delayed operations under the act of March 1 last with a view of waiting until this bill is passed.

Mr. SWANSON. I will state to the Senator, as I have already stated to the Senate, that there has been constituted an executive board of five members to administer this bill when it shall become a law—one a practical contractor; one, Mr. Dorr, or some other representative of the Army; a representative of the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy; a representative of the Shipping Board; and an attorney. These five men will constitute the board to administer the appropriation provided by this bill under the direction of the Secretary of Labor. As to whether the Shipping Board is waiting until this bill is passed I do not know.

Mr. NELSON. But these five men, Mr. President, are not provided for in the bill; they are not referred to. The bill practically puts it all in the hands of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. SWANSON. The Secretary of Labor, following a practice that is very commendable, told us whom he thought he would select to administer this proposed law under his direction. Of course, it is necessary to have an organization, and he felt that he ought frankly to tell the committees, both of the House and of the Senate, which he did, whom he thought it would be wise to appoint to administer this proposed law if he were given authority to act under it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator be kind enough to state the names again?

Mr. SWANSON. I can not give the exact names, but the board is made up of one representative of the War Department, one representative of the Navy Department, an attorney, a member of the Shipping Board—I do not think it was stated who the representative of the Shipping Board would be—and Mr. Eidlitz, of New York, who has been made director of housing.

Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. HARDING, and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield; and if so, to whom? There are three Senators on their feet.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the senior Senator from Washington who, I believe, first rose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood the Senator to say that the $50,000,000 appropriated for housing facilities to be expended by the Shipping Board was out of the $800,000,000 which had theretofore been appropriated.

Mr. SWANSON. That is as I understand the matter.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SWANSON. I understood that was what was done.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have here a copy of the law from which I quote, as follows:

That the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation is hereby authorized and empowered within the limits of the amounts herein authorized—

To do so and so. Then, in the last paragraph it is provided:

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the expenditure of $50,000,000 is hereby authorized—

And so forth. That is, $50,000,000 additional to what has heretofore been authorized.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator must remember that that is simply an authorization and not an appropriation by law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that, but they can make contracts

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, they are authorized to spend $50,000,000, but I do not understand that any appropriation has been made or possibly will be made. I can not speak definitely, but, as I understand, that act simply authorizes the Shipping Board to expend $50,000,000 of the amount that had previously been appropriated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; they can spend $50,000,000; they can make contracts, and so forth.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not think so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the way it was understood.

Mr. SWANSON. My opinion is that they were simply authorized to spend $50,000,000 of the money heretofore appropriated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They were already going on and spending that money.

Mr. SWANSON. At any rate, it is estimated that $110,000,000 will not be ample to provide proper housing facilities. It is for Congress to determine whether they want to do this or not; it is for Congress to determine whether they want to speed up the war program: it is for Congress to determine as to whether, in order to secure guns, munitions, destroyers, ships, and work at the navy yards, it is necessary that this appropriation be made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not want the Senator to understand that I was objecting; I merely wanted to correct his statement—that is all.

Mr. SWANSON The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds examined this matter; they had hearings, and the Secretary of Labor and others interested appeared before the committee. The committee received reports, some of them confidential and made in executive session, which we could not give to the public, but which any Senator may read, showing the places where the work is being done and setting forth the delay in the delivery of munitions, war material, destroyers, and the delay in the work at the navy yards and arsenals. If any Senator has any doubt about this, he can ascertain the places where it is proposed to expend the money, and he can ascertain that the delay in the securing of war munitions has been on account of the inability properly to house employees. I do not know of a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, either of the House or of the Senate, who, after hearing the testimony, did not reach the conclusion that this was one of the most important and urgent war measures before Congress. We had a full hearing, and while we did not feel that we were privileged to put all of this in our reports—these various surveys that were made would not have been given to us except in executive session, to be used for that purpose—they show the plants where delay in the delivery of various munitions of war, destroyers, and other matters has been occasioned by the lack of employees, because the employees left by reason of the lack of houses. They have done everything that can be done to get private enterprise to put up houses at these places. At a great many places the cities have united and have done what they could. Private enterprise has done all that it could. They have presented this matter to the Government as one of the most important matters pending for the proper and efficient conduct of the war.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I have been heartily in favor of this legislation. I am a member of the Committee on Commerce; and when the Shipping Board came there and urged this legislation, and said that it was necessary to speed it up, that it was necessary that they should go on and secure the proper legislation and proper authority and get the money, we hurried it up as much as possible and succeeded in getting it through the Senate, and finally in getting the House to concur in it, and it became a law on the 1st of March; and yet, while we speeded up all we could in this matter, it seems that the Shipping Board have done nothing at all on it. What little they have done they did down at Newport News before we passed the law.

Now, I am not opposing the proposition of the Senator from Virginia. I am in favor of legislation to provide houses; but what strikes me as peculiar, and I call attention to it, is the fact that here is a duplication. You provide in the act of March 1 that the Shipping Board, or the Emergency Fleet Corporation—which is simply a part of it—shall have authority to build houses and equip them in all yards where ships are built for the Government. Now, in this bill——

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. NELSON. I should like to finish my statement.

Mr. SWANSON. No; I have heard that statement before, and I should like to reply to that phase of it at this time. This bill originated, as I stated, with the Secretary of Labor, who has an employment bureau. If any employees are wanted at the navy yards or at munition plants or anywhere in this country, they ask him to furnish as many laborers as are necessary to do the work. He made a survey of the entire situation in the United States through the employment bureau. He ascertained that at some of these plants, where they had contracts for destroyers, shipping, and other things, it was impossible to complete them, and they were greatly delayed for the lack of housing for the employees. He made a report on that matter to the War Industries Board or the War Council—I do not know the technical name.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. SWANSON. Then that was carried to the Cabinet, as I understand, and they felt that they needed $110,000,000, and a bill was to be introduced putting it under the Secretary of Labor to coordinate. Pending that, the Shipping Board had a bill introduced by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], which had passed the Senate, as I understand, at that time; and it was decided to let the Shipping Board bill go through, and this matter would be presented under the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will not allow me to ask him a question, or to interrupt him, or to finish a sentence, I will take the floor in my own time.

Mr. SWANSON. I will. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator now.

Mr. NELSON. I wanted to say—the Senator did not give me a chance to finish my sentence before—that the Shipping Board had investigated this housing proposition long before the Department of Labor did, and came before us and asked for that legislation.

We gave it to them as rapidly as possible, and now they have done nothing under it. Under this bill, you propose to give the Department of Labor jurisdiction over housing in all the yards of the country where ships are being built—naval or merchant ships. You propose to give them authority, and here you have two authorities. On the one hand you have the Shipping Board and on the other hand you have the Department of Labor, both covering the same ground; and then, more than that, you have this situation. I am in favor of housing people in our arsenals and navy yards and other Government actitivities, but we are having munitions and shells manufactured all over this country at various points. We are having shells manufactured at Stillwater, Minn., we are having them manufactured at Minneapolis, and we are having them manufactured in other States. Are you going to give the Department of Labor a roving commission to go and erect houses for laborers all over this country wherever they manufacture a few shells and munitions? Is that your purpose?

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, I will state the purpose of this bill as I understand it. I think the department has named 15 or 16 places—I can not remember the exact number—where applications have been made and where there is a necessity for housing to complete the war program. Applications were made, surveys were made twice, investigations were made, and it has been determined that if this housing bill is passed, at these places where contracts are being delayed they will increase their output from 25 to 50 per cent. They have said that in the future, where housing facilities can not be furnished, no contract will be given to places of that kind and character. Heretofore a great many contracts have been awarded, and they have had difficulty in getting municipalities and individuals and others to furnish proper housing facilities for these employees.

This is not a duplication. As I told the Senator, they expected originally to have $110,000,000. None of this money will be spent where the Shipping Board operates; or, rather, the Shipping Board will not and can not spend any money, as I understand, at navy yards, arsenals, or where the War Industries

Board are operating; but they expect to correlate it by coordination as far as it can be done. Except for the fact that the bill had been introduced, and had passed the Senate, giving the Shipping Board this authority, it was expected that all the authority would be vested in the Secretary of Labor; but, as I said, there was a great necessity for that bill, as I understand, and therefore this division was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. As the Senator expresses it, then, the law we passed on the 1st of March is to be what the lawyers call functus officio—a dead letter?

Mr. SWANSON. Not at all.

Mr. NELSON. They are to operate under this new law?

Mr. SWANSON. Not at all. I understand that the Shipping Board loaned money for this purpose at Newport News. It did not build any houses, as I understand, although I may be mistaken. I have not looked into the details of the matter; but from rumor I understand that a company was organized there, and the title taken to the land, and the Government advanced it some money to construct the houses, and took a lien by way of security. The Government does not expect to lose any money in constructing these houses. It can not lose at all, except so far as the increased cost of construction now might be reduced when normal conditions return, when these houses are disposed of. The impression given us from the statements made by the Secretary of Labor and others was that they felt satisfied, from the methods they contemplated pursuing, that when this necessity disappeared and normal conditions returned they would be able to dispose of these houses where they made loans and collect the money, and they felt sure that the only loss the Government would sustain would be the loss occasioned on account of the high cost of building at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] first. He has been standing for some time.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, it is rather a patient wait that I have made. The point I rose to address myself to has somewhat escaped our notice. I meant to impose on the courtesy of the Senator from Virginia to throw a little light on the delay in getting results from the appropriation made in behalf of the Shipping Board.

Mr. SWANSON. I am frank to say that I know nothing about the Shipping Board. That matter did not come to my committee. It was before the Commerce Committee. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], I think, had charge of the housing for the Shipping Board more than I did.

Mr. HARDING. By courtesy of the Senator, if I may, I will say that some considerable time before the Senate passed the measure making a special appropriation for the Shipping Board, by direction of the Committee on Commerce, the chairman and another member of the committee were authorized to call upon the Emergency Fleet Corporation and recommend the appropriation of sums already available to the Fleet Corporation for the purpose of immediately starting a house-erection campaign.

On the encouragement given by this committee, the Emergency Fleet officers designated an appropriation of approximately two and a half million dollars as an advance to the Newport News Shipbuilding Co., who were to build their own houses with this Government aid. A larger appropriation was made to the shipbuilding plant at Sparrow's Point, Md. It was expected that in the emergency then pressing there would be immediate construction, but then arose the thing that has caused this delay, and it was the thing that impelled me to interrupt the Senator in order to give it to the Senate.

There immediately arose a controvery as to who should have charge of this great housing program. I think it is no violation of confidence to say that the delay has been due to a controversy between the Labor Department on the one hand, which insists that it should have this great project under its control, and the Shipping Board on the other; and the Shipping Board found itself confronted by a question that was urged on the one hand by the great emergency and promoted on the other hand by a lot of idealists and extremists, and that is the situation to which Congress must give some consideration.

There could have been provision made for a prompt supply of temporary houses, but everyone connected with the idealist movement, which is back of the thing, was opposed to anything of that sort. You could not get anyone connected with the Labor Department to consent to any temporary relief of this situation. This is a bit of idealism fitted into the emergency of the Government for a paternal housing program in this country.

I am quite ready to agree that housing is necessary. I voted for the original appropriation, and I am content again to vote for this large appropriation, though I do so with a very great amount of concern. I think the Senate is not going far enough in the pending bill in fixing the basic conditions of operating an enterprise of this sort; and so, while I am on my feet, I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the committee gave any consideration to a provision fixing the basis of rentals of these properties?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the question of rentals was before the committee. The Secretary of Labor, who under this bill is to have the administration of it, was asked as to what his policy would be. There was an idea that he might furnish rent free to some employees of the Government. I have here his statement before the committee, in which he stated that he would not do that; that if he had the administration of the measure he would not furnish rent free to anyone; that he would endeavor to regulate the rent to be paid according to what the rent would be under normal conditions, in view of the expenditures the Government made, the cost. I will read the Senator what he says in reference to it, showing that the committee carefully considered this bill and its administration as far as it could do so.

Mr. HARDING. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia if he thinks that the Government ought to spend this enormous amount of money and make rental rates based on normal conditions when the Government itself in these plants is paying a wage rate of two to three times the normal rate?

Mr. SWANSON. The Secretary of Labor, I think, was asked that question. I can not remember definitely, but he stated that when you charged abnormal rent rates and there was an abnormal cost of food, it necessarily increased wages to an abnormal point. We were satisfied that if we had normal conditions, normal wages, and if the Government charged abnormal rents for these places it would necessarily result in an increase of wages. I will read what the Secretary of Labor says in reference to it.

Mr. HARDING. If that is the basis of his argument, I do not even care to hear it read, Mr. President. I think any Senator will be able to analyze that statement for himself.

Mr. SWANSON (reading)—

> Secretary WILSON. No; there is no intention of furnishing them free. There are different methods under contemplation. The method that will undoubtedly have to be utilized to the greatest extent will be to advance money to corporations who will guarantee the erection of buildings within a specified time, under certain circumstances, the advance being properly safeguarded, with proper arrangements for amortization, and proper arrangements for interest, and proper arrangements for control to prevent profiteering in the rentals, and so on.
> The pincipal method of handling it, in my judgment, will have to be that way. But there will be certain conditions in certain locations where it will be necessary for the Government to do the erecting of the housing itself, and when it does the erecting of the housing it will rent the houses at a normal rental rate, a rate that would be the normal rate that should be obtained from ordinary commercial investment in housing enterprises. There is no expectation and no desire to erect buildings at Government expense and then hand them over to some portion of the population, that portion of the population that may for the time being be engaged in certain lines of industry, rent free. That does not seem to be an equitable sort of proposition.
> If we are going to erect housing and furnish houses free, we ought not to do it for one class of citizens only, but if we are going to do that, all of the citizens of the country ought to participate in it.

Mr. HARDING. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I am very much pleased with paragraph (d), which was inserted on page 3, because I think myself the enterprise would be infinitely more practicable, and more effectively and promptly worked out, if the Government advanced the greater proportion of this sum to the employers for the erection of houses that will contribute to the accommodations of a permanent and important enterprise. But the difficulty with production so far has been that the Department of Labor had hindered the Newport News and Sparrows Point construction because it was placed in the hands of the owners of the plant.

Now, I want to ask the Senator a question. I believe, under normal commercial conditions, in dealing with private property, that a rental of 10 per cent is considered necessary to meet taxes, improvements, investment, and so forth, to justify a building enterprise. I think that would be vastly too much to charge for the Government or other employees in these yards and munition plants; but would the Senator consent to write as a basic proposition in this law that the Government-builded property should be rented on a basis of 6 per cent of the actual cost?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know. I think it would be far better to leave it to the discretion of these people to manage it. At some places 6 per cent might be fair, at some places 7 per cent, at some places 3 per cent, according to the details of the matter. I think it would be a mistake to prescribe the exact rate. Secretary Wilson stated to us the conditions on which he would figure his rentals. I think to specify 6 per cent, 7 per cent, or 8 per cent would be a mistake. It would be impossible to go into all the details of a matter like this without taking the chance that something might be done wrongly. The members of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee who heard the Secretary of Labor and these other gentlemen very carefully, and heard members of the housing committee testify, were all satisfied that with the amendments proposed in this bill the bill would be well and splendidly administered, and that good results would come from it, and it was reported unanimously by the committee. I do not think it would be wise to insert 6 per cent or 7 per cent or 5 per cent or 4 per cent as a requirement, because I am satisfied that the person who will administer the bill will charge a fair rental. He was asked that very question.

Mr. HARDING. If that be the case, what would be the objection to writing it in the bill?

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to putting in "a fair rental."

Mr. HARDING. What does the Senator think would be a fair rental?

Mr. SWANSON. I can not say. I do not know whether it would be 10 per cent, 6 per cent, or 7 per cent. I do not know the conditions at all these places. No business man would embark upon a proposition requiring the expenditure of a large sum of money without being familiar with the different conditions. This thing extends from Puget Sound and Mare Island to all the navy yards and arsenals all over the country where these accommodations are needed, consequently it is difficult to fix a specific rate. I have an idea that it will be better administered by leaving some discretion in the party who is to administer it.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia has said that no business man would do so-and-so. I beg to take issue with him on that particular point. Somebody ought to speak here now and then for the people who are paying these enormous sums of money. I think the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has done so on more than one occasion, and I want to pay him my tribute of reverence for doing so. We are venturing here now on a program that is costing millions and millions of dollars. I do not believe any business man would set aside such a sum of money for a specific purpose without knowing the basis on which the investment was to be handled. I do not care whether it is Seattle or San Francisco or Los Angeles or New Orleans or Norfolk or Hog Island, whatever the cost of construction may be in that particular locality ought to fix the basis of rental for that property; and I say without any fear of contradiction that any workman in any munition or shipbuilding plant in any section of the United States can well afford to pay the rental to be asked, and would suffer no injustice, no matter what the locality might be.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. If a specific rental is prescribed by law and we build some houses, suppose after we build them at one of these plants somebody should build private houses and rent them for $1 or 50 cents a month less, we could not compete with them, and all of our houses would be empty. Would it not be better to have authority to administer the measure in such a way as to meet the conditions?

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator. Surely Congress would not venture on this great undertaking if there were not the emergency of housing men to meet these requirements of production; and if private enterprise is willing to step in and furnish houses at a less rate of return on the investment than 6 per cent, then there is no necessity for passing this bill.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator——

Mr. HARDING. Let me finish. Now, assume that the condition arises which the Senator recites; if that be true, then Congress is in a position to act in the matter, and readjust the basis of rentals.

Mr. SWANSON. Let me ask the Senator this question, just as a business proposition: We build these houses. The emergency exits now. A year from now the emergency may not exist, or six months from now, or three months from now. Something may occur to remove the emergency. The Government can not reduce its rent one cent, one dime, or one nickel. It is provided by law that it must be on the basis of 6 per cent. Private enterprise—some of these contractors included—may put up houses and rent them for a trifle less than the Government is charging, and then the Government would be at a disadvantage.

Mr. HARDING. The Senator does not pretend to say that Congress could not provide the necessary relief.

Mr. SWANSON. It would have to be delayed, and in the meantime the houses are all empty. You fix a specific basis that you can not reduce under any circumstances. Now, I say I am satisfied that they are going to charge a fair rent. The man who will administer the law made that a part of his statement. He has no authority under this law to rent them free or to give them to anybody.

Mr. LODGE. Has he not?

Mr. SWANSON. No; I do not see where he has.

Mr. LODGE. There is nothing to prevent his giving them away.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator wants to put in there a provision that he can not give them rent free, I shall be very glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. HARDING. Does the Senator from Virginia advocate an expenditure of $110,000,000 on a housing program without a single specification as to what will be charged for the occupancy of these houses?

Mr. SWANSON. I do. Congress can not make it specific. If you make the rent 6 per cent of the cost, and some one else were to go there and offer houses at $1 a year less, or $2, or $3, you could not meet it. If the Government is going into this busin —, it has to go into it to be able to meet conditions like other people. I do not think it would be wise. There is no purpose to give these buildings free. I have no objection to any amendment that will require them to charge a reasonable rent. There is no purpose to do anything but charge a reasonable rent; but any specific sum which will leave the Government at the mercy of anybody who might want to interfere with it later, it seems to me, would be very unwise.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, let me see if I can emphasize the point I am trying to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. HARDING. I want to make my point a little more clear. The Government calls on the young men of the country to go into the trenches abroad, subjects them to every danger incident to warfare, requires them to suffer every hardship of camp and field, and pays them the mere nominal sum of a dollar per day. In our war preparation activities at home, in the shipyards, and in the munitions plants we are paying the largest wage ever known in the history of the world.

Why, Mr. President, only yesterday a great captain of industry in the shipbuilding line told me that under present conditions they had many a gang of riveters in their plant earning approximately $80 per day. A gang of riveters consists of three men, and the payment is 30, 30, and 40 per cent. That is, of course, the top notch, but it is a very exceptional rate of compensation. When the rate is fixed by the hour the workmen in these plants are getting on an average of $5 to $8 per day. I am not objecting so much to that; that is due to a condition under which we are living at this time, but to me it is perfectly preposterous and utterly unfair that we should ask the young men subject to draft to live as best they can on the battle field or billeted in barns and sheds on the battle fields of France, and then propose in this country to spend $110,000,000 on houses, houses to be built under a program of more or less idealism, and not protect the Government with a requirement of a reasonable rental for that property.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is mistaken about the houses being built on any basis of idealism.

Mr. HARDING. Well, Mr. President, I may be mistaken, but it happens, in my capacity as a Member of this body, that I have come in contact with a number of the builders of this country. There are a great many concerns that are engaged in the industry of building so-called temporary housing, and I speak only the plain truth when I say that every institution in this country engaged in temporary housing construction has been turned down with a wave of the hand, and there is little or no housing program under consideration that is not designed to be permanent in character.

I do not want to be misconstrued. I am in favor of this construction program. I am inclined to think it is a very pressing necessity, and nobody regrets so much as I do that the jealousies of the departments and the conflicts of authority here in Washington have delayed this program already 90 days. It seems to me if we are going to meet an emergency, 90 days is a pretty precious lot of time to have had wasted.

Now, we are going to be confronted by another difficulty. There will be 200, if not more, communities in the United States asking for parts of this appropriation. You can not blame the community. Very generally it is the adopted policy to get what you can "while the getting is good," and every community in the United States has the impression that here is a Federal Treasury of endless resources. From my own State there have been committees in Washington already, from communities scarcely intimately associated with war production, though they have activities in their midst which have brought their working forces beyond their capacity to house. If I could fix the policy of this bill, such a community might reasonably be loaned money to undertake a building program, but I would not spend one dollar of money directly on Government account, because by loaning the funds needed you would put the responsibility on the community.

Mr. President, in conclusion—and I had not thought to talk so long as this—the actual truth about this situation is that with this emergency of the Government confronting us we have had the advent of the dreamer. I have no desire to discredit anybody, but I know that the 60 or 90 days' delay up to this time has been due entirely to the conflict between the dreamers and the practical men on the Shipping Board.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is there anything in the other appropriation to justify any such course? Was it not a practical proposition that the Shipping Board should have put up houses where they were needed to house men at shipbuilding plants?

Mr. HARDING. The Senator is quite correct in his inquiry, but it grew out of this situation: As the Senator from Georgia will understand, connected with the Council of National Defense there was a branch——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What has the Council of National Defense got to do with it?

Mr. HARDING. If the Senator will allow me, I will make it as clear as possible.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Thank you. I did not mean to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HARDING. Connected with the Council of National Defense there was the department given to this particular problem long before any appropriation had been made for the construction of houses, and that department had gone ahead and worked out its program. They had fashioned a plan of Federal housing throughout the country which was one step further toward the Utopia that is aimed at. When the Shipping Board undertook to follow out a practical program of expedited building there was instantly a conflict, and it was that conflict which resulted in nothing having been done thus far.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What did the Council of National Defense have to do with it? Did we not by legislative enactment put the money in charge of the Shipping Board without any reference to anybody else with the instruction that they should go ahead and do it?

Mr. HARDING. I have very great respect for the Senator from Georgia, and I do not want to subject myself to the suspicion of saying something that might just as well be omitted at this time, but it may indicate the trend of my thought if I suggest that when this conflict arose as to who should have this program in charge prayers and protests went beyond the shipping organization, and there was an involved conflict that paralyzed the program, and this measure is designed in large part to straighten out the tangle.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to ask if that paralysis still continues?

Mr. HARDING. I think so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has not the money appropriated to the Shipping Board been used? If not, why should we not in this bill revoke the appropriation heretofore given?

Mr. HARDING. I can only assume to explain to Senators that there has been a conflict as to who should be in authority in dealing with this great program. The Shipping Board has been inclined to surrender because of the controversy raised, and it is assumed that as soon as this bill passes and the Department of Labor is put in authority the entire expenditure will be made under the authority of the Department of Labor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. How can that be done unless this bill is amended so as to transfer the authority given in the former act from the Emergency Fleet Corporation to the Department of Labor?

Mr. HARDING. There is no reason why the same constructive authority under the Department of Labor should not receive the commission from the Shipping Board to build houses, and that is the intention.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It will be done in the name of the Emergency Fleet Corporation?

Mr. HARDING. It will be done in the name of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, but under the same directing head. It is very well known that Mr. Flannery, who has charge of the program, and is doing, I have no doubt, a very difficult and arduous task, is to have charge of the emergency fleet construction as well as the construction which is provided for in this bill.

Mr. SWANSON. No.

Mr. HARDING. Perhaps the Senator questions my statement. I am willing to let it stand.

Mr. SWANSON. It will be administered by the administrative board of five. Mr. Eidlitz——

Mr. HARDING. I hope the Senator will not misconstrue my remark. I did not criticize Mr. Flannery. In mentioning his name I had no thought of aspersing him in any way. The Senator is quite correct about a board. I have had the pleasure of meeting a number of the members of this board, and they are fine men. I think perhaps they are a little more tinctured sometimes with idealism than with practical ideas, but no matter whether there is a board or not the gentleman whom I have named is the executive head who is to push this program to completion, and I am not sure but it is a wise thing that he is the head.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator means Mr. Flannery?

Mr. HARDING. I mean Mr. Flannery.

Mr. SWANSON. The evidence was exactly the reverse, so far as this appropriation is concerned. I understand that Mr. Flannery has charge of the appropriation for the Shipping Board. He is the executive head for that, but this is entirely different. Mr. Eidlitz, we were informed, would be the director here.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. Eidlitz has been connected with the enterprise from either point of view, and Mr. Eidlitz is a very capable man, let it be said.

Mr. SWANSON. These two points are settled. I understand it has nothing to do with the $50,000,000 that has been authorized for the Shipping Board. They will expend that. If they want any of this money, their $50,000,000 not being sufficient for the shipping program, they will be able to get it; but it will be administered differently, by different authority, and mainly for arsenals, navy yards, and where munitions are being produced.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, we have drifted to a line of discussion that is really unimportant and has nothing to do with the pending question. I certainly have no desire to delay the passage of the bill. I would like to have the Senator from Virginia consent to some basis of rental of these properties which are to be owned by the Government, and we can let the industrial concerns that build with Government aid reasonably fix the rental on their own account. I think the bill ought to have some provision of that kind. I am perfectly willing that it shall be the minimum sum that is consistent with reasonable, fair treatment of the taxpayers of the country. If the Senator from Virginia will accept a 5 or 6 per cent basis, I would much prefer to put that in the bill than to leave it a matter wholly in the discretion of the head of the Department of Labor.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] regarding the importance of providing for some fixed compensation to the Government for the occupancy of these structures is very sound and very necessary for the protection of governmental interests. The objections which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] suggested to that program might be of importance were it not for the other provisions of the bill. That provision is subdivision (c) on page 3 under which power to rent is given and it gives also power to exchange, sell, and convey such lands, houses, and so forth. Of course, if the demand for the buildings to be constructed out of this fund should be impaired by the competition of private owners offering similar accommodations for less money, then the authorities might easily sell, convey, or exchange these properties and by that means do away with the possible dilemma that the Government would find itself in.

It certainly would seem to the average man that in appropriations and bills of this sort that are designed to furnish men with necessities that they can not furnish themselves with because of the absence of those necessities, when the Government steps in and makes provision for their erection to the end that shelter may be given to men working for the Government, some compensation of a fixed character should be made to that government for the protection as well of those who are to administer the law as for the protection of the Government.

I think it would be a great protection to those who are to administer this law if the law should fix some definite amount by way of percentage which they are to exact from the people who occupy the property, as a protection to them. Otherwise, many influences can be and probably will be brought to bear either to secure the houses, or some of them, for a nominal compensation or for nothing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator if he understands what class of houses are to be built not only under this bill but under the provisions of the appropriation of $50,000,000 heretofore made for the Shipping Board.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not informed. I have no doubt the distinguished Senator who has charge of the bill and is familiar with the hearings can give the Senator from Utah some information on that subject.

My impression is, however, that unless the idealism to which the Senator from Ohio referred enters largely into the problem they will be built of a practical character, as practical as possible consistent with the needs for haste in construction. What these people need, what they must have, are comfortable lodgings, not extraordinarily comfortable, not luxurious, but good, sound, well ventilated, and easily heated structures. That is what they ought to be.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator, but I have heard rumors from several sources that the question of the kind of houses to be built under the appropriation already made by the act of March 1 was the subject of discussion, and it took about 45 days before they could agree upon the kind of houses or the material which should go into the houses.

Mr. THOMAS. Can the Senator say that they have yet agreed?

Mr. SMOOT. Only by rumor. I can not say that they have really agreed upon the plan or the kind of houses. The Senator from Virginia can perhaps state positively.

Mr. SWANSON. This bill is intended, first, to get the speedy construction of houses to meet an emergency which exists to-day. I am going to discharge my responsibility to the country and to the Senate and state the facts as they were detailed to me. If the Senate does not want to pass the bill, it is for the Senate to determine. From information given to the committee, from the facts detailed that any Senator can read, it is useless to have any soldiers in France if we can not make munitions and guns for them, and it is useless to have a Navy unless we can construct ships. It is utterly impossible to get people to go there and sleep on the ground, and they ought to have houses. They have tried individually to get them to construct these houses. The blame at the plant establishments in the past for not having these houses has been laid on the employees. We know what the department states. Any Senator can read it. It is not a mere wild scheme. There have been two surveys. We know how work has been delayed. They need temporary houses, where when peace comes and contracts are completed the population will disappear possibly one-half or one-third. They expect to put up temporary buildings there, because if they put up permanent buildings they would not be occupied and they could not sell them for as much as they would get for the temporary buildings. At the navy yards in Philadelphia, Mare Island, Puget Sound, Charleston, Boston, and elsewhere they can put up permanent buildings, and the employees are willing now to buy them at a reasonable price and pay so much per month for them, if the Government will furnish the money for the construction. At those places they expect to put up permanent buildings.

Some people want nothing but permanent buildings put up. That difficulty the committee met in getting at the facts. Others wanted nothing but temporary buildings put up. The department says it ought to be left discretionary, according to the conditions. At some of the places where they have munition plants, and where the population will not be one-third when peace comes what it is to-day, to put up permanent buildings would be a waste of money. To attempt to put up temporary buildings where you could not get temporary buildings on account of building permits, at Boston, Philadelphia, Puget Sound, Mare Island, Norfolk, Newport News, and other places, would be waste of money. Consequently we sought to leave it discretionary with those who administer the law to determine in each locality whether there should be temporary buildings or permanent buildings constructed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I have been very much interested in what the Senator from Virginia states with regard to leaving the character of the structure to the discretion of the department. He has stated that in some instances they want temporary structures and in other instances they want permanent structures. But the committee has seen fit to strike out the very provision in the bill which would permit the building of temporary structures. On page 4, line 6, the committee propose to strike out the following:

Provided, That houses erected by the Government under the authority of this act shall be of only a temporary character whenever it is practicable.

That is to be stricken out, and necessarily the construction which is to be placed on this language is that nothing but permanent buildings shall be put up.

Now, just one moment further. This matter was called to my attention some days ago when a building-material man came to see me to urge me to vote to strike out this temporary proposition. He was interested more in the building material which he was making than he was either in the welfare of these men or in the welfare of the Government, and I very plainly told him so. I think he came into my office with a more friendly feeling toward me than he had when he left. It seems to me if the Senator desires to carry out the thought he has expressed this committee amendment ought to be defeated.

Mr. SWANSON. Where did the Senator read?

Mr. POMERENE. On page 4——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not care to yield the floor for a general discussion. I am always willing, of course, to yield for a question or for important suggestions, and they have been made thus far by the three distinguished gentlemen to whom I have successively yielded. I think the answer made by the Senator from Virginia to the question of the Senator from Utah is far more ample and satisfactory than I could have made it, and I hope it has given him the information he desired.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I was going to follow up my question after it had been answered by the Senator from Virginia with the very question that was asked by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SWANSON. Let me answer it.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly; but I hope the Senator will not take too much time.

Mr. SWANSON. I will not take much time. This is the provision the Senator from Ohio objects to being eliminated:

Provided, That houses erected by the Government under the authority of this act shall be of only a temporary character whenever it is practicable.

You can build a temporary building anywhere. They who administer this law said it did not leave enough discretion between temporary and permanent buildings. I have no objection to that being put in. The committee fixed it so that the discretion was left entirely that way, and they said they could exercise it when they would feel under the circumstances that they ought to give preference to temporary buildings.

Mr. CURTIS. May I suggest also it was stated in some places if they would erect permanent buildings there were parties ready to buy them without cost to the Government.

Mr. SWANSON. Without cost to the Government. If they build any in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or Mare Island, they could sell them for what they paid out at once. Some wanted to have nothing but permanent buildings at once; others wanted nothing but temporary buildings. We reached the conclusion that the best way was to leave the discretion to those who administer the law. That is the reason why we eliminated that provision.

Mr. THOMAS. I am very glad these inquiries have been made and that they have developed the discussion which has followed. I quite agree with the Senator from Ohio that the elimination of this House provision strips the administrative authorities under the bill of power to erect temporary structures, and I have no doubt that there are a great many material men in the country fitly represented by the gentleman who called upon the Senator from Ohio who would view the elimination of that phrase from the measure with a great deal of satisfactory complacency. I am sorry, Mr. President, that, as the Senator from Utah says, the Government will not in the long run get 50 per cent of this appropriation back, whether the buildings are temporary or whether they are permanent.

I am sorry the Senator from Virginia has left the Chamber, because I wanted to express my regret that he exhibits so much feeling toward Senators who are inclined to make suggestions regarding the bill. He says that we can pass it or not; that he is doing his duty; and if we do not want to pass it we can reject it, and by that means very seriously interfere with the Government's program in the production of munitions and other equipment necessary for the purposes of the Government in this war.

Mr. President, I am just as anxious to stay here and do my part in the enactment of all needed legislation as my friend the Senator from Virginia can be. I do not think that Senators who have called attention to what seemed to be defects in the bill should be even indirectly charged with attempting to delay the program. We are here, Mr. President, for the purpose of acting intelligently upon these vastly important measures, and it is impossible for us to do so unless we examine the measures which we are to approve and ascertain whether they are perfect, or as nearly perfect as they can be made.

I do not believe that this bill is in the shape it ought to be in before we reach a final vote upon it. I do not think that we are wasting time when we are suggesting and attempting to secure safeguards to the Government wherein and whereunder the people who are obliged in the long run to pay this money may feel that their interests have been to a certain degree subserved.

We have been spending money since this war broke out with a prodigality that is without precedent in history. We have necessarily enacted measures carrying large appropriations with extreme and sometimes with, it seems to me, undue haste. We have felt, as the Senator from Virginia has expressed himself, that such measures are absolutely necessary to meet the exigencies of the Government. But I think, Mr. President, when we turn in retrospect to some of the legislation we have enacted, it might have been better if we had proceeded more deliberately, and by that means made improvements upon the proposed legislation which would in very truth have expedited the war program.

At the behest of the War Department Congress at the last session willingly and promptly appropriated $647,000,000 for an aircraft program. That is an enormous sum of money. It is 50 per cent in excess of what it cost to build the Panama Canal. The money has either been expended or liabilities have been assumed for it and for a great many millions more. Had Congress at that time placed in that measure details of management whereby the money could have been spent, I say without offense, more intelligently and more effectively, we would have had more machines upon the front to-day than we possess, and instead of delaying it would have facilitated and expedited the program.

So, I think, here in appropriating this comparatively small sum of money, $50,000,000, it behooves us to see whether we can not—in the best of spirit and, I am sure, with as patriotic a purpose as animates the Senator from Virginia—enable the consideration of suggestions that seem to be quite essential to make the bill workable, to perfect it, and to safeguard, as far as it may be, the interest of the Government to do so.

While I am on my feet, Mr. President, and because it will therefore be unnecessary for me to take the floor again on this same subject, I want to refer for a moment to another amendment on the same page. I refer for just a moment to a somewhat remarkable amendment to section b on page 2, and I beg to assure the Senator that when I say "somewhat remarkable" I do not mean by any means to infer that it may not be necessary, as it undoubtedly was to the committee, for they thought it to be essential or they would not have put it in the bill:

Provided, That the furnishings in private dwellings, colleges, museums, libraries, State or municipal buildings, shall not be acquired except by contract.

I wonder whether it is possible that under this bill we are going to authorize a Federal official to take possession of State and municipal buildings by contract, or if not by contract, then by a mandate of a United States district judge. I wonder, too, why the furnishings in a museum should be made the subject of a contract under this bill, and if the furnishings are to be used for its purposes? In other words, what has this bill to do with museums or libraries or State and municipal buildings? I understand this money is intended to be used primarily for the erection of structures in the vicinity of workshops, arsenals, navy yards, and so forth, where large numbers of men are employed and who need this shelter.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado while he is speaking about that amendment, in which I take some little interest myself, whether he does not see that that is to enable this board to take possession of museums, picture galleries, and libraries for the purpose of inexpensively housing workmen at navy yards, and that books and pictures and statues and things of that sort might be very useful for war-like purposes?

Mr. THOMAS. Well, there is always a gentleness about the Senator's sarcasm which makes it all the more delightful.

Mr. SWANSON. As the Senator from Colorado has asked me a question, I hope he will permit me to answer it.

Mr. THOMAS. The question was asked the Senator having charge of the bill, and I will yield for an answer.

Mr. SWANSON. The amendment was offered, I am sorry to say, by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], who is not present. I voted against the amendment in committee and reserved the right to vote against it when the bill came into the Senate. Several members of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee were very apprehensive that this power would be exercised in a very exacting and oppressive way, and consequently they wanted to put around it all possible restrictions. Some of them were apprehensive that colleges, museums, libraries, and State and municipal buildings might be seized under this provision for the purpose of furnishing residences for employees in munition plants. Consequently the amendment was offered so as to make it perfectly clear that under no circumstances could that be done. I thought there was no necessity for it, and I now feel that the amendment was put in merely because there was some complaint on the part of Senators that one of these officers might seize private furniture in Washington and requisition it. To eliminate that possibility the amendment was inserted that under no circumstances should the furnishings or pictures of any private individual be seized.

The latter part of the amendment was in connection with private homes, which, it seems to me, was a very substantial amendment. That amendment makes it impossible to take for public purposes a private home unless the necessity for it has been determined by the circuit court.

Mr. THOMAS. The amendment does not say that.

Mr. SWANSON. That is what was intended by the Senator from Delaware. I wish the Senator were present. We may send for him, as this is his amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The question of furnishings, of course, could be dealt with simply by striking the word out of the bill. There is no earthly reason for giving authority to take furnishings. I think if that were dropped out of the bill the first part of the amendment to which the Senator from Colorado called attention—and I do not wonder that his sense of humor was aroused by it—would be needless.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the insertion of the proviso, however meritorious the reason for it, would, if it be enacted into the measure, only serve to emphasize the danger which it seeks to avoid.

The Senator from Virginia has referred to the fact that no property can be taken in the absence of contract except by an order of a Federal court. I think he is mistaken in that, because that is part of the proviso; and the proviso refers to the furnishings in dwellings and other structures, and not to the structures themselves nor to the land. It reads:

Provided, That the furnishings * * * shall not be acquired * * * nor shall any occupied dwelling be taken under the powers in this act given except by contract unless the necessity thereof shall be determined.

Mr. SWANSON. I think this amendment is improperly written. I think the words "colleges, museums, libraries," were intended to follow the words "private dwellings."

Mr. THOMAS. I think it would have been much better to have eliminated it entirely.

Mr. SWANSON. I thought so. It was written very hurriedly; but I have no doubt it was intended to follow the word "dwellings."

Mr. THOMAS. The first part of the subsection, which is not printed in italics, being a part of the House bill, reads:

(b) To purchase, lease, requisition, or acquire by condemnation or otherwise any improved or unimproved land, or any right, title, or interest therein on which such houses, buildings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, and parts thereof, have been or may be constructed.

That involves a power which is too broad, in my judgment, to successfully pass the test of a constitutional challenge in the courts, and if it is passed as a part of the bill it may delay and hamper, instead of facilitating, the building program. We have no power, Mr. President, to take, by condemnation or otherwise, "community facilities"; at least I do not think we have. A courthouse in a county in the State of Ohio or Colorado is a community facility; so is the State capitol; so are other State buildings, whether they be used for criminal or educational purposes. They are part of the appurtenances of the local sovereignty, and as such are immune from condemnation or from seizure by any Federal authority, except perhaps in cases of dire resort wherever the life of the Nation may be at stake.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. If I am not incorrectly informed, the Government actually has taken a large schoolhouse in Newark, N. J., and turned the children out of it.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, Mr. President, the local authorities, doubtless inspired by that spirit of patriotism which is always to be commended, consented or yielded, or at least submitted without making any protest. I very much doubt whether the Government has that power eo ipso, unless it be, as I have said, a case of the direst emergency and a crisis far beyond anything that we have encountered so far since our declaration of war.

The proviso, however, specifically recognizes the right to take museums, to take colleges, to take libraries, to take State buildings, and to take municipal buildings. I can not for the life of me conceive, if this is necessary, why it is necessary to build the houses. All the Government has to do is to take possession, to invest itself with the custody of buildings which are already in existence in the cities where these works are going on and turn the community out to shift for themselves. It is incredible to me that any exigency can arise in a building program making it necessary to give authority so extensive and so dangerous as is involved in this subsection, and I hope it will be stricken out.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. Let us proceed with the bill by sections.

Mr. HARDING. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 8, after the word "money," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That no lease of any Government property made available under the provisions of this act shall be made at a rate of less than 6 per cent on the actual cost of the property rented.

Mr. SWANSON. I think that for consideration in conference it might be very well to have that proviso inserted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. May I ask the Senator from Ohio to which cost does that refer—what it has cost the Government or what it has cost the owner?

Mr. HARDING. The cost to the Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I did not catch the reading of the first part of the amendment, and I will ask that it be again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again read Mr. HARDING's amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I take it that would mean that if the Government acquires the title to land, puts up a building, and undertakes to rent it, that the amount of rent must be equal to the rate of 6 per cent on the actual cost of the building without regard to the land.

Mr. HARDING. I should think so. The thought is that the Government is not trying to make any money out of this, but is trying to fix a basis of rental.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not rise to object to the amendment.

Mr. HARDING. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. HARDING. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] suggests that the amendment would more fittingly be inserted after the word "determine," in line 6, ahead of the proviso having to do with the sale and conveyance. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Virginia, I will make that change. It merely changes the location of the proviso early in the paragraph.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to that amendment being adopted, although I have not thoroughly looked into it.

Mr. FLETCHER. As I now understand, the committee amendments have not been disposed of.

Mr. SWANSON. They have not been; but I have yielded to this amendment, as the Senator offering it must leave the Chamber in a few minutes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not want to act on the amendment now, as I desire to look into it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, it seems to me the point suggested by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] raises a very pertinent inquiry. I do not think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] understood or heard it.

Mr. HARDING. Yes; I understood it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator from Ohio if the object is to get not less than 6 per cent on the money invested by the Government, why should not the cost of the land upon which the building stands be included in the computation?

Mr. HARDING. If the land is acquired by purchase that enters into the cost.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the Senator's amendment says the cost of the building, and under the provisions of the bill in several places the land can be condemned separately.

Mr. HARDING. But the amendment does not say "no lease of any Government building," but "no lease of any Government property."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought it said "6 per cent on the cost of the building."

Mr. FLETCHER. I understood that the basis was the cost of the building.

Mr. HARDING. That is not the intention at all. It is my intention to cover the actual cost to the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. The amendment means 6 per cent on the cost of the premises.

Mr. HARDING. Exactly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator is correct. The amendment uses the word "property" and not "building."

Mr. HARDING. Do I understand the Senator from Virginia to accept the amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. I have no authority to accept it, but I have no objection to its being adopted. It may be considered further in conference. If it appears that it is a desirable amendment and will not interfere with the operation of the bill, I should be glad to see it finally adopted. I am disposed to think that a reasonable rental ought to be fixed, but I do not know what the rate should be. I do not believe that these buildings ought to be permitted to be given to anybody except on a fair and reasonable rental.

Mr. HARDING. Does the Senator object to an expression of the Senate at this time on the amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HARDING. Then, I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the Senator one more question about the amendment, and then I will be ready to vote upon it. Suppose the property rented is one floor of a tenement, how can it be determined what it cost? Suppose there is a tenement house of 8 or 10 stories high built upon a piece of land?

Mr. HARDING. I assume, Mr. President, in answer to the question of the Senator, that if the Government builds an apartment house, as is intended in many instances, it would first ascertain the cost of the building and the land and fix a rental for the apartments just as any private owner would do in leasing property of that kind.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They will have to apportion the cost, then, on their own judgment?

Mr. HARDING. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER obtained the floor.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will permit me, I wish to make a suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. I am going to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he reduce the rate to 5 per cent. I can readily appreciate that in some circumstances it may cost 100 per cent more to build houses this year than it did two years ago; and if that is the case, then 6 per cent upon the investment of the Government might be too high, and perhaps some of this property would be vacant, the Government not being able to rent it at all in competition with other property that might have been built a year or two ago. If the Senator is agreeable, I would prefer to have a lower rate, and I would make it even as low as 4 per cent. In that event, we would assure some return to the Government upon its investment, when under a higher rate perhaps that would be difficult.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, that demonstrates what I have all along contended in connection with details of this kind, and that is that it would be better to leave such questions to the board which is to administer the act. If it is stated that a normal rent shall be required, if it is specifically stated that nobody will get rent free, I think it can be left to the board to determine whether the rate shall be fixed at 4, 5, or 6 per cent.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I think the remarks of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] tend to emphasize the very necessity of putting such a provision in this bill. I do not believe anyone can seriously dispute the fact that a 6 per cent rental on the actual cost of the property is a very limited rental, taking no consideration whatever of wear and tear and depreciation, and is certainly compensated for to those who occupy the property by the enormous increase in wages paid in the congested industrial localities.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I believe we will find that, unless some provision against giving away or renting for a nominal sum is inserted in this bill, many of these tenements and apartments will be actually given away or rented for a nominal sum.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, does the Senator from Ohio contemplate that this property is not to be subject to taxation? It seems to me there might be a difference. In some localities the property will be within the corporate limits of some town and will be subject then to municipal, State, and county taxes, while in another locality the property might be outside of the corporate limits. If it is Government property, however, I presume it will not be subject to any taxation.

Mr. HARDING. If it is not Government property, the Secretary of Labor will have nothing to do with the rental rates.

Mr. FLETCHER. He would have if he operates through a corporation. There are different plans which might be followed.

Mr. HARDING. I quite agree; but if the Senator from Florida is of the opinion that a corporation is going to undertake this building enterprise it will want to conduct the enterprise in a highly satisfactory manner. I hope the work can be done along that line, but so long as the title of the property is vested in the Government there are no taxes to be considered.

Mr. FLETCHER. In that event there are no taxes to be considered, so that item would not enter into the calculation. If the Senator desires a vote on his amendment now, I will yield.

Mr. HARDING. I should like to have an expression of the Senate upon it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I rose to make some observations in connection with the bill generally, including that subject; but as the Senator seems anxious to have a vote on his amendment, I am perfectly willing to submit to that and take the matter up later in connection with other phases of the bill.

Mr. HARDING. I ask the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CALDER. I move to amend by striking out "six" and inserting "four."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have not said anything in regard to this matter; but I want to ask the Senator from New York if he does not think that the wages of labor have increased more than 5 per cent in the last year and during this war? The Senator from Ohio has made a statement of the wages paid to three riveters, who received as high, I think he said, as $80 a day—two men, each getting 30 per cent, and the third 40 per cent of that amount. Does not the Senator feel that men who receive those wages—and other wages run all the way from $5 to $8 a day at the very lowest—can afford to pay 6 per cent upon the cost of the construction of a building and the premises on which it is erected?

Mr. CALDER. I have no doubt that in most cases the rentals of these houses or apartments, or whatever they may be, will be based upon 10 per cent of their cost. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that no man can now afford to build and rent a house at a profit for much less than 10 per cent, and get back the interest upon his money. But these houses may be built in some out of the way place, where in some trades men have not had their pay raised 100 per cent, as they have in the ship-building industry. I simply suggest a rate of 4 per cent to assure some rental for the property, although I hope that in most cases the rate will be at least 10 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator must remember that this bill is designed to house industrial workers and employees engaged in producing something that the Government needs. Does the Senator know of an instance where wages have not increased at least 100 per cent in any of those lines?

Mr. CALDER. I can not specify any particular industry, Mr. President, but I have no doubt that there are many plants engaged in Government business at this time where the increase has not been 100 per cent. Of the shipping trade it is no doubt true that the increase has been large. I am hopeful that those in charge of this matter will get at least 10 per cent on the cost, but I think there may be circumstances when, in order to get any return at all, it will be necessary to have a lower rental than the rate proposed.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator, of course, will recognize that it will cost possibly as much as 2 per cent for administration purposes, so that the Government will not be getting 6 per cent on its investment by any means; it would get probably 4 per cent at the rate fixed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to strike out "six" and insert "four."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida allow me to offer an amendment to this same section?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. SWANSON. We have a unanimous-consent agreement that the consideration of the bill shall proceed by paragraphs, and I think we will make better progress if we proceed in that way and perfect the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The section to which I have offered the amendment has already been amended, and I should like to offer the amendment now.

Mr. SWANSON. Very well; I yield to the Senator to offer his amendment now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest that the amendment just adopted deals with leases. I propose an amendment to the same paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 8, it is proposed to add the following:

Provided further, That in no case shall any property hereby acquired be given away nor shall permanent structures be sold for less than 75 per cent of their cost, nor shall rents be furnished free; but the rental charges shall be reasonable and just as between the employees and the Government, but not less than 6 per cent of the capital invested.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator desires that amendment to lie on the table to be taken up when it is reached.

With regard to the bill generally, it seems to me that we are obliged in this situation to enact some legislation along this line. Some of these amendments may not be very desirable; but undoubtedly there are instances where important public work is not proceeding as rapidly as it would proceed if there were housing accommodations. As the Senator from Ohio mentioned, a question that came before the Commerce Committee in connection with the shipyards, perhaps I am at liberty to say, merely by way of illustration, that when Mr. Homer Ferguson was before the committee, Mr. Ferguson being in charge of the building of ships at Newport News, both for the Navy and for the Emergency Fleet Corporation, an experienced shipbuilder and a man of high character, who knows the business, we inquired of him what he could do or what the committee could do or what Congress could do or what anybody could do to speed up the production of ships? He said, "You can do one thing for us at Newport News, and that is give us more men." "Well, can you get the men?" "Yes; we can get the labor." "How much more?" "We could use 3,000 more men if we had a place to house them." "Then, the difficulty is housing?" "Yes." "If you can provide houses so that these 3,000 additional men can be put to work in the shipyards, we can speed the output of the yards." Of course, it is quite an important matter. That is a big yard; they have many contracts, and they are responsible builders. We at once said, "We will take hold of that situation"; and the Senator from Ohio and myself were appointed a committee to call upon the Shipping Board to see if we could not find a way so that these 3,000 additional workmen could be provided for and set to work building ships at Newport News.

We found very cordial cooperation on the part of the Shipping Board once the situation was fully made known to them; arrangements were made under some sort of plan—I do not know just what the details of the plan were—even before the act of March 1 was passed, whereby the houses were to be promptly constructed. There are conditions, such as those at Newport News, which I have no doubt were accurately stated by Mr. Ferguson to the committee, in other yards and with reference to munition plants, navy yards, arsenals, and so forth, which can only be met by some similar arrangement. In the great industrial centers in and about these particular kinds of plants, manufacturing munitions and ships and armament, there is great congestion. Rents are very high, in the first place, sometimes almost prohibitive; and then, in the next place, buildings or rooms can not be had at all to accommodate the men who could be employed. Therefore I think that this legislation is demanded. The conditions are such that we ought to pass it.

Upon looking into the matter with reference to the housing facilities for the shipyards we found, as the Senator from Ohio has said, various theories about how they should be provided. There were various committees and boards handling the matter which had been engaged upon it for months, and we were invited into conference in reference to the matter. Finally I said, "We can not wait upon your developing some plan that you have been at work on for months and months in the past; there is need for ships now; there is need for housing in order that men can be had, and men can be had if the houses are built and can go to work. A man can build just so many tons of ships. You have got to have the men before you can turn out the ships, and we can not wait for some board or commission to develop some plan that may be agreed upon to meet the needs of the Army and Navy and the Shipping Board and that sort of thing. We must have this business attended to now."

Thereupon we introduced a bill, which Congress passed, authorizing the Emergency Fleet Corporation of the Shipping Board to proceed with the erection of houses to meet the requirements of those yards actually engaged in building ships. There is no conflict at all between that legislation and this. That fund will be handled entirely, as the act provides, by the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation, and will be devoted entirely for meeting the requirements of the shipyards that are building merchant ships.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to know, Mr. President, if the Senator can tell us why it is the Shipping Board has not been building the houses? It has been stated here that they have not built the houses because they have been interfered with by the Department of Labor.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no direct information as to any interference; in fact, I never heard of it until it was mentioned here to-day. My understanding is that they have made arrangements for building houses at Newport News and at Sparrows Point, and perhaps at Newark. They are taking hold of the situation at Hog Island. That was another place where houses were needed. They have been interfered with in some instances, I will say to the Senator, according to my information, by a sort of disposition to overreach, to charge excessive prices for land and for putting up buildings. The price of construction has interfered somewhat; people have not been so patriotic as to be willing to put up these buildings unless they made quite a profit on them. I think that has had something to do with it. That is my opinion. The Shipping Board have been unwilling to let contracts at exorbitant figures or to buy land at exorbitant prices, and it has been a matter of getting down to some reasonable basis.

Mr. KELLOGG. One further question. Did not the Shipping Board have power to go ahead and build these houses itself if contractors did not wish to undertake the work at reasonable prices; and if it did, why has it not been done?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think they had such power, but the Senator will understand that that is not the primary business of the Shipping Board, and they can not do too many things. They have quite a great many things to do that are perhaps more important than that. If that can be done in another way, it is best to do it in another way. I think they have proceeded very considerably to provide those accommodations in at least three of the pressing yards. I have received just to-day a clipping from the Philadelphia Press of April 16, which contains this statement:

> No change has occurred on the status of the Elmwood housing project, in the fortieth ward, now held under consideration by the housing commission of the Emergency Fleet Corporation at Washington. Admiral Bowles, however, said yesterday he expects to make an announcement about the matter before the end of this week which, it is believed, will finally dispose of further delay of the project.

It would seem from that as if they are about to get together there in Philadelphia for the Hog Island plant.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to say that within my knowledge at Brunswick, Ga., an offer entirely satisfactory for the construction of steel ships was made, but the point was made that the housing was not already there; that there were not ample houses there to take care of the hands. It was estimated that it would cost $750,000 to furnish the houses. Locally the people raised $250,000 of the money, including the land, and tendered it to the Shipping Board, and they said they would not put up a dollar, and they refused to do anything. Then the company said that they would raise all the money, and the Shipping Board said it was too late, and they did not care to consider it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Apparently the Shipping Board has not done anything, then, toward acquiring houses at Brunswick.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They objected to Brunswick as a shipbuilding point solely upon the ground that it was only a place of 20,000 inhabitants, that did not already have the houses; and then, after the local people raised $250,000 toward putting them up, including the land, they still objected. That has happened within the past 30 or 60 days.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then what is the use of making another appropriation of $60,000,000 if they do not spend the appropriation they have?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, this appropriation does not go to the Shipping Board or Emergency Fleet Corporation at all. They have nothing to do with it. As I said a while ago, I think there is no conflict between this bill and the act of March 1, which gives the Emergency Fleet Corporation authority to purchase, lease, and construct buildings for the accommodation of the workmen in the shipyards. That act is confined to shipyards. This one is not confined to shipyards. In fact, it specifies the Army, the Navy, and the munition manufactories. There will be places, I will say, like Newport News—and other places might be mentioned, like Newark, N. J., and perhaps Sparrows Point—where there will be the need of workmen both in the building of merchant ships and in the construction of ships for the Navy; and there may be places where there will be Army munitions to be gotten out, also. I was going to say that in those places where there is need of cooperation between the Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Navy and the Army for the purpose of providing housing facilities for the workmen in all the enterprises the Shipping Board would be consulted, of course, and there would be an arrangement reached between these three bodies which would meet that situation. They ought to cooperate in those instances, but those are not the majority of instances.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I will state that Mr. Grace, the president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., appeared before the Military Affairs Committee a few days ago and stated that they had in their employ in producing forgings and ordnance some 27,000 men; that if they had housing facilities for from 4,000 to 6,000 men they could increase the output of the corporation by about 25 per cent, but that to erect the houses necessary to accommodate the number of men I mention it would cost them five or six million dollars, and they can not take it out of their business because of the immense demands that are made upon them.

I want to ask the Senator if he thinks this bill is broad enough to cover a case of this kind: Where the Bethelehem Steel Co. own the land and would be willing to sell the land to the employees could the Government enter into an arrangement with the Bethlehem Steel Co. that would enable them to sell the land to the employees, the Government advancing the money, and taking as security a first lien against the land, the Bethlehem Steel Co. expressing a willingness to take a second lien for the balance of the money? Is this bill broad enough to permit the Government to make such an arrangement as that with any company?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so. I think that is one of the very purposes of the bill. It could be done in this way: The Bethlehem Steel Co. could deed the land to the Government, and then the Government could make the arrangement with the employee, and the employee could secure the Bethlehem Steel Co. by a second mortgage. The title could be vested in the Government under that arrangement. I think that situation would be easily met, and that is one of the purposes of the bill.

Mr. President, I do not feel that we ought to launch here into a great ideal scheme of building "cities beautiful." That is not my idea of what ought to be done under this kind of legislation. I do not think we ought to venture upon an extravagant plan of acquiring grounds, and building them up, and developing them, and dividing them off into lots, and having separate buildings of a permanent character, costing five or six thousand dollars, on each lot.

In the first place, that takes too much time. We need them now, and we have not time to wait upon putting up expensive buildings. In the next place, as the Senator from Virginia says, in many instances these buildings will become vacant after a certain period of time. We all hope, anyhow, that this war is going to end, and in those instances there will be no need for the buildings in many places. In other places they ought to be permanent, and there ought to be latitude left to those who administer the act. As a general proposition, however, my own idea is that these buildings ought to be what we would style temporary structures—that is to say, comfortable, weatherproof, and good enough looking from the outside, painted if they are wood, and constructed in such a way as to provide for the plain, ordinary citizen with a family, but not necessarily surrounded by beautiful parks and gardens, and not put up in a way that will mean an expense of four or five or six thousand dollars to the building.

There was a committee before our Commerce Committee that made a statement to the effect that in Pascagoula, Miss., four-room houses for this purpose can be built for $700 apiece. I do not think a house of that kind could be very well finished for that sum of money. Of course, that is a frame house, of four rooms, for $700. On the other hand, the proposition that the Shipping Board had for building houses at Hog Island was about $4,500 for each house. That is too much. They declined to build houses of that kind, and my information is that they actually bought houses at some $2,800 that were brick houses and good houses, too.

So I do not think this paragraph on page 4, to which the Senator from Ohio has called attention ought to be stricken out of the bill. I think the committee made a mistake, because I think the general idea here ought to be to provide housing facilities to meet the present needs and not with a view of building up permanent settlements and communities and making them too expensive for men who earn their living by their labor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator think the $10,000,000 to be spent in Washington should be simply for temporary construction, to be practically thrown away when the war is over?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should not say that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator really think we can afford to make those houses of a permanent character?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so; because as long as we have any city left in this country I take it Washington will be here, and Washington will grow, undoubtedly, and the buildings here ought not to be, I think, of that temporary character. But there are locations on our coast where there is crowding at present simply because there is an industry there which depends for its life upon the needs of the war. Now, when the war is over that need will disappear, and those communities will not continue to be crowded and many buildings will be vacated; and in those instances I do not think we ought to put up these buildings in an expensive and an extravagant way. That is a matter that ought to be left to the discretion of those who have the administration of the act in hand.

Another provision that the Senator from Colorado mentioned is the feature giving the power to requisition and condemn property. That is a very broad authority, and of course there can be no requisitioning or condemnation unless there is just compensation. The bill ought to provide—I think I shall offer an amendment to that paragraph to that effect—means of determining the just compensation wherever land or buildings are condemned, as we provided in the act of March 1. However, I find that section 3 of the bill covers that. I had overlooked it.

As I say, Mr. President, I believe there is need for this legislation, and I do not believe it conflicts in any way with the act of March 1, which applies to the shipyards; and there is no need for the work authorized by the act of March 1 to be delayed or interfered with by reason of the passage of this act. There are only a few instances where there should be profitably and wisely employed cooperation between the Secretary of Labor under this measure and the Emergency Fleet Corporation under the act of March 1; and those instances are where the navy yards, the merchant shipbuilding yards, and the arsenals, for instance, happen to be at the same place, and each of these enterprises needs houses for its workmen. They ought to cooperate in order to better meet the whole situation in such cases, and I have no doubt they will; but that need not interfere at all with the operations under the act of March 1, nor should the act of March 1 interfere with the work under this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, after the words "Secretary of Labor," it is proposed to insert "under the direction of the President of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator a question right there. On page 1, line 5, the words "local transportation, and other community facilities" appear.

Mr. SWANSON. Those words ought to be eliminated. The committee agreed to recommend the elimination of those words, "local transportation, and other community facilities," wherever they appear in the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They are eliminated from every other place.

Mr. SWANSON. The bill was reported very hurriedly yesterday, and I did not have an opportunity to look it over before it was printed.

Mr. LODGE. Those words ought to come out in line 5, page 1.

Mr. SWANSON. That is right. I ask that that be done.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, after the word "housing," it is proposed to strike out the comma and the words "local transportation, and other community facilities."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. The same language ought to be stricken out of the title; but of course that can not be done until we conclude the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There is a provision on page 7 with regard to amending the title in that way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the word "arsenals," it is proposed to insert "and navy yards," so as to read:

For such industrial workers as are engaged in arsenals and navy yards of the United States—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, before the word "employees," it is proposed to insert the word "also," so as to read:

And also employees of the United States whose duties require them to reside in the District of Columbia.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, so far as this bill relates to the District of Columbia, and perhaps in its entirety, it suggests to my mind the one material and substantial method of relieving the embarrassments of Government employees. I have always contended that increases of salaries in times like these, like increases of wages, only serve to swell the profits of landlords and supply dealers, because they elevate their prices in proportion as the capacity of the consumer increases. The only effect of the bill which we passed yesterday, by means of which some twenty-odd millions of dollars was added to our annual expenditures, will be to transfer that much money, through the medium of the employees of the Government, to those who deal in the necessities of life.

I think, Mr. President, that while we are providing for that situation in a bill like this, we should recognize that there are some others who feel the very largely enhanced cost of living in this District, where rents have in some instances multiplied manyfold, and where expenditures of all kinds have become unbearable, always, as I have said, being commensurate with the ability of the consumer to respond. I think that there are Members of the Congress—I know one, in particular—who find it very difficult, practically impossible, to meet all necessary expenses and demands, and at the same time make both ends meet; and I am satisfied that in the event that the salaries of Members of Congress were increased—which, of course, would not be considered at all—its only effect would be to increase their actual and necessary expenses. So, Mr. President, it occurs to me that while we are giving power to take possession of and to build shelter for the employees of the Government, it might just as well be that we should have some consideration for ourselves.

I therefore move to insert, after the word "also," the words "Members of Congress and," so that in this expenditure of millions of the public moneys to provide shelter and the means of livelihood there shall be no discrimination between those who make the laws and those who are to work under them.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a question, ought not the Senator to make that "Senators and Members of Congress"?

Mr. THOMAS. Well, Senators are Members of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I know we are Members of Congress; but "Senators and Representatives in Congress" would be the technical designation.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to make the phraseology what it should be; but I understand that a Member of either House is a Member of the Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from Colorado would have to go further in order to accomplish his purpose, because the donation or solicitude would still be confined to those persons whose services are essential to war needs, and I think it is the view in many quarters that Members of Congress do not fall within that description. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS. Why, Mr. President, if I should accept that suggestion and amend my amendment accordingly I would have to go further and offer the same amendment to others affected by the bill. There are large numbers of employees of the Government who, as far as I am able to see, do nothing except draw their salaries; certainly not much more. I have had occasion very frequently to go to these new bureaus for the purpose of soliciting relief, very humbly, sometimes getting it and sometimes not—usually not, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] suggests—and I have observed on all sides a multitudinous number of employees of both sexes, some sitting by typewriters, others operating them; some engaged apparently in the arduous duty of smoking cigarettes, and occasionally directing a would-be visitor to some place where, when he reaches it, he will be referred to some other; some knitting sweaters, and others sweating knitters—all sorts of occupations not directly concerned with the affairs of the Government. So I venture to suggest that if I accepted the suggested amendment it would open a wide field for amendment and also for discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by inserting after the word "also" the words "Members of Congress and."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask for a vote on that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All those in favor of the amendment will say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed will say "no." [A pause.]

Mr. THOMAS. If the Vice President has any doubt about the result, I will offer a further amendment including that office as well. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is rejected. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 6 and 7, it is proposed to strike out the words "local transportation and other community facilities and parts thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the phraseology of the first section. Perhaps the Senator thinks it is all right, but it strikes me as being very awkward, and that it might well be revised. In line 7, page 1, the section reads:

Arsenals and navy yards of the United States, and in industries connected with and essential to the national defense, and their families.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator will see, if he reads it, that it comes out all right.

Mr. GALLINGER. My thought was that the words "and their families" might be transposed to some other line of the bill. I have not had time to look it up carefully.

Mr. SWANSON. Their families might not be engaged in working in the arsenals.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is true. I merely call attention to it, Mr. President, and will let it go at that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, let me ask the chairman of the committee whether the word "arsenal" in that line should be plural or singular?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has been amended.

Mr. SWANSON. It should be plural, but that has been changed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 13 and 14, it is proposed to strike out the words "local transportation, and other community facilities," and the comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, are we considering committee amendments now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are.

Mr. SWANSON. Any amendment to a paragraph can be offered as we go along, however.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would suggest, after line 9, the insertion of a provision for compensation wherever property is condemned, such as I read a moment ago.

Mr. SWANSON. I did not hear what the Senator read; but we have in this bill the same condemnation process that the Senator has in his bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is that provided for in this bill?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; the same one that the Senator has in his bill. There is one section here where it is provided that they shall pay 75 per cent, and so forth.

Mr. FLETCHER. If that provision for compensation is in the bill, I do not care to offer that amendment. I think it is important that it should be in the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. It is in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia if he would not be willing to pass over, for the present, the next amendment? I want to say something about it. It is very late, and the attendance of Senators is very small.

Mr. SWANSON. What does the Senator wish to do?

Mr. LODGE. To pass over the next amendment; I mean, the proviso beginning on line 15, page 2. I want to say something about that amendment, and I would rather not take it up at this time.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to have that amendment perfected before the Senator discusses it. The words "colleges, museums, libraries, State or municipal buildings" should come after the word "dwelling" on line 18. I think the person who drew that amendment made a mistake.

The amendment was simply intended to apply to any occupied dwelling, college, museum, library, State or municipal building, so as to provide that it should only be taken under those conditions. I ask that that amendment be made.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that makes it rather worse.

Mr. SWANSON. That, I think, was what was intended to be the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. If that is what it was intended to be, then it intends to be rather worse. I see no reason in the world why authority should be given in any form to take colleges, libraries, or museums.

Mr. SWANSON. I will say that the Senator from New Jersey offered that amendment, and stated in the committee that they had taken a schoolhouse in New Jersey, I think, and that he would like that provision to be there so that it could not be taken unless the court determined the necessity of taking it.

Mr. LODGE. Why, they can take a State capitol under this bill, or a city hall. I think this amendment had better be discussed further. They ought to be specifically excepted, of course. It is perfectly absurd to have colleges and museums and their furnishings taken for war purposes. There is not one of them that is in the slightest degree within——

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to accepting the amendment. Let it be amended so that they shall be excluded.

Mr. LODGE. That will require some redrafting. I know what was attempted here in Washington.

They wanted additional space for the clerks engaged in the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. The Regents of the Smithsonian, who are in charge of the National Museum, had given them nine or ten thousand square feet of space which had been unoccupied. They proposed to take the National Museum, which cost $4,000,000 to build, where the collections are valued at six or seven million dollars, and to move all the collections out, many of which could never be replaced or reset, in order to put some clerks in there who had plenty of space in other parts of the city.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Who proposed to do that?

Mr. LODGE. That was desired by those in charge of the war insurance. The matter came before the Smithsonian Regents, and that is the reason why I know about it, because I happen to be one of the Regents. The late Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and I took the matter up. The Chief Justice is also one of the Regents. We made representations to the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to it. We gave them some additional space that the Museum was not using, and the Museum was in that way preserved.

That only shows what these people are ready to do. They would actually have taken the Museum that belongs to the people of the country, with the collections that cost some $7,000,000, in order to house clerks whom they could house and have housed in other parts of the city. Under those circumstances, I think, it is not idle to put some protection on the museums, libraries, and public buildings of the United States.

Mr. SWANSON. I agree with the Senator. It reads:

That the furnishings in private dwellings, colleges, museums, libraries, State or municipal buildings shall not be acquired except by contract—

And so forth.

There might be some school buildings that they would want to acquire by contract.

Mr. LODGE. That limits it to furnishings. I can not imagine that they would want to take the desks out of a school building to promote the war.

Mr. SWANSON. I will agree to limit it to furnishings in private dwellings, so that they can not be taken except by contract.

Mr. KELLOGG. Transpose it so as to read:

That colleges, museums, libraries, State or municipal buildings, and furnishings in private dwellings shall not be acquired except by contract—

And so forth.

Mr. LODGE. I ought to say that the reason why I asked to have it go over is because I am against putting the word "furnishings" in there at all. This whole proviso is made necessary by the subsections (a) and (b) above. That proviso is all the protection the private citizen has under the bill as drawn, and it is manifestly absurd to give Mr. Eidlitz and his agents, whoever may have charge of it, power to go about in private houses, colleges, and museums and say, "We want your buildings; we want your furniture." The furniture of the average private house is of no use in promoting the war.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, under the bill as proposed to be amended they can not get furnishings in a private house except by contract. They can buy private furniture if they want, but it might be necessary to furnish some of these buildings, and people in a private residence would sell their furniture.

Mr. LODGE. They could do that without this authority.

Mr. SWANSON. If you put in the words "colleges, museums," it can not be taken except by contract. If they want to sell one of the buildings for these purposes, it is to be done by contract.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Virginia that, as I read the bill, it is proposed to give the Secretary of Labor the right to condemn any college, any museum, any State or municipal building for the purpose of housing clerks or workmen. The limitation is only upon the furnishings, with the exception of private dwellings occupied. With the amendment suggested by the Senator from Virginia you would still leave to the Secretary of Labor the right to take any museum or college or school building or State or municipal building that he might think it wise to take.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is correct. I stated that unless it was changed it probably might have that interpretation, and it should be changed to read as follows:

Provided, That colleges, museums, libraries, State or municipal buildings, and the furnishings in private dwellings shall not be acquired except by contract.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to leaving it to contract, but the right of condemnation should be limited to private property, and should not be extended to public property.

Mr. SWANSON. That may be so.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator yield to me to propose an amendment? I move to amend by striking out all of subsection (b) after the word "That," in line 15, and to insert in place thereof:

schools, colleges, museums, libraries, State, county, and municipal buildings shall be exempted from the operations of this act.

Mr. LODGE. That covers it.

Mr. THOMAS. I offer that amendment and ask for a vote on it.

Mr. SWANSON. I shall be very glad to accept that amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me to make a request? We have been here something over five hours. The bill is so drawn that it ought to be carefully looked into.

Mr. SWANSON. I will agree to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand the Senator from Virginia to say that the amendment which I suggested is acceptable to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be printed.

Mr. THOMAS. If there is no objection to the amendment I suggest that it be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GALLINGER and others. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate does not seem ready.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offered an amendment earlier in the day which I ask may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FRANCE. I offer an amendment to the pending bill and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer an amendment which I ask be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. OVERMAN to the bill (H. R. 10265) to authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs, viz: On page 4, at the end of section 1, add the following:

Provided further, That in communities where housing development is to be carried on under this act, such communities, or persons desiring so to do, shall be permitted to furnish a certain per cent of the cost of providing said housing facilities under such a plan of development and under such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of Labor and the persons interested in the plan of development, but in no instance shall a loan of more than 85 per cent of the cost of development be made to such communities or the persons interested in the development.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. REED, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. DILLINGHAM conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 10069. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE JONES, OF VIRGINIA.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. WILLIAM A. JONES, late a Representative from the State of Virginia, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions which have just been received from the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, in the loss of Congressman JONES, of Virginia, Virginia loses one of her oldest and ablest Representatives. He represented the first district of Virginia creditably and ably for 28 years. The country has lost one of its most efficient and ablest men. I offer the following resolutions, and ask for their adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 227) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM A. JONES, a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join a committee appointed by the House of Representatives to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed, under the second resolution, as a committee on the part of the Senate Mr. SWANSON, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. MCNARY.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of this distinguished statesman and able public servant, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 18, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 17, 1918.

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock noon by Mr. KITCHIN as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Oh Lord God Almighty, a very present help in trouble, continue, we beseech Thee, to uphold, sustain, and guide our beleaguered armies at the front, who are battling for the right against overwhelming numbers in this critical moment of the world's history.

Give to them courage, fortitude, strength, endurance, that they may beat back at last the enemies of civilization; that truth may vindicate itself and Thy power prevail; and we will praise and magnify Thy holy name; for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to naturalization, had insisted upon its amendments, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. GORE, and Mr. DILLINGHAM as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9163) to provide for reimbursement of actual expenses or flat per diem for enlisted men traveling on duty under competent orders.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9902) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to have the Senate amendments read. They are long.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 8753, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker pro tempore announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. WEBB, Mr. CARLIN, Mr. GARD, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the unfinished business, the bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] demand the reading of the engrossed bill?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the engrossed bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the reading of the engrossed bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Those in favor of the passage of the bill will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I think there was no division on the question before the point of no quorum was made.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. We were voting on it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 298, nays 25, answered "present" 3, not voting 106, as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. ASWELL (for) with Mr. JAMES (against).

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE] vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He did not.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I desire to withdraw my vote. I voted "yea." I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE], and I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

On motion of Mr. SMALL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the river and harbor bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF NAVAL PROVING GROUND.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 10783.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 10783. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, may the bill be reported?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 10783) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to increase the facilities for the proof and test of ordnance material, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask a question about it. I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee where this railroad runs?

Mr. PADGETT. It is not a railroad at all. This is a bill to extend the naval proving grounds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $1,000,000, or any part thereof, in his discretion, for the purpose of increasing the facilities for the proof and test of ordnance material, including necessary buildings, construction, equipment, railroad, and water facilities, land, and damages and losses to persons, firms, and corporations resulting from the procurement of the land for this purpose, and also all necessary expenses incident to the procurement of said land: Provided, That if the land and appurtenances and improvements attached thereto, as contemplated under the foregoing appropriation, can not be procured by purchase within one month after the enactment of this appropriation, the Navy may take said land over for its use, and then the President is hereby authorized and empowered to take over for the United States the immediate possession and title, including all easements, rights of way, riparian, and other rights appurtenant thereto, or any land selected by him to be used for the carrying out of the purpose named in the aforesaid appropriation. That if said land and appurtenances and improvements shall be taken over as aforesaid, the United States shall make just compensation therefor, to be determined by the President, and if the amount thereof so determined by the President is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum, as, added to the said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code. Upon the taking over of said property by the President as aforesaid, the title to all such property so taken over shall immediately vest in the United States. The sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for said purpose.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment to perfect the text.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 1, strike out the words "the land" and insert the words "such lands."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment to perfect the text.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lines 2 and 3, page 2, strike out the words "as contemplated under the foregoing appropriation."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me a little unusual for the chairman of the committee to call up a measure by unanimous consent and without explanation of the measure begin offering amendments, and not even explain where the amendments are offered. I should like to have the gentleman explain why he offers this particular amendment. The bill contains the words "as contemplated under the foregoing appropriation." Now he wants to strike out those words.

Mr. PADGETT. That is just an awkward expression, that is all. The language is—

Provided, That if the land and appurtenances and improvements attached thereto, as contemplated under the foregoing appropriation, can not be procured by purchase—

And so forth. Now, the appropriation comes afterward. It is not the foregoing appropriation. This does not change the meaning or the purport at all. It will read—

Provided, That if the land and appurtenances and improvements attached thereto can not be procured by purchase—

And so forth. The appropriation is made for the purposes of this act. It follows instead of going before.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state where it is contemplated that railroad properties and water facilities will be taken over for use?

Mr. PADGETT. We are not taking over any at all. They have to get two tracts of land. We have now at Indianhead, Md., the proving ground and the powder factory.

Mr. WALSH. I know that.

Mr. PADGETT. They have to get some additional land there because of the expansion of the work and to test the larger fuses. It has become impossible to do it safely within the limits that we have. Then, on the Virginia side as the crow flies, about 15 miles down the river, and as the boat runs about 22 miles, they want a thousand acres of land, where they will have a range for testing the big guns of 45,000 to 50,000 yards. At Indianhead, where the testing is being done under great difficulty by suspending traffic, they have testing facilities of about 15,000 yards. The fighting lines are now from 20,000 to 22,000 yards, and they say it is impossible to test the large guns at Indianhead, and this is to give them a neck of land on the Virginia side, where they will have a testing range from 45,000 to 50,000 yards to test these big guns at a high elevation, instead of theoretically with a low charge, and not tested at full range.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This legislation is needed without delay?

Mr. PADGETT. Absolutely; it is in the bill, but it was so urgent that the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance came to me and said almost with tears in his eyes that he was so hampered that he was not now able to perform the functions that the war required of him.

Mr. WALSH. One thing further. This legislation does not contemplate nor permit the construction of railroad facilities running from the city of Washington to the grounds.

Mr. PADGETT. It does not in any way, directly or indirectly.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is this land at Cornwallis Neck, near Indianhead?

Mr. PADGETT. As the crow flies it is about 15 miles farther down.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is to enlarge the proving grounds at Indianhead?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; they are transferring the testing of large guns from Indianhead to the new grounds.

Mr. ANTHONY. Can the gentleman tell me how far away the proving grounds for the Bureau of Ordnance are that were recently purchased?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; a number of miles, but it has no connection with this.

Mr. ANTHONY. Would it be possible for the Government or the Navy to use the big range purchased by the Bureau of Ordnance?

Mr. PADGETT. No; the committee went into that, and the Secretary had that matter fully investigated by the officers, and they said it could not be used in common by the two.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Some time ago the gentleman from Tennessee, chairman of the Naval Committee, introduced a bill and asked unanimous consent for its consideration, which bill provided for the construction of a railroad from any point anywhere in the District of Columbia to the proving grounds.

Mr. PADGETT. That was down through Maryland.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It was plainly apparent from that bill that it could be built down to Newport News or Norfolk.

Mr. PADGETT. That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would it be possible under this bill for the Secretary of the Navy to take over land necessary for the construction of a railroad up into that district?

Mr. PADGETT. It would not; it was not contemplated and would not be possible.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. FOSS. This bill, as I understand, contemplates the purchase of land——

Mr. PADGETT. At Indianhead and also in Virginia, a point down 15 miles below, giving a range of 45,000 or 50,000 yards for testing the big guns.

Mr. FOSS. How many acres, all told?

Mr. PADGETT. Two thousand one hundred and seventy-five acres.

Mr. FOSS. At what price per acre?

Mr. PADGETT. It has been estimated from $25 to $50 an acre.

Mr. FOSS. It is not valuable for agricultural purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. No; not high-priced land.

Mr. FOSS. Then, the most of the appropriation would be used toward the improvements.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and they say it will complete the work. The Army was given $7,000,000 on the other shore and later was given $7,000,000 more, but here they say they can complete this with the one million without asking anything further.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does this bill come in with a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. PADGETT. Not only with a unanimous report, but enthusiastic.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the amendments likewise have the unanimous consent of the committee?

Mr. PADGETT. The amendments have not been submitted to the committee because in looking over the bill yesterday I saw that the phraseology could be made better. This does not change the bill except to make it more in keeping with the language of appropriation bills.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Referring to page 2 of the report, where the estimates of a million dollars are itemized, is that an estimate for the expenditure of this particular million dollars?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It includes $175,000 for a railroad.

Mr. PADGETT. That is a railroad on the grounds for unloading the big guns and transporting them from one point to another.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is not for any commercial purpose?

Mr. PADGETT. None whatever. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 4, 5, 6, strike out the words: "enactment of this appropriation, the Navy may take said land over for its use, and then," and insert the words "passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, also the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "title" insert the words "of such lands and improvements."

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee. How much land is it contemplated to purchase?

Mr. PADGETT. On the Maryland side 1,175 acres and on the Virginia side 1,000 acres.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Also the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, strike out the words "purpose named in the aforesaid appropriation," and insert the words "purposes of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Also the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 1, 2, and 3, strike out the words "The sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for said purpose," and insert in lieu thereof the words "For the purposes of this act there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Maryland another question. How much are they paying for this land?

Mr. PADGETT. Somewhere from $25 to $40 or $50 an acre.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is it contemplated to build a railroad from Washington down to Indianhead?

Mr. PADGETT. It is not.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I know it is not in this bill, but I mean in any other bill before the gentleman's committee?

Mr. PADGETT. I have another bill on the calendar which I have tried to get up, and I shall try to get up later, but not to-day, for that purpose. It is not in this bill, and in order to make that clear I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the last line of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no railroad shall be built in the District of Columbia under this act until Congress has approved the point from which such road may start and also the route to be followed in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SOLDIERS' INSURANCE—ATTORNEYS' FEES.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11245) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto, approved October 6, 1917, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill reported?

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] consider favorably an amendment along the line I suggested when this matter was first mentioned to the House before?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I would not, for this reason: An omnibus amendment bill is ready for introduction at this time covering a great many subjects, and the committee would like to have the opportunity of considering those amendments before they act upon them. The bill is ready for introduction now and will be introduced to-day or to-morrow. I made a statement here several days ago——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes; I was present.

Mr. RAYBURN. That a bill would be introduced right away, and the Treasury Department assured me before that time that they would have their suggestions ready, but they had not gotten them ready up until I talked with the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury yesterday, and he said either to-day or to-morrow they would send that bill up.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman advise the House whether or not he will have a rule to bring up that bill for consideration? If a rule is not provided, the bill may be introduced and never reach consideration in the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. So far in everything connected with the soldiers' insurance the House has been very liberal with the committee in letting them bring up their bills, and I think there will be no trouble about that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit me to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. RAYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Referring to the bill referred to by the gentleman from Texas, a bill containing many amendments to the law governing war-risk insurance, is the gentleman's committee giving consideration of any character to the bill which proposes to open the benefits of this act to these men, who are in a sort of military service in Russia, looking after the railway situation and transportation?

Mr. SIMS. A number of bills have been introduced proposing to amend the war-insurance act. The department itself has suggested several amendments. I suggested to the department, and it has been approved by the members of the committee who have discussed it, that the department should prepare all of the amendments which it thinks necessary for the successful working of the law, and I have also suggested to Members of the House who have introduced bills that we take no action on their bills until we got the suggestions of the department and then consider them all together, and report out a bill covering what the committee thinks proper from all proposed amendments.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think that is a wise suggestion, but I gathered from the statement just made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] that the committee had had these suggestions from the department and were ready now to propose an omnibus amendment bill.

Mr. SIMS. The department may be ready, but it has not transmitted its suggested further amendments. I understand that to-day or to-morrow the department will send to the committee the amendments it proposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; I yield to anybody who wants to ask a question, and I thought the gentleman from Minnesota wanted to interrogate the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11245) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto, approved October 6, 1917.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13, article 1, of the act approved October 6, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," be, and is hereby, amended by striking out the following words in the last sentence: "to regulate the matter of compensation, if any, but in no case to exceed 10 per cent, to be paid to claim agents and attorneys for services in connection with any of the matters provided for in articles 2, 3, and 4," and insert at the end of the sentence the following words: "Provided, however, That payment to any attorney or agent for such assistance as may be required in the preparation and execution of the necessary papers shall not exceed $3 in any one case: And provided further, That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the presentation or adjudication of claims under article 2, 3, and 4, except that in the event of disagreement as to a claim under the contract of insurance between the bureau and any beneficiary or beneficiaries thereunder, an action on the claim may be brought against the United States in the district court of the United States in and for the district in which such beneficiaries or any one of them resides, and that whenever judgment shall be rendered in an action brought pursuant to this provision the court, as part of its judgment, shall determine and allow such reasonable attorney's fees, not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount recovered, to be paid by the claimant in behalf of whom such proceedings were instituted, to his attorney.

"Any person who shall directly or indirectly solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, or who shall attempt to solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, any fee or compensation, except as herein provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each and every offense shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment," so that the section as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall administer, execute, and enforce the provisions of this act, and for that purpose have full power and authority to make rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, necessary or appropriate to carry out its purposes, and shall decide all questions arising under the act, except as otherwise provided in section 5. Wherever under any provision or provisions of the act regulations are directed or authorized to be made, such regulation, unless the context otherwise requires, shall or may be made by the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The director shall adopt reasonable and proper rules to govern the procedure of the divisions and to regulate and provide for the nature and extent of the proofs and evidence and the method of taking and furnishing the same in order to establish the right to benefits of allowance, allotment, compensation, or insurance provided for in this act, the forms of application of those claiming to be entitled to such benefits, the methods of making investigations and medical examinations, and the manner and form of adjudications and awards: Provided, however, That payment to any attorney or agent for such assistance as may be required in the preparation and execution of the necessary papers shall not exceed $3 in any one case: And provided further, That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the presentation or adjudication of claims under articles 2, 3, and 4, except that in the event of disagreement as to a claim under the contract of insurance between the bureau and any beneficiary or beneficiaries thereunder an action on the claim may be brought against the United States in the district court of the United States in and for the district in which such beneficiaries or any one of them resides, and that whenever judgment shall be rendered in an action brought pursuant to this provision the court, as part of its judgment, shall determine and allow such reasonable attorney's fees, not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount recovered, to be paid by the claimant in behalf of whom such proceedings were instituted to his attorney.

"Any person who shall directly or indirectly solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, or who shall attempt to solicit, contract for, charge, or receive any fee or compensation, except as herein provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each and every offense shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

SEC. 2. That Article IV of said act, approved October 6, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," is hereby amended by striking out section 405 thereof.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to inquire whether this comes in with a unanimous report. I do not see any members of the minority here, and I wondered if they were notified that the bill was coming up?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; it is a unanimous report, and I have told every Member I have seen that it was coming up to-day if I could get it up by unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the gentleman notify the minority members that the bill was to be brought up to-day?

Mr. RAYBURN. Well, I notified them yesterday, or it is in the RECORD, or the day before that I intended to call it up yesterday; and if not yesterday, I would call it up to-day.

Mr. GARNER. It is a unanimous report?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is a unanimous report, and there is no objection to it at all.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. TREADWAY. In connection with the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, may I not say this for his information, that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] has been cooperating with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] in studying the subject and has declared that he is enthusiastic for the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman should not call it up by unanimous consent without notifying the minority members of what he intended to do.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am not responsible for gentlemen not being here, and I will say I do not care to be lectured in regard to the matter.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement for a moment?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to tell the gentleman from Wyoming that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] had a bill much like, in its terms, the bill now before the House. The department made certain suggestions. Mr. ESCH, the ranking minority member of our committee, Mr. TREADWAY, the gentleman who introduced a bill for the same purpose, with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], were informally appointed to prepare the draft of a bill for report by the committee; and they did so, and I introduced the bill they drafted and it was reported without any amendment whatever after full consultation with Mr. ESCH, Mr. TREADWAY, and the gentleman from Texas, who has charge of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it may be that the bill is all right; it tends in the right direction, but it involves some serious questions as to compensation to be allowed claim agents and attorneys and affects every district and millions of people, for good or for evil. It should be discussed a little, and I would like to ask the gentleman if any time——

Mr. RAYBURN. It was stated to the committee at the time that the first available opportunity for this bill to be considered and passed would be embraced, and I think I can not be mistaken in saying that every member of the committee, both minority and majority, are thoroughly satisfied with the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Texas agree to allow——

Mr. RAYBURN. The only reason on earth for the introduction and report of this bill and the asking for its consideration is that since the passage of the war-risk insurance act, like what happened under the pension act to some extent, organizations of lawyers have been formed from one end of this country to the other, so-called lawyers, who have been preying upon the ignorance of the people who are the beneficiaries of the act for insurance, compensation, and allotments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That ought to be stopped.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is exactly what we are trying to stop, and that is the only thing this bill seeks to do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bill provides a method of compensation, but some gentlemen are of the opinion that there should be no compensation at all.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think in the discussion of this matter the reason for that would come out.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Texas is speaking in his own time.

Mr. WALSH. And he is entitled to an hour.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has an hour, and I was trying to ascertain whether he intended to allow some time——

Mr. ROBBINS. If the gentlemen would come down to the front of the House we could hear them better and get more information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania (continuing). I was endeavoring to ascertain—if gentlemen will keep quiet for a minute—whether the gentleman, entirely within his rights and in the possession of an hour's time, intended to be liberal in the disposal of it?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is all.

Mr. RAYBURN. And I intend, if I can get the floor myself, to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who took unusual interest in this subject, and I might say in fairness to him that he introduced the first bill on this question. There were several bills introduced upon this question, and I expect to yield him 15 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that the purpose of the bill is all right. We are trying to get at the best method to effectuate the thing desired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has some suggestions on this subject, and there may be other gentlemen, and I merely wanted to know whether the gentleman intended to let us have a little of his time. The gentleman, I assume, will explain the bill and explain it so satisfactorily that perhaps no additional explanation may be needed, but will the gentleman give some of his time to this side?

Mr. RAYBURN. I just stated that I was going to yield a quarter of an hour to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] at the first opportunity I had, and I promised to yield to the gentleman from Oregon, and I shall yield some time to the gentleman from Iowa if he desires it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] will come in shortly, and he is to be considered.

Mr. STINESS. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the minority on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I will say that the minority are very anxious that this bill should pass. A committee was appointed, as was stated on the floor, and I have not heard of any opposition at all from any member of the minority, but on the contrary we are very glad to have this measure come up at the first opportunity and have it passed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a satisfactory statement.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavor to explain such features of the bill as any Member of the House may desire to inquire about, and will yield for any questions that may be asked.

The reason for the introduction of this measure is very plain. I desire to call attention to a sentence in section 13 of the war-risk insurance act approved October 6, 1917, which reads as follows:

> The director shall adopt reasonable and proper rules to govern the procedure of the divisions, to regulate the matter of compensation, if any, but in no case to exceed 10 per cent, to be paid to claim agents and attorneys for services in connection with any of the matters provided for in articles 2, 3, and 4.

Now, articles 2, 3, and 4 are the allowance, compensation, and war-risk insurance, so that you see whatever was done under the authority of a claim agent entitles that agent to receive 10 per cent of the benefits derived by the beneficiary from the Government. In other words, take, as an illustration, a $10,000 war-risk insurance policy. Such a policy would not be paid in a lump sum of $10,000, but would cover a period of 20 years, or 240 months.

Now, then, during the entire life of that policy the claim agent who has presented the claim to the War-Risk Bureau can demand the 10 per cent commission for those services.

Undoubtedly that was a mistake in the framing of the bill. The bill never was so intended. The department did not intend, the gentleman who offered the war-risk insurance bill did not intend, nor did the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce intend that any such opportunity should be given to the claim agent. We have not heard, however, of any claim agent objecting to that phrase in the bill up to the present time. It is a very nice opportunity, and one which is being rapidly made use of.

Now, let me explain to you exactly what has happened. The same explanation appears in the report of the committee on this bill. During the period when the casualty lists were published and the names of the next of kin of those injured or killed in the service were printed with the addresses these so-called claim agents took those addresses and at once communicated with the beneficiaries under the law. I hold in my hand a set of papers which was sent me by the town clerk of one of the towns in my district, who brought the matter to my attention. This is the form in which the claim agents sent out the papers, giving them power of attorney and agreement as to attorney's fees, and a form of printed letter, of which I want to read one sentence; and, by the way, I will state that this letter is addressed to the mother of one of the first soldiers from my district killed in the war. This is the sentence to which I desire to call the particular attention of the House:

> Of course, you understand that in a claim of any sort against the Government, no officer or agent of the Government can render the claimant the aid and counsel an attorney can—

And so forth. In other words, this claim-agent concern here says that it can do better service for the beneficiaries under the war-risk insurance act than can any officer or agent of the Government. Was there ever a more deceiving communication put into the hands of friends and bereaved relatives than such a letter as that?

And still these people have been within their rights under this clause in the bill. That very clause was one of the reasons, as the Acting Secretary of War states in his communication to the Senate, dated March 22, 1918, why the War Department stopped sending out the casualty lists, because, as he said:

> The publication of the address of the nearest relative or the emergency address did not give the relative any information which had not already been given to them, but it brought down upon them a swarm of claim agents who guaranteed that they would obtain from the Government the war-risk insurance which is guaranteed by law to the proper inheritor, and in spite of the fact that the department has in each case advised the nearest relative that their claims will be adjusted by the Government and that they will be furnished the money that is due them without the interposition of claim agents, numbers of poor people have yielded to the importunities of these claim agents, and are thereby deprived of a portion of what is justly their due.

Gen. March, Chief of Staff, has also made a similar statement in reply to inquiry as to why the additional details were withheld in the printing of the casualty lists.

Under date of January 23 I introduced a bill, H. R. 9161, which amended that section of the act by cutting out the reference to claim agents. It also amended section 405 by removing a sentence there also permitting the appearance of claim agents. This was about the time the railroad hearings were being held, and which were at once followed by the water-power development hearings, so it was some time before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce could give the subject attention.

On March 15 Mr. SIMS, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, introduced a bill of somewhat similar nature, which I understand was submitted by the department. This bill very much curtailed the powers of claim agents, but, nevertheless, would permit of their recognition. At a hearing given by the committee I stated my objections to the bill in that it would not seem to me that any recognition whatever should be permitted these people.

Following the hearing and after a consultation with Messrs. RAYBURN and ESCH, of the committee, on April 2 I introduced House bill 11190. Three days later, April 5, Mr. SIMS introduced practically the same bill, H. R. 11245, which is now before the House and which has my hearty approval.

Unless there is still some joker we have not discovered, enactment of this bill will absolutely prevent applications being made by claim agents in behalf of beneficiaries under the act who would prevent them from obtaining all that is justly their due.

There is no need for the intercession of agents or attorneys in these claims, as already stated. The attitude of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission with regard to claim agents has been stated to me by Chairman Little, and I am glad to quote from his letter just what the commission thinks about the appearance of attorneys in cases before that body:

> The attitude of the commission with respect to such appearances is * * * that they are unnecessary, and the commission does not encourage the participation of attorneys in the presentation of cases of injured employees in any way. The law itself provides the machinery for practically an automatic adjustment of claims for compensation through the cooperation of superior officers or injured employees with the commission, and it is our belief that the intervention of attorneys in such cases is a needless expense to the claimant.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that in many cases the Department has not notified the next of kin or their relatives? I know of one case, where a man died three months ago in Jefferson Barracks, and no effort was made to identify him or inform his folks.

Mr. TREADWAY. There are cases where they have not been identified after they joined the colors. I am not familiar with any case of the kind the gentleman speaks of, but I am familiar with cases where claim agents have directly solicited the opportunity of securing the 10 per cent on the total claim.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. Does the gentleman know whether the policy gives the necessary information from the beneficiary?

Mr. TREADWAY. From the department?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; from the department as to his rights?

Mr. TREADWAY. The department is very anxious to have word reach all beneficiaries that there is no need for the employment of these claim agents, and notice has been sent to them to that effect; but in numerous instances, as, for instance, in the case of the loss of the Tuscania, the department has record of relatives of people on the Tuscania whose lives were saved being put to the excruciating pain and suffering of being notified by these claim agents that their relatives and next of kin were lost, whereas they were actually saved. These people have been so solicitous for their business that they have even gone to the extent of notifying the next of kin of an entire shipload being lost, when half or more of them were saved. The Adjutant General's office informed me that it had referred three telegrams of that nature to the Department of Justice in order to prosecute these claim agents for misrepresentation and the injury to the feelings of relatives that naturally would result.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Congress and the Government are back of the boys in the trenches and back of their friends and families. [Applause.] To my mind no better piece of legislation, no more humanitarian piece of legislation has ever been put on our statute books than this war-risk insurance act. It will make the people at home feel better toward the Government that is calling out their young men and asking those men to make this supreme sacrifice. It will make the young men feel better to realize that the Government stands back of and is willing to assist the ones they are leaving behind by such humanitarian legislation as this.

It is not the intent of Congress that these mercenary claim-agent leeches should sap the blood of any financial benefit from the Government by putting up these false claims and establishing their right to this 10 per cent commission for doing nothing, and doing what the Government itself intends to do in every individual case.

Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that there is occasion for me to go into detailed explanations. I think I have stated the case as it is, and I heartily cooperate with the gentlemen who have prepared this particular bill, which, as I have stated, is the result of the original one that I introduced some time ago. The time to check this evil is in its beginning and not wait to have it reach the scandalous proportions of the pension claims. I should be very glad, if my time permits, to answer any questions bearing on the subject. If there are none I will yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DEWALT and Mr. FARR rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT].

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman now please state the remedy that is suggested by the proposed legislation.

Mr. FARR. That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. TREADWAY. The proposed bill absolutely cuts out recognition of the claim agent. The claim-agent scandal in pension legislation is well known to the House. As a result of that scandal, when the act was amended in 1916 changing the details of a widow's pension, the claim agent was excluded. as the gentleman is undoubtedly well aware, and the language found on page 2 follows the act of 1916, whereby the claim agent is excluded. The language is as follows:

> That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the presentation or adjudication of claims under articles 2, 3, and 4.

That follows the language of the pension act.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. KING. I have in mind a case in my district which has already been turned down by the War-Risk Bureau, and it is going to necessitate the employment of an attorney.

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Now, what compensation will he get if he carries it through?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will call the gentleman's attention to a further provision on page 2:

> Except that in the event of disagreement as to a claim under the contract of insurance between the bureau and any beneficiary or beneficiaries thereunder, an action on the claim may be brought against the United States in the district court of the United States in and for the district in which such beneficiaries or any of them resides, and that whenever judgment shall be rendered in an action brought pursuant to this provision, the court, as part of its judgment, shall determine and allow such reasonable attorney's fees, not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount recovered, to be paid by the claimant in behalf of whom such proceedings were instituted, to his attorney.

So that covers the case which the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. KING. Will that court have the right to review the ruling of the department, and either affirm it or set it aside, or is that ruling, once made, a law which can not be set aside?

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. KING. The department makes a certain ruling. Can that ruling be reviewed by the court in that case?

Mr. TREADWAY. This says any disagreement between the claimant and the United States allows the beneficiary to take his case to court. Did the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] desire to ask me any questions?

Mr. FARR. My colleague [Mr. DEWALT] asked the question that I had in mind.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Has the gentleman had the views of the Treasury Department upon this bill?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; Mr. Speaker, the views of the Secretary of the Treasury are set forth in the report, in the letter written by the Secretary of the Treasury on March 18, and this letter is along the line of the desires of the War-Risk Bureau itself. I call the gentleman's attention to the letter addressed to Mr. SIMS, on page 1 of the report, asking that this legislation be enacted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do I understand that the Secretary of the Treasury agreed to this provision which makes the Government liable for a thousand dollar fee on a $10,000 insurance policy? This bill will cost the Government millions of dollars.

Mr. TREADWAY. I can not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. RAYBURN. I wish to say to the gentleman that this legislation will not cost the Government a cent in that direction, because this fee to be determined by the court is to be paid by the claimant himself, as provided in the act.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If I can get the opportunity to speak, I think I can show the gentleman that I am right.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will say that this clause follows the original act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBBINS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes to answer questions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to extending the gentleman's time two minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. JUUL. I should like to ask the gentleman if the penalty clause in this bill may not be misunderstood, and should it not provide an exception in favor of people who legally represent claimants when there is a dispute between the Government and the claimant?

Mr. TREADWAY. That must come through court action. There could be no question of any discrepancy in that feature.

Mr. JUUL. But, if the gentleman will pardon me, in line 22 you provide a penalty against anyone who shall negotiate with anybody——

Mr. TREADWAY. It is intended that it should.

Mr. JUUL. I understand; but there are cases where attorneys are permitted by the bill, and you do not except those attorneys from the penalty.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there are two places where attorneys or claim agents are recognized? One is in the preparation of the papers and the execution of necessary papers, where not to exceed $3 may be charged. That is simply a clerical service. Then, you will see the bill also recognizes attorneys in connection with a suit.

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. There is no other place where the claim agent can legally perform services, and it is not intended that there should be.

Mr. JUUL. My question to you is whether or not you are providing a penalty for the attorney who properly represents the claimants before the Government, where there is a dispute as to the appointment and who the claimants are?

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will read lines 10 to 21, I think he will get the information; but I would be glad to take it up with the gentleman any time.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. FARR. Does not the gentleman think that 10 per cent is too much to pay for legal services?

Mr. TREADWAY. That depends upon how extensive the lawsuit may be. It is entirely in the hands of the court. I think that is a fair provision and was in the original act, although personally I should be pleased to see the maximum amount made less than 10 per cent.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SNOOK].

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the original bill to which this is an amendment, as the gentleman who has just preceded me has well said, is one of the most important features of constructive legislation passed by this Congress. Soon after the passage of that bill it came to the attention of the committee that a gross abuse was likely to spring up through attorneys who congregated here in Washington, sending out these powers of attorney and contracts to which the gentleman from Massachusetts has called attention, getting claimants to sign the contracts and filing them with the department, and thereby drawing a fee where they had rendered no services to the claimant. It is the old policy followed during the days of pension legislation. These people have grown adepts in that business. In those days a great deal of money was made by people who rendered no services to the soldier, and so this amendment has been drawn to cut off such contracts.

It will be remembered by Members of the House that articles 2, 3, and 4 of the original act, each one, had a separate purpose. The first provided for the allotment, the second for compensation, and the third for insurance.

Now, this bill is so drawn, or is intended to be so drawn, that these attorneys can not collect a fee for services in any one of these cases, except under regulations to be formulated and promulgated by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. It was suggested to the committee, however, that it might be necessary, and probably was necessary, that some compensation should be allowed to some one for preparing the papers for applicants, and so the fee for that purpose was fixed in the bill at $3. You will find this provision in the first paragraph of the bill, at the top of page 2, under which all persons in the country may go to a justice of the peace, or an attorney, and have an affidavit prepared.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNOOK. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman says "preparing papers"; that is merely filling up a blank.

Mr. SNOOK. That is merely filling up a blank.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNOOK. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman recall the commission or allowance paid to claim agents in pension cases?

Mr. SNOOK. In the early stages, before we had legislation on the subject, I think the fee ran as high as $25, and probably higher than that. But there was a long time that the pension agent was allowed to collect $25 and then $10.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That fee was cut down.

Mr. SNOOK. Yes; and now has been cut out in some cases.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman prefer a fixed amount to a commission?

Mr. SNOOK. Yes; this is fixed at $3, and that is all that can be charged. Now, further to protect the claimants, there is a provision on pages 3 and 4 of the bill by which the department can promulgate regulations by which they can control who shall be recognized as an attorney and who shall not, so that an unwarranted fee can not be collected.

Now, referring to the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL], about the penalty in this bill, I think his fear is not well grounded, for you will find line 22, page 2, refers to the penalties. That language is as follows:

> Any person who shall directly or indirectly solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, or who shall attempt to solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, any fee or compensation, except as herein provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each and every offense shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNOOK. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. I think you are absolutely prohibiting the negotiations by the attorney with the claimant. Suppose a claimant waits 6 months or a year or 18 months, and absolutely despairs of obtaining results by his individual negotiations; and let us suppose the claimant is illiterate and a foreigner, unable to transact business in English. Under the section here the attorney could not negotiate with the claimant for any compensation whatever beyond $3.

Mr. SNOOK. That is for the preparation of the papers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given two minutes more.

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield further? This is an important matter. Here is the situation, that time may run against the claimants. The claimants can not negotiate with the attorney. Suppose the claimant is tired out by departmental delay. He goes to an attorney and seeks to get redress. The attorney is absolutely prohibited from negotiating with him for any fee.

Mr. SNOOK. In case of allotment or compensation the case will be entirely taken care of by the Government, and there will be no reason for an attorney at all, because the Government will investigate the question and it will be decided without the need of an attorney. Now, when it comes to the question of insurance, as soon as there is a disagreement he is allowed to employ an attorney, and the court is authorized to allow an attorney fee up to 10 per cent.

Mr. JUUL. Suppose there is a disagreement as to who is the legal claimant in the case; may the one who is decided by the department not to be the legal claimant go to his attorney and say, "I, and not the other man, am the legal claimant," and if he does, is the attorney to be subjected to a penalty because he negotiates?

Mr. SNOOK. No; not if he negotiates, but if he charges a fee not authorized by the law. There will be no trouble about the attorney making out affidavits or making the proper proofs. Hundreds of attorneys in this country are representing soldiers and are making proofs for them and drawing affidavits and all that.

Mr. JUUL. I think the penalty clause is a little strong.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR].

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to numerous delays attendant upon the settlement of allotments made by soldiers and sailors upon their going into the service.

My attention has particularly been called to some specific instances, and I want to call the attention of the House to them. There is in the city of Portland, which I have the honor to represent, a woman who is the wife of an enlisted man in the One hundred and sixty-second Infantry. This woman is about to become a mother and is altogether dependent upon the allotment made by her husband. This allotment was made last October, but there are no returns from it as yet. This man did not wait to be drafted. He was one of the early volunteers from the city of Portland. I have also in mind the case of a member of the Fourth United States Engineers, who has a dependent wife and one child in the same city, who made an allotment more than four months ago, but there are no returns from that as yet. Also a member of the Twenty-third Engineers, who enlisted at Vancouver, Wash., on November 30, and who has a wife and two children in destitute circumstances, but under the allotment he has made to them there has been no return. There is another case of a Portland widow who is dependent upon the allotment made by her son, and there have been no returns in that case.

I have given all these names to the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, but will withhold them from publication for the present, although I have a complete record of all these matters in my office. These are just samples of numerous cases that have come to my attention. I have no doubt that others have come to the attention of other gentlemen in this body. I have taken a number of these cases up with the bureau, and in a great many instances bureau officials have told me that these allotments have never reached the bureau.

Mr. Speaker, if these allotments have not reached the bureau, there is something radically wrong with the Naval and Military Establishments that permit conditions of this kind to continue in the various naval and military headquarters throughout the country. If papers are executed and allotments made by soldiers and sailors as long ago as last November and have not yet reached the bureau, I respectfully submit that there is something wrong in connection with the administration of this law, and the authorities in the Naval and the Military Establishments ought to look into the matter. I have requested the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War to give their attention to these matters.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McARTHUR. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. They may have been lost in the mail, and if that is so it would not be the fault of the Army and the Navy Departments.

Mr. McARTHUR. Oh, yes; but it is not probable that a great many of them have been lost in the mail. My attention has been called to a great many cases. It is improbable that they were all lost in the mail.

Mr. SNOOK. In the cases to which the gentleman refers, why did not the wives and the widows file applications for allotments? That can be done. I have had it done in a number of cases—instead of criticizing the department.

Mr. McARTHUR. It was undoubtedly through ignorance of the law. These dependents do not know about these things, and they are dependent upon the allotment made to them. I do not wish particularly to criticize the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, for I realize that there is great congestion of business at the bureau. There are undoubtedly some delays down there that could have been avoided, but I want to point back to the root of the trouble. It was the failure of the men in the Military and Naval Establishments who are intrusted with the responsibility of making these reports. They have not made them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in sympathy with the purpose of this bill. It is needed, and some of its provisions, particularly the opening provisions of the bill, are most excellent. I am surprised at the provision that permits the question of the amount to be paid on insurance to be taken to the Federal district court. This bill is supposed to be an improvement upon legislation. The particular provision which permits suits to be brought in the district courts of the United States is a backward step. In a greater portion of the States of this Union at the present time under compensation laws claims for deaths or injury are submitted to some sort of commission, which tries them under informal rules, represents the claimant as well as the State, and passes upon them without any unnecessary expense. Under this provision these cases will be tried in the district courts of the United States, the most expensive place in the world to try a case. The costs necessarily will go against the United States in the absence of some special provision, and there is no special provision here. The claimant will undoubtedly recover some sum and will be entitled to have the costs allowed. That is not the worst provision. It provides for a 10 per cent fee to be paid by the claimant, so that in a case where $10,000 is recovered, and in most of these cases $10,000 will be recovered, $1,000 attorney's fee can be taxed up against the claimant. I can fairly hear the shout of rejoicing that will go up among the ambulance chasers over this country when they read this provision of the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is in the original bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is true; it is in the original bill, but it never ought to have been there, and the purpose of this bill ought to be to correct just such matters and prevent anything of that kind taking place.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is not the gentleman wrong when he says that it provides a 10 per cent fee? Does not the law provide not exceeding 10 per cent?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman has practiced law, as I presume he has, I will ask if he ever knew of a court cutting down those fees?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I know the courts are very liberal, but we usually leave such matters to the courts.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am an attorney myself. I know just how these things work, and every man who is an attorney in this House knows how it works. This provision ought to be stricken out.

Mr. LOBECK. And the gentleman has had an experience as a judge, too?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will excuse me from answering that. I am not speaking from the standpoint of a judge. If I was, I would say the attorney always claims to have earned the fee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. With an action encouraged by a claims agent, possibly, if the court decided in favor of the claimant and the recovery was $10,000, it would mean that the claim agent would receive $1,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. One thousand dollars, probably, although, of course, the court would not be obliged to allow that. It would depend to a large extent on whether the attorney claimed he earned it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the court could do that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It could.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would be rather a large fee in a pension case.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I never heard of that amount being allowed in a pension case. Now, under the pension law I think the largest fee that can be obtained is $10. Under the war-insurance statutes whoever has charge of these cases for the Government ought to represent the claimant just as much as he represents the Government. The Government ought not to take the position that is often taken by insurance companies, and try to defeat every claim that is possible regardless of its merit; but, on the contrary, pay every one that is meritorious, and pay every cent to which the claimant is entitled.

Mr. RAYBURN. I desire to state to the gentleman it is on an altogether different assumption from a pension law. This suit, if brought, will come upon the proposition of a contract claim on the Government for an insurance policy whether the claimant is entitled to this insurance, and furthermore does the gentleman think this policy——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman has control of his time and he has time of his own——

Mr. RAYBURN. I will give the gentleman half a minute, and that is all I want to use of his time. I know the gentleman wants to be fair, and I want to ask him a question. This insurance can not be paid in a lump sum, and if a man has a policy and the courts decide that he is entitled to the payment of $10,000 when only $57.50 per month can be paid, does the gentleman think any court in the land will say that man ought to go down in his pocket and hand over $1,000?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Possibly not as to the time of payment, but I think courts are very likely to allow the amount claimed. If the case is tried in the United States district court the attorney might be entitled to it. But aside from these considerations the argument the gentleman is making with reference to insurance claims would be equally valid against every compensation law passed by any State of the Union. It would follow that in all of those compensation cases where they have done away with court procedure the proper thing would be to submit the thing to the courts in the ordinary way of trying cases. This method has been abandoned because of its expense to all parties concerned, and to the State.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. FARR. This remuneration would extend over the entire period of the insurance, would it not, 20 years or whatever period it would reach?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. So far as the language contained in the bill provides.

Mr. ROWE. But does not the gentleman think it would be well here to so limit the fee as not to exceed $200?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That would be an excellent provision, but what we ought to have, in my judgment, is a provision for an appeal to be taken to the Secretary of the Treasury the same as an appeal may be taken to the Secretary of the Interior now in pension cases. I think this provision ought to be stricken out entirely and a substitute for it offered providing for an appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury. We do not need any of these expensive court proceedings here if the Government is going to pay these claims according to their merits instead of resisting them and see how few of them it can pay. These cases ought to be tried without any formalities. The claimants ought not to be required to try these cases under the ordinary forms of law and the Government itself ought not to be put to the expense that it will be put to in paying costs in the district courts of the United States which, as I have said, is the most expensive place in the country to try a case, where it costs four or five times what it does in the ordinary courts of a State. We will have thousands of these cases tried there if this provision is continued. The cost to the Government will be immense. The claimant will have to pay large fees and will be compelled to attend court at a distance, and it will encourage litigation by insuring a fee to every lawyer who can get the claimant to take his case to the district court. I hope the provision will be stricken out entirely, but if this can not be done, then an amendment ought to be offered which would reduce the fee which can be allowed.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL].

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am for this bill. I realize that it is a necessary bill and that it should pass, but I am afraid that the $3 limitation and a provision in the penalty clause of the bill is going to work harm. I know of cases where three consecutive sets of papers in a single case are and have been missing for claims arising since the war, where allotments have not been made, and where people are suffering for the want of having the allotment made, and I think that the gentleman in charge of the bill ought to insert an amendment something like this: Provided, That when three or six months (whatever time you may deem proper), have elapsed after the casualty causing the claim, without action by the Government the claimant may negotiate with an agent or attorney in reference to the claim. If a claimant to-day in any State in the Union goes out and tells an attorney that he is limited to $3, that he has waited three or six months to get action on his claim, he is going to get no legal service that can be of any value to him, and I think a provision which would keep a claimant from applying to people who can be of service to him would be a mistake.

The aim of this bill is to help the claimant and not to hurt him, and I think the penalty clause as it now stands is such that no reputable attorney anywhere in the country, unless it is for a purely patriotic purpose, will help the claimant to get his money. I think, Mr. Speaker, it ought to be amended, and I may offer an amendment if the chairman does not.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the Members of the House are at least partially conversant with what the proposed legislation intends to do, but in order that it may be succinctly and clearly set forth, let us see what the original act provided. The original insurance and war-risk act, in section 405, provided:

> That in the event of disagreement as to a claim under the contract of insurance between the bureau and any beneficiary or beneficiaries thereunder, an action on the claim may be brought against the United States in the district court of the United States in and for the district in which such beneficiaries or any one of them resides. The court, as part of its judgment, shall determine and allow such reasonable attorney's fees, not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount recovered, to be paid by the claimant on behalf of whom such proceedings are instituted to his attorney; and it shall be unlawful for the attorney or for any other person acting as claim agent or otherwise to ask for, contract for, or receive any other compensation because of such action.

Now, that was the provision in the original act. This act provides:

> And provided further, That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the presentation or adjudication of claims under articles 2, 3, and 4 of the original act.

Now, what are articles 2, 3, and 4 of the original act? Article 2 in the original act is in reference to allotment of family allowances. Article 3 is as to compensation for death or disability. Article 4 is as to insurance. So the proposed legislation succinctly sets forth that no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the presentation or adjudication of claims in regard to compensation, in regard to insurance, or in regard to allotment, except as provided in this act, namely, that there shall be an allowance of $3 for the preparation of papers in the presentation of the claim, and that no other allowance shall be made. That shall be the maximum. But the act further provides—and now I address myself particularly to the criticism of my friend from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]—that in case there is a dispute between the bureau and the beneficiary, the beneficiary may sue in the district court. What district court? The district court in which the claimant or beneficiary resides. Not in any district court, but in the situs or locality of the individual who has the claim against the Government.

That is just, because the claimant would have his witnesses in his locality, in all probability. That is just, because it will be less expensive to him than any other jurisdiction because it is the situs of the claim. It is just for another reason, because the party is resident there and sues before the district court where he has jurors who are his acquaintances and probably his neighbors and friends. Therefore the jurisdiction is all right.

The next question is, Is the compensation all right? My friend from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] proceeds on the theory that this is a pension claim. It is not a pension claim at all. It is a claim upon an insurance policy. The full amount is $10,000. I believe they now average about $8,000 as they generally run. But we will take the maximum sum of $10,000. The party disagrees with the bureau and says, "I am entitled to full compensation." He has lost both legs, or an eye and one leg, and therefore he claims full compensation for 12 months throughout 20 years, or 240 months. The Government says, "You are not entitled to it." Necessarily there must be litigation. The gentleman from Iowa says, "Refer it to the bureau itself." Refer it to the party who is interested for the Government? I say, "No." I say let the matter be determined by a jury of the claimant's peers. Let it be determined in the situs of the claim by people who are entirely unprejudiced in the matter, and let a jury of his peers determine as to whether or not the claimant has a just claim.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. While you fix the compensation at 10 per cent as the maximum, would it not be possible to say, also, "not to exceed a certain amount"?

Mr. DEWALT. It would be possible, and I am coming to that in a moment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Government officials are a prejudiced party?

Mr. DEWALT. I admit this, and I am very loath to say it, that the Government officials as a rule, not only in pension cases, but in other cases, hew very strictly to the line and adhere precisely to what they know the law to be, and there are equitable cases that possibly would be better determined by a jury of 12 than by any other tribunal that could be established.

Mr. MADDEN. If the department had already decided the case against the claimant, it would be likely to make an adverse decision, would it not?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly. They would be prejudiced. The man convinced against his will remains of the same opinion still.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. DEWALT. Now, coming down to the feature of compensation, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] says this 10 per cent is too great. We will take the $10,000 illustration, and the payments are to be for 240 months, covering a period of 20 years. An attorney must be employed, witnesses must be summoned, the law and the facts must be looked into. The compensation is not fixed at 10 per cent. It is fixed by whom and how? By the court, making a reasonable fee. "Whenever judgment shall be rendered in an action brought pursuant to this provision, the court, as part of its judgment, shall determine and allow such reasonable attorney's fees, not to exceed 10 per cent."

Now, the gentleman from Iowa takes the position that the courts would always fix 10 per cent, and says that his experience as a lawyer is that they uniformly do that. I am sorry to hear the gentleman admit that he practices in a jurisdiction of that kind. [Laughter.]

I know Iowa to be one of the most reputable States in the Union, and I have no doubt the gentleman comes from one of the most reputable communities in that State, and its judiciary should be above and beyond any such suspicion. My experience, not only in the district courts but in the courts of common pleas, has been that when they have a right to fix compensation they favor the claimants and make the fees rather low instead of high for the attorneys.

Mr. MADDEN. What would the gentleman say about fixing a limit on the amount?

Mr. DEWALT. I think that would be a wise provision, and I would stand for an amendment of that sort.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I should like to suggest that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] was also a judge in that State at one time.

Mr. DEWALT. I hope he was not as generous to the lawyers as he now says he would be.

Mr. TREADWAY. What would the gentleman suggest as a limit, if the provision suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is inserted?

Mr. DEWALT. The limit, of course, would be very hard to determine by any fixed rule. My thought would be this: That it should be a graduated scale based upon the amount recovered; that if the amount recovered was the sum of $1,000 there should be a 10 per cent fee, and that if the amount was larger the fee should be graduated according to what is known as the general fee bill in the court of common pleas of almost every jurisdiction. Let me explain. In the courts in which I have practiced for some 30 years—I am almost ashamed to tell you that, because it shows how old I am—when we have a collection of $10,000 we receive a maximum fee of 10 per cent on the first $1,000, 6 per cent on the next thousand, 5 per cent on the next, and so on down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I hope the committee will accept an amendment to the second paragraph. It will be observed that the second paragraph reads as follows:

> Any person who shall, directly or indirectly, solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, or who shall attempt to solicit, contract for, charge, or receive any fee or compensation, except as herein provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor

It seems to me the words "except as herein provided" should be stricken out, and that we should insert "in excess of the fees or compensation herein provided."

By a strict interpretation of this language, if an attorney charged only one-half the fees fixed by the court, that would not be as provided in this bill. The bill does not provide a limitation as to the amount received, except "as herein provided." Therefore, if a person received $1 instead of $3, or if the court should fix $1,000 as the maximum fee and the attorney should insist upon receiving but $500, then he would have received a fee or compensation different from the one herein provided. It seems to me we should say that any person who receives any fee or compensation in excess of the fees or compensation herein provided shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and that we should not say that any person who shall receive any fee or compensation except as herein provided shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. I hope the gentleman will accept that amendment.

Mr. RAYBURN. I move to amend the bill, on page 2, line 18, by striking out the word "ten" and inserting in lieu thereof "five," the same amendment to apply in line 16, page 4, to strike out "ten" and insert "five."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. RAYBURN: Page 2, line 18, after the word "exceed," strike out "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "five"; on page 4, line 16, after the word "exceed," strike out "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "five."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This does not occur at any other place in the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have considered the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and I am firmly convinced that the language of the bill is better than the language that he suggested, although he may be right and I may be wrong.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

Mr. ROBBINS. I should like to ask the gentleman a question before he moves the previous question. I have been trying to get in all the morning.

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would like to suggest to the chairman of the committee and to the Members here that this attorney fee, now reduced to 5 per cent, on a policy of insurance amounting to $10,000, would of course be $500. Now, how is that to be paid? This bill makes no provision for that, and the allotment would not be large enough to pay the whole of the fee out of the first payment. Hence you would have a widow deprived of her allowance for two or three payments in order to pay her attorney's fees. That is not right. There ought to be an amendment to provide that the attorney's fee should not be paid out of the first allotment, but should be paid pro rata out of the allotments as they fall due. Many of these people are going to be in great need of this money. It will be held up by litigation in the class of cases here referred to, and there ought to be some method by which this attorney fee would not all be paid out of the first or second or third allotment payable to the widow or beneficiary named in the policy. I suggest to the chairman that he permit an amendment providing that the attorney fees fixed and recovered by the judgment of the court, which can not exceed 5 per cent under the bill as now amended, shall be paid out of the allotments as they fall due, at the rate of one-tenth from each allotment payment. That would protect the beneficiaries and not work any hardship, because during the period that they are deprived of their allotment these people, who doubtless will be, very many of them, poor, will suffer for the need of it. We are dealing with distressing cases and if you are going to continue their distress by allowing a lawyer to demand and receive his fees before the claimant receives any money the law will only prolong an agony that we are trying to relieve.

Mr. RAYBURN. I should have no objection whatever to an amendment of that kind, if the gentleman has it drawn.

Mr. ROBBINS. I drew one and submitted it to a member of the gentleman's committee for approval. I will submit the amendment to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. RAYBURN. I offer this amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas withdraw his demand for the previous question?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; and I ask for a vote on the preceding amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas which has already been reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAYBURN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> At the end of line 18, page 4, strike out the period and insert a comma and add the following: "said fee to be paid out of the payments to be made to beneficiary under the judgment rendered at a rate not exceeding one-tenth of each of such payments until paid."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TAKING OVER CERTAIN TRANSPORTATION SYSTEMS.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill S. 3388, for taking over certain transportation systems, and crave the permission of the House for half a minute in which to make a statement. This is a highly important war bill, and as a result of the complete unanimity in the committee, growing out of our sense of the importance of the bill, we have agreed to eliminate any general debate on the measure. In addition, we have agreed to undertake, if the House is agreeable, to pass the bill in 20 minutes. If we should not succeed in doing this, then we will give way to the conference report on the agricultural bill. I make this statement on behalf of the entire membership of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If unanimous consent is given, will the gentleman have read in his time the letters he referred to yesterday, but which are not in the RECORD? There was a letter from Mr. Hurley, chairman of the Shipping Board.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. There was but one letter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was there not a letter from Admiral Bowles?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No, that was a statement before the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman make a statement in reference to that?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we take up the bill S. 3388, and if it is not disposed of in 20 minutes, the same to be then laid aside.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the bill S. 3388, with the understanding that if not concluded within 20 minutes it will give way to a consideration of the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 3388) to amend the emergency shipping fund provisions of the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved June 15, 1917, so as to empower the President and his designated agents to take over certain transportation systems for the transportation of shipyard and plant employees, and for other purposes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in the urgent deficiency bill of last year may be found two provisions, one empowering the Government to take over absolutely any completed ship, or ship in the process of construction, for the benefit of the United States, the other giving the Government the authority to requisition and take over for use of the United States, to be operated by the agencies of the Government, any shipyard.

A few weeks ago we passed the bill known as the housing bill, to afford homes for the employees of the shipyards. In that connection we appropriated, as the House will recall, a very large sum of money. The authorities in charge of this shipyard and housing work find that if they can take over certain urban and interurban electric lines in connection with these yards, and operate the same so as to give priority to the movement of employees of the yards, they will be enabled to save the Government a great deal of money and at the same time expedite the work of housing the employees.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Does that involve the taking over of railroads complete, or only such parts as the Shipping Board may have immediate use for?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will read a section of the bill which will afford the answer to the gentleman's question:

To take possession of, lease or assume control of, any street railroad, interurban railroad, or part thereof wherever operated, and all cars, appurtenances, and franchises or parts thereof commonly used in connection with the operation thereof necessary for the transfer and transportation of employees of shipyards or plants engaged or that may hereafter be engaged in the construction of ships or equipment therefor for the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman explain wherein that might conflict with the powers recently conferred in the railroad-control bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not think there will be any conflict at all, because the character of the transportation lines that are intended to be taken over, are not at all the lines taken over under the other bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is limited to the coming and going of workmen to the shipyards only?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. DENISON. What lines does the Government intend to take over?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is impossible to answer that precisely. Whenever, in connection with the housing problem, it is ascertained that by taking over and operating these lines as a Government proposition, and giving preferential transportation to the shipyard employees, the work in the yards may be advanced, then such lines may be requisitioned and operated. Any electric lines, necessary to the development of shipyards in that immediate community, may be taken over, and operated under the grant of authority afforded by this bill.

Mr. DENISON. Under any possible construction would this bill authorize the Government to take over lines in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not think so. The bill speaks for itself. If there are any lines in the District of Columbia that would be necessary to enable the Government to more efficiently build ships, in some adjacent yards, then the authority to take them over is afforded.

Mr. CANNON. There are shipyards in Alexandria, are there not?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes, the bill would authorize the Government to take over the shipyards and electric lines in that locality, if it should feel disposed to do so, and consider that the necessity of the case justified such action.

Mr. CANNON. With the bridges across the Potomac and the railroads here, could they not take over the railroads in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Conceivably so, yes. The power is intended to be coextensive with the necessities of the situation. It was the interest of the Government that was had in mind, in connection with this taking over, and operation of the yards and electric roads. There is no question that this bill affords an extensive grant of power.

Mr. DENISON. Is not that power already in the Government, to take over and commandeer such lines as may be necessary for this purpose?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I know of no such power.

Mr. DENISON. The War Department has done it, has it not?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not aware that it has.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any provision in the bill limiting the exercise of this power given to the period of the war or beyond the period of the war?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is an amendment to certain sections of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. Those sections were limited to the war period. This particular bill will be controlled by the provisions of the sections which it amends, as to the time for the exercise of the powers conferred.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any limitation in the provision carried in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think so. That is my understanding.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I have in mind an electric railroad company that is operated in connection with the public-utilities plant, that also runs to a shipyard. Is there power in this bill, if the railroad should be taken over, to also take over other property belonging jointly to the railroad company?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The answer to that will be found in the terms of the bill:

(f) To take possession of, lease or assume control of, any street railroad, interurban railroad, or part thereof wherever operated, and all cars, appurtenances, and franchises or parts thereof commonly used in connection with the operation thereof necessary for the transfer and transportation of employees of shipyards.

The necessities of the Government in connection with the operation of the shipyards will be the determining test of the extent to which these lines of transportation will be taken over.

Mr. SNYDER. Then, under the gentleman's interpretation of the bill, a public utilities plant that operates in connection with the railroads and trolley system would come under the act?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not if it was not necessary in connection with the transportation of the employees to the yard.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Section 2 also carries this railroad provision and would seem to give greater powers than those conferred in section 1.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will say to my friend in that connection that so far as the members of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House could ascertain, that addition is purely superfluous. We would have stricken it from the bill but for the fact that this is a Senate bill, and the Shipping Board represented to us that the emergency requiring its passage was very great. Hence we concluded that we would not undertake to amend the bill and thereby make it necessary for the same to be returned to the Senate. It does no harm in the bill, but it is true that it is superfluous.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is not confined to lines running to shipyards, and therefore might be considered as giving broader powers than the committee intends.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In that connection you might look to section (b) as the language cited is an amendment of that section.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have just done that, and that leaves it open. It would seem to require additional words, as, for instance, at the end of the paragraph, "in connection with the construction of ships," or "in order to reach shipyards," or something of that kind, so that it would be bound up with the shipbuilding proposition.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The language must be construed in the light of the purport of that paragraph (b), I think.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think it would do any harm if section 2 were stricken out?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not a particle. So far as the committee were concerned, we were perfectly willing to strike it out save for the reason which I have given. When the bill was under consideration in the committee, we were all agreed that the bill ought to be passed at the earliest possible moment. Hence we concluded not to undertake to make amendments that we did not regard as vitally necessary.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Having been on one or two important conferences, where the railroad question was discussed, I can see an element of danger in letting that stand in the bill as it is.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not think that in the practical operation and administration of the bill there will be any danger.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman thinks it is superfluous?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes, quite superfluous. I will say a word or more in this connection, and then desire to yield to some other member of the committee. I have given the substance of the sections of the bill so far as they relate to an affirmative grant of power. The succeeding provision relates purely to the compensation of the persons whose property may be taken over. It is the same provision that we have inserted in a number of other bills, namely that if an agreement can not be reached with the property owners as to the proper compensation for the property taken, then the same will be valued, and 75 per cent of that valuation paid over. The owner is given the right to sue in the proper courts of the United States for any remaining compensation claimed by him.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman one other question, as he is in charge of the bill, and I want to get information.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, just one moment. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I want to suggest to the gentleman that he has not yet read the letter to which he referred—the letter from Mr. Hurley.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is true, and I desire to have the letter read at this time. As I stated in relation to Admiral Bowles, he simply advised us in his deposition that he desired prompt action to be taken in the interest of the Government. I now ask to have read in my time the letter from Mr. Hurley, president of the Shipping Board.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, April 13, 1918.

Hon. J. W. ALEXANDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE ALEXANDER: The American International Shipbuilding Co. and the New York Shipbuilding Co., both of which I have just visited, have made large demands on us for large appropriations for housing. I am satisfied that large sums of money can be saved by improving our transportation facilities, and many of the men working at these yards are anxious to live in the large cities and will not live in the suburbs.

I therefore hope you will find it possible to urge the passage of Senate bill No. 3388, which empowers the President and his designated agents to take over certain transportation systems for the transportation of shipyard and plant employees.

It is far better to commandeer and loan money to going concerns, like electric street railway companies, than it is to build houses and take chances on renting them.

Yours, very truly, EDWARD N. HURLEY, Chairman.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Just one further word in relation to Admiral Bowles. There were full hearings on this bill, and Admiral Bowles testified at some length, but the substance of what he said in that testimony is this: "It will be readily seen that this is a war measure, and its purpose is to give the President the power to improve the transportation facilities of our shipyards, and in other places, and in connection with, other agencies now engaged in war activities."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman answer one more question, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] will indulge me? The question has been raised here whether this power might not be limited to the period of the war. It is suggested that the Shipping Board ought not to have power to take or operate roads after the war.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That question was asked. All of these measures are emergency propositions.

Mr. MADDEN. I have obtained a copy of the law, and paragraph (a) says:

To place an order with any person for such ships or material as the necessities of the Government, to be determined by the President, may require during the period of the war—

And so forth.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is what I stated I understood to be the provisions of the bill, which this bill seeks to amend.

Mr. DENISON. This bill would authorize the taking over of absolute title of the transportation companies and operating them for the Government. Does the chairman of the committee understand it that way?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is what the bill says in that connection. I do not understand that it bears the meaning imputed in the gentleman's suggestion, or query:

To take possession of, lease, or assume control of any street railroad, interurban road—

And so forth.

This provision would not support the acquisition of the title of the property, or of the permanent ownership of the property.

Mr. DENISON. Well, the question I am interested in more than anything else is the question of Government ownership. I understood the chairman to say, in his opinion, this bill does not authorize the taking over of the title of any transportation company.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not so understand it. Now, I will be glad——

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. The language is just the same as that in relation to the taking over of the railroads?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The law is limited, is it not, to interurban and street railways?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. FESS. It will not take over a railroad line or a steam line?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, no; nothing of that sort is contemplated.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, the other members of the committee may wish to say something, and there is but little time left of the agreed 20 minutes.

Mr. DENISON. Then I do not care to ask the question.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is the only reason, I do not yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would suggest the gentleman put his question, because the gentleman from Virginia has only four minutes remaining.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am perfectly willing to answer; I have no indisposition to answer questions that may be asked, if the necessary time is afforded.

Mr. DENISON. I notice in the report it is quoted here as saying further, "that all authority granted to the President therein, or by him delegated, shall cease six months after a final treaty of peace is proclaimed between this Government and the German Empire, then having acquired power and under that power acquired possession of this property by lease or otherwise, does that cease six months after the final treaty of peace?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Now, further. Is there anything in this law, or the other law which this amends, which terminates the possession acquired under these powers? In other words, that the power to acquire this property shall cease six months after the treaty of peace, that the possession of the property ceases ipso facto six months after the war. If it does not I think the bill ought to be amended so as to provide for that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The bill does not exactly state that. It says that all authority granted to the President shall cease.

Mr. DENISON. Taat is the authority to take over the property?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No, he could not operate it without authority. The authority to operate it must be provided, and is provided by the bill. In other words, as I understand the matter, a complete grant of authority to do the things necessary in this connection is afforded. When that general authority is terminated, then of course neither the further operation of the roads, or the acquisition of title will be possible.

Mr. DENISON. The chairman so understands it?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I so understand it. Now I would like for my colleagues, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROWE], to have something to say about this bill which represents, as I have stated, the unanimous action of our committee.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, there is no objection on the part of the minority to the bill that has been so clearly explained by my colleague from Virginia. I notice the objection made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to the second section of the bill. I would suggest that I think the title of the bill covers all that would be at all dangerous in section 2, and I hope that the bill may be read, so we may pass it in the 20 minutes. Now, unless there is some gentleman who desires to ask me a question——

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman states that there is no objection on the part of the minority. I presume he means the minority on the committee?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes; on the committee.

Mr. DENISON. Now, does the gentleman from Massachusetts understand that all power or authority over transportation lines as may be taken over ceases within six months after the declaration of peace?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I do so understand; that is provided in the law.

Mr. DENISON. And it will not require any further legislation to dispose of the powers given by this act?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. That is my impression.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, if no other gentleman wishes to ask any member of the committee a question, I ask for a vote on the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire, merely as a matter of record, to move to strike out section 2, because the gentleman admits it is not necessary.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I would say to the gentleman the committee would very much dislike to see that done, because it simply makes delay in connection with the passage of the bill, or we would have done that in the committee ourselves.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will not press the matter, but I will ask the gentleman again if his understanding and that of the committee is clear that section 2 does not give to the Shipping Board any power to take trolley lines or interurban lines that do not connect with the shipyards?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is not considered that those two sections give any more power than the first one would give. It was regarded in the committee—and other members of the committee are present—that that was a superfluity, but that we would not undertake to amend and correct the superfluities of the Senate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman sees no conflict between that provision and the railroad-control provision?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. None whatever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 486).

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. LEVER] I call up the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill and ask unanimous consent that the reading of the conference report be dispensed with and that the accompanying statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi calls up for immediate consideration the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have discovered that the statement is longer than the report.

R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the amendments of the Senate, namely:

On amendment No. 1: This amendment increases by $250,000 the appropriation for investigating the disease of tuberculosis of animals, for its control, eradication, etc., and adds new language providing that if in carrying out the purpose of the appropriation, the destruction of tuberculosis animals becomes necessary, that there may be paid from the appropriation not more than one-third the net loss to the owner, and in no event shall there be paid more than $20 for any grade or $50 for any pure-bred animal so destroyed. It also amends the act of May 29, 1884 (23 Stat. L., p. 31), so as to permit the interstate shipment for immediate slaughter of animals which have reacted to the tuberculin test. The House recedes and agrees with an amendment providing that, if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture it shall be necessary to destroy tuberculosis animals and to compensate the owners thereof, he may, in his discretion, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, expend out of the moneys of the appropriation such sums as he shall determine to be necessary for the reimbursement of owners of animals so destroyed, but no part of the appropriation shall be used in compensating owners of such animals except in cooperation with and supplementary to payments to be made by State, county, or municipality, where destruction of such animals shall take place, and no payment shall be made out of the money hereby appropriated as compensation for or on account of such animals destroyed if at the time of inspection or test, or at the time of destruction thereof, it shall belong to or be upon premises of any person, firm, or corporation to which it has been sold, shipped, or delivered for the purpose of being slaughtered. The amendment also provides that in no case shall more than one-third of the difference between the appraised value of such animal and the value of the salvage thereof be paid out of the appropriation, and in no case shall any payment be more than $25 for any grade animal, or more than $50 for any pure-bred animal, and no payment shall be made unless the owner has complied with all lawful quarantine regulations. The amendment also amends the act approved May 29, 1884 (23 Stat. L., p. 31), so as to permit cattle which have reacted to the tuberculin test to be shipped, transported, or moved from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, for immediate slaughter, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. The amendment further provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, permit cattle which have been shipped for breeding or feeding purposes from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and which have reacted to the tuberculin test subsequent to such shipment, to be reshipped in interstate commerce to the original owner.

GORDON LEE,
E. S. CANDLER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in the report on page 3, line 2, of amendment No. 38, there is a word spelled "owing." It should be "owning." I ask unanimous consent that the enrolling clerk be authorized to make that correction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is doubtful whether that can be done. However, without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, the report which has just been read states pretty fully the action taken by the conferees in reference to these various amendments. The only amendment that was disagreed to is amendment No. 44, known as the "wheat amendment." There is a full agreement on the part of the conferees of the House and of the Senate on all the other amendments in the bill.

The amendment in reference to the tuberculosis proposition agrees to the amount, but changes the language, putting a new provision in the bill, which has just been read, and which is fully explained in itself.

Another change which was made was in reference to the barberry bush rust proposition. The provision as passed by the House provided that "$50,000 shall be set aside for the investigation and control of the diseases of wheat, oats, and barley known as black rust and stripe rust," and amendment 8 adds the words "and the destruction of vegetation from which such rust spores originate, $150,000, which sum shall be immediately available." It simply provides for a specific sum, which is appropriated and intended to be used for that specific purpose.

Another change is with reference to the provision for the experiment station in Georgia, which adds a proviso which leaves the whole matter under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture in reference to the supervision or the operation of the Georgia experiment station, as set forth in the acts of Congress.

Another provision is in reference to the dehydration plants. The Senate provision provided for the erection of plants, and the provision agreed upon provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may cooperate "with individuals, firms, or corporations owning or operating plants for drying or dehydration of vegetables, fruits, and other perishable products, to determine the best means and processes of dehydration and to disseminate information as to the value and suitability of such products for human food." The amount provided for in the Senate amendment is agreed to by the House conferees, with another proviso contained in the Senate provision, putting it in the power of the President of the United States to request the establishment of these plants for conserving the food products for the use of the Army and Navy.

Those are the main provisions in the conference report, and they are all fully agreed upon by the conferees on the part of the House and Senate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has stated that he has referred to most of the points of difference between the two Houses. There is one amendment to which he has not referred, so far as my memory goes, and that is amendment No. 12, an innocent-looking amendment in itself, but one concerning which I would like to ask the gentleman a few questions.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The amendment strikes out the words "in the Forest Service."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was a matter resulting in considerable discussion in the House, and a desire for reform and economy in the matter of expenditures and allowances to employees in the department.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes, sir. I remember very well in reference to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The House took rather a positive stand on that, as I recall.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. There was an original provision reported in the House bill providing for the payment for the use of automobiles and motorcycles, providing for 6 cents a mile for automobiles and 2 cents a mile for motorcycles.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For the Forest Service only.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. And that provision, reported in the original bill, went out on a point of order. Then subsequently to that there was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], a member of the Committee on Agriculture, which was adopted in the House, providing for the payment according to those terms. That confined it to the Forest Service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is where the House left it?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That is where the House left it. The Senate struck out that provision. By agreement of House and Senate conferees the amendment was restored with a provision which strikes out "in the Forest Service," which limited it to the Forest Service, and makes it applicable to the department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is to say, it makes it wide open to anybody in the Department of Agriculture to now obtain mileage on automobiles and motorcycles?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It is in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, and the information that we have from the Department of Agriculture is that it will be a means of economy. If it does not result in economy, it will not be pursued or continued, but the sole purpose of the amendment is to bring about a reform, as the gentleman stated a moment ago, and to bring about economy in the service. It was believed by the department and by the conferees that it would result in economy, and the sole purpose of it is to save money to the Government. It is for that purpose, and that purpose alone.

Our idea was that if it was a good thing for the Forest Service it was a good thing for the whole service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How can that work economy if, having first been limited to the Forest Service, we now throw it wide open to everybody?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It is an entirely new provision.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was going to ask the gentleman what would be the increased cost when everybody in the department everywhere in the United States having an automobile or a motorcycle would come in for the mileage?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The department pays travel allowances now, and it is believed this provision will work out economy and a saving to the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should like to have an answer to that question. How can the department save money when, having first limited the payment of this mileage to those in the Forest Service, it is now to allow mileage to all other branches of the service?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. They allow travel service in the other branches of the Department of Agriculture as well as in the Forest Service. This is for the purpose of reducing that expense and making it more economical, and if it is made more economical for the Forest Service it is made more economical for the whole service. If I did not believe honestly that it would save the Government money I would not favor it. Travel pay is allowed now and this is intended to reduce that expense, and, believing it will reduce it and save money, I favor it.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I wish to add a word to the answer given by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The gentleman from Pennsylvania will notice that there are only certain cases in which those who are traveling are entitled to mileage or to travel expenses. It is not, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania says, anyone who has a motorcycle or an auto can get pay for the use of it. It is only those who are traveling at the expense of the Government by direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, and entitled to receive pay for that travel, who can now be paid 2 cents per mile for the use of a motorcycle or 6 cents a mile for the use of an automobile when doing such traveling.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman tell in what form this matter left the House?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The House provision was the first 11 lines on page 47, through which the black lines are now drawn. That was the House provision, and the Senate struck it out; but the conferees reinserted it with an amendment which leaves out the first four words in line 8, "in the Forest Service."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not that raise the question of the powers of the conferees?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Oh, no; I think not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am inclined to think the conferees have gone a step too far in this matter.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will look at the top of page 47 of the bill, he will see the language as it passed the House. The original proposition, as presented to the House by the Committee on Agriculture, went out on a point of order. That original proposition carried these allowances to all bureaus of the Department of Agriculture. Having gone out on a point of order, as explained by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], it was reoffered, confining its application to the Forest Service. When the bill went to the Senate, the Senate added the language on page 47, beginning with line 15, as an amendment to the House proposition, striking out the House proposition. The House conferees agreed to the Senate proposition on the theory that the matter had been passed upon by the Committee on Agriculture, after a thorough discussion, and in the belief that it would effect an economy in the administration of the travel allowance for the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What I am endeavoring to ascertain is whether the conferees did not insert something?

Mr. LEVER. No. We inserted nothing that the Senate had not already inserted, as far as I know.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If the gentleman will yield, he says that the Senate inserted a proposition as to automobiles. Where is that found?

Mr. LEVER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I was wrong about that.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senate simply struck out the House provision in toto.

Mr. LEVER. That is correct.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The only question between the two Houses was whether there should be automobiles in the Forest Service?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is correct. I was looking at another matter.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That was the only thing between the two Houses?

Mr. LEVER. The only thing between the two Houses was the proposition carried in the House bill.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does not that raise the question simply as to whether there should be automobiles in the Forest Service; and does that give the conferees the power to give automobiles to all branches of the department? It seems to me the conferees have gone beyond their authority.

Mr. LEVER. Probably we did go a little beyond our authority, but the point is raised too late, as a matter of fact.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted the gentleman from South Carolina to know that we are very strict on the rules, on this side.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; I know.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And we observe that the conferees have exceeded their powers.

Mr. LEVER. I think probably they have.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. After the gentleman has admitted it in this manly fashion, I do not intend to make the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. It is too late, as the gentleman will observe.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, I think not. It is never too late to do good.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, there is no desire on my part to delay the passage of the bill, but, as I understand, the bill will have to go back to conference anyway?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The bill will have to go back to conference on amendment 44, the wheat proposition, unless the House accepts the Senate amendment.

Mr. SEARS. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman to amendments 39 and 40. I notice in the report signed by the managers on the part of the House as to amendment 39—and the same thing applies to amendment 40, and I mention amendment 40 because I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is absent—amendment 39 appropriates $10,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with and make an exhibit illustrative of the investigations, products, and processes relating to farming in the United States at the Pan-American International Farm and Live Stock Exposition, to be held at Jacksonville, Fla., in conjunction with the Florida State Fair and Exposition, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

As I understand, the second part of this amendment was stricken out by the conferees because of an understanding entered into some years ago between the conferees of the House and the Senate that no appropriation similar to this should be made.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I was not on the conference committee at that time, but I understood during the deliberations of the conferees this time that that was an agreement entered into between the conferees on the part of the House and the conferees on the part of the Senate in preceding conferences, and that it was simply the carrying out of the understanding previously made.

Mr. SEARS. I will say to the gentleman that I would not have the conferees break any agreement they have entered into, but could not the conferees agree on the second paragraph of amendment 39? It does not carry any appropriation, but simply authorizes the President to extend an invitation to other nations to appoint delegates and representatives to the farmers' national conference. As I understand it, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi, this union does not desire an appropriation. They will be entirely satisfied if the conferees will agree to the second paragraph of the amendment. As I say, it carries no appropriation, does not cost the Government a cent, but simply authorizes the President to extend the invitation.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina to answer that question, as he has been on all the conferences when these matters were considered.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman from Florida, as explained by him a moment ago, some few years back there had grown up a habit of putting upon agricultural appropriation bills appropriations for various and sundry kinds of shows—dry-land congresses, dairy shows, and things of that kind. It got to be such an abuse that the conferees agreed among themselves that hereafter they would not allow such things to happen. In keeping that agreement the Senate conferees did not contest this proposition. More than that, I will say that the difficulty now in the way is that the Senate has already adopted the conference report, and it might make rather an awkward situation if we were to agree to take this amendment back to conference.

Mr. SEARS. The explanation is entirely satisfactory, and I only make this suggestion. If it should get into a position where the conferees could, without delay, I would like to urge the conferees to put the second paragraph in. Of course, the President could invite anybody without authority. But this gives direct authority, and gives some recognition without any expense to the Government, and I hope that the conferees will do the best they can.

Mr. LEVER. I will say that the gentleman from Florida has been extremely insistent on this proposition and has made my life a burden. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARLIN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi why he says that this would have to go back to conference.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It will depend on whether or not we agree to amendment 44. If the amendment should be adopted by the House there would be no further conference.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman refers to the wheat amendment?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes; if there should be no disagreement to the Senate amendment it would not go back to conference.

Mr. CARLIN. If we should agree to the amendment, which I hope we will, there will be no occasion for the conference report to go back?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. No; not if the report is adopted and the House concurs on the other proposition.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? I want to inquire of the gentleman about the wheat amendment. What are the facts, as brought out by the committee on investigation, as to the increased acreage, if any, under the price formerly fixed at $2.20 a bushel?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the winter sowing of wheat has been one of the largest in the history of the country, with the possible exception of the sowing of 1915. The reports which I have had from the spring-wheat area indicate that we are going to have one of the largest spring-wheat sowings we ever have had in the country. The total acreage in sight will amount to as much as 63,000,000 acres, which would be 3,000,000 acres more than the crop of 1915, which yielded a bumper crop. I do not care to go into the discussion of that at that time, for I hope to adopt the conference report and then take up the wheat matter.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am particularly pleased to note the agreement in conference upon the Senate amendment to increase the appropriation for the eradication of tuberculosis among the cattle of the country from $250,000 to $500,000; also the legislation therewith, which will make it effective and beneficial. This amendment came within three votes of adoption in the House and should have been passed here, but the fact that it has been agreed to in conference and will now be approved by the House and become law is satisfactory indeed.

There is no legislation we could adopt which will do more for the people than the eradication of bovine tuberculosis in cattle and thereby prevent the infection of the children with that dreaded plague. "The vitality of the people is the strength of the Nation." If we are to have a strong and healthy Nation we must do all we can toward having them supplied with pure and nutritious food. Impure milk affects the children more largely than it does grown people because it is more largely used by them than by adults, and in the very young their only food.

We provide legislation for the inspection of meat but none for the inspection of milk. We know that the latter is far more dangerous because it enters the stomach in its raw state, whereas the meat is cooked and many of the germs destroyed.

Dr. Welch, when speaking to a party of ladies on this question, said water and milk might be likened unto two streams flowing through a town, the difference being that if one put a number of, say, typhoid germs in the stream of water they would be tremendously diluted, whereas the same number in milk would be indefinitely multiplied. As with the typhoid germ, so it is with the tubercular germ.

Tuberculosis is one of the diseases which may be passed from animal to man. Dr. D. E. Schroeder, in a hearing before the Committee on Agriculture in the Sixty-first Congress, said:

The remarkable thing found by Dr. W. H. Park and his associates was that among a certain number of fatal cases of tuberculosis among infants 10 per cent is due to bovine sources. Among a certain number of children under 5 years of age, not all of which were fatal, something in the neighborhood of 26 per cent was due to bovine sources; among children between 5 years of age and 16 years of age about 16 per cent was due to this source; and he estimates that 15 per cent of all American tuberculosis is of bovine origin.

"It is also shown by estimates," said Dr. Schroeder, "that 60 per cent of the bacilli in a sample of milk is concentrated in the cream."

In the twenty-fifth annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry, page 152, it is said:

"The conclusion is almost forced upon us that a tubercular dairy cow is, to say the very least, one of the most important sources of tubercular bacilli with which we have to deal."

In an examination made by Park, of the New York City board of health, says Milk Hygiene by Moeller and Eichhorn, page 106, etc., the presence of bovine tuberculosis in man is as follows:

"In adults 955 cases were examined, of which 940 showed human infection and 15 bovine infection. In children from 5 to 16 years of age, out of 177 cases examined 131 were human infection and 46 bovine infection. Among children under 5 years of age, out of 368 cases 292 were of human infection and 76 of bovine infection."

Furthermore, Park mentions the very suggestive results obtained from 9 children under 6 years of age who were fed exclusively on cows' milk at the Foundling Hospital; 5 of these children died of bovine infection and 4 of human infection. On the other hand, in the Babies' Hospital, where the children are nursed or fed on prescription milk, out of 63 children dying of tuberculosis 59 deaths were brought about by human infection and 4 by bovine infection.

"If we compile the result of these figures," says he, "the following conclusion may be seen: That although tubercular cattle are less dangerous for man than is tuberculosis of man, the danger from the enormous spread of the disease in our herds, and especially among the dairy cows, should in no way be underestimated. Therefore the requirement of the elimination from dairy herds of all tuberculous animals which pass tubercle bacilli with their milk appears to follow as a matter of course."

When we realize that there are 22,000,000 cattle in this country, and that 1 in every 10 is infected with tuberculosis, we can imagine just how this dread disease is being spread among the children, especially, and the grown people as well. According to calculations, some 6,000 children die per year from bovine tuberculosis. We appropriated some $600,000 for the eradication of the boll weevil, hundreds of thousands of dollars for the eradication of hog cholera, thousands for the eradication of the cattle tick, and various other things, all worthy, but when it comes to the appropriation of money in order that we may have pure milk many Members of the House hesitate and doubt its benefit.

I can not understand how we have stood so long for the spread of this disease among cattle, with their tubercular germs by the millions going into the stomachs of the children and grown people of our country. It is therefore particularly gratifying that this Congress has realized the necessity of this legislation, that the Department of Agriculture will have sufficient funds with which to more vigorously attack this dread disease, that legislation has been provided by this amendment which gives them abundant authority and power to control and eventually remove it from our midst.

This dreadful war must necessarily destroy many of our splendid young men; others will no doubt be wounded and maimed and a great loss to the man power of the country. The first and foremost thing which Congress must therefore do is to see that our people are properly fed and given pure food, so that the mortality may be as small as possible. The mortality of the children of the land can be greatly decreased by the proper enforcement of this amendment and the purification of the milk supply. We must save the babies if we would have in future years a great Nation. They must also be saved in a healthy state. They can not protect themselves.

The recent examinations under the draft law has shown conclusively that the health of the people has not been guarded as it should. In the future years their lives, occupation, and food must be more seriously observed and controlled. We must have a strong Nation of strong and healthy people, and the best way is to begin at the source and remove those things which destroy life or bring disease.

I want to congratulate the men on the floor of this House who have stood shoulder to shoulder with me in the fight for this appropriation. They are men who are looking into the future and realize the great public benefit which must necessarily result. I want to thank the Federation of Labor for having taken up this work and pushed it so strongly during the last few years. They have been of inestimable benefit to me in the support of my efforts and in bringing the matter to the attention of the public and thereby creating public sentiment for the work.

Hundreds of clubs of the country have indorsed my resolution for pure milk and dairy products. The women's clubs and the Federation of Labor have particularly been active in its support, and I could mention a large number of prominent people who have assisted in the work. All of them are entitled to great praise.

This amendment, however, does not finally complete the job set before us. It is a big step in the right direction, but pure dairy products must necessarily follow. Government inspection of meat is a wise measure, inspection of oleomargarine is likewise a good one, but in order to bring the dairy products up to the high standard to which they are entitled and to make them the pure food of the Nation and create a large market for them abroad we must eventually bring them under the control of the Government.

The agitation of the question has done a great deal toward cleaning up dairies and the production of pure dairy products. The good men engaged in this industry already see the light and are conducting their business accordingly. It is not fair nor just to these men that others should be allowed to continue their business in an uncleanly manner. It is not fair competition nor good business, and I sincerely hope that Congress, having seen the necessity for the eradication of tuberculosis in dairy cattle, may soon see the light of day as to the proper inspection of dairy products. We may purify the food at the source, but it must be kept pure during its course through the creameries of the country and during its manufacture into butter and cheese, which are likewise disease-carrying products.

Some will say, Why has it become necessary for Congress to inspect dairies and dairy products? Have they not done business for years and years under present conditions, and have not our people thrived as perhaps no others in the world; and why, then, is there danger from this source?

We must remember, in connection with this, that conditions have changed in reference to dairies and dairy products, as well as they have changed in reference to the other food products of the country. There was a time when the farmer's wife prepared the butter in the cool spring house with definite care and cleanliness, and it was carried to market and sold directly to the consumer. Then came the time when creameries sprang up in every milk-producing neighborhood. The fresh milk was carried directly from the farm to the creamery in the near-by village, where the cream was separated and made into butter, and the separated milk returned to the farmer for such purposes as he might apply it on his farm. The butter made from it was known as whole-milk butter and was well made, cleanly, fresh, and usually pure. Then came the present situation.

New methods created by virtue of our greater population and the unusual demand for these products resulted in the centralizing factories to which milk is shipped for hundreds of miles to be made into dairy products. The new situation brought new conditions on the farms and among the purchases of milk. The long-distance hauls made delays beneficial until large quantities for shipment could be collected.

Then came the question of stale milk and cream and the further question of the methods used by the centralizers in preparing this stale milk and cream so that it could be made into butter. The question of the use of coloring matter in butter, so that no matter how impure, no matter how long it had stood, no matter how unclean it might be, it could be covered and hidden from the general consuming public by this coloring matter, the contents of which in itself is usually impure and unhealthy.

Disease can be carried so far and so long in dairy products that when they are not pure and wholesome they are a menace to the people.

We are making wonderful progress in the right direction and I have no doubt but that the work will go on and that in the next few years we shall have splendid results from the legislation we have passed to-day; and that the inspection of dairy products will naturally follow in its train. We shall look back to this legislation as one of our great achievements and wonder why we continued to allow such a dreadful state of affairs so long to exist in one of the great food products of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a motion to concur in the wheat amendment.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, is it not proper on that motion to move to concur in the Senate amendment No. 44?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would come later.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it not appropriate to make that motion now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion to concur in Senate amendment No. 44.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have that opportunity.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, before gentlemen begin to offer amendments upon the wheat proposition let us see if we can not agree on time for debate upon it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, what time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. LEVER. I promised when we sent the bill to conference that I would be as liberal as I usually am on these things. I suggest three hours, one hour and a half on a side.

Mr. HAUGEN. That seems fairly liberal, but yet I have at least 20 requests here for time. It seems to me the very lowest time we could agree upon would be two hours on a side.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on Senate amendment No. 44, and all amendments thereto, be limited to four hours, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and two hours by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to inquire if others besides those on the committee will be given opportunity to discuss this matter.

Mr. LEVER. Undoubtedly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate be limited to four hours on amendment numbered 44 and all amendments thereto, two hours of that time to be controlled by himself and two hours by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]. Is there objection?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it understood this debate is going to be limited to this question?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I will include that in my request, that debate be confined to this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman includes in the request that debate be confined to the question. Is there objection?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this mean it is to be called up during the day or to go over until to-morrow?

Mr. LEVER. No; it will go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, in case I offer an amendment, would I have to get time within those four hours?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; I think so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this time to be controlled by both gentlemen who are in favor of the lower price of wheat, or is it to be controlled half by those who are in favor of $2.50 wheat?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska I propose to select some member of the Committee on Agriculture who is in favor of the Senate amendment and yield one-half of my time to him. I do not know what the gentleman on the other side will do.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand the gentleman is going to divide his time; I shall follow the same rule as the other side.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 44.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman will not start a discussion of this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Oklahoma has not secured recognition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous consent asked by the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and correct my remarks on the war-risk insurance amendment passed this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS TO-MORROW.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I think in justice to the House I should state that I shall call up this conference report to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina gives notice that he will call up this conference report the first thing in the morning after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. LEVER. May I make a further suggestion? I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns this afternoon it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LOYALTY OF PEOPLE OF IRISH DESCENT.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to read into the RECORD a short extract from a morning paper entitled "Irish here for draft in Erin," under date of April 14:

IRISH HERE FOR DRAFT IN ERIN—TENNESSEEANS PROTEST TO DILLON AGAINST NATIONALIST OPPOSITION.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., April 14.

At a mass meeting of representative Irishmen and citizens of Irish lineage here this afternoon, a resolution protesting against the attitude of the nationalist leaders in Ireland toward conscription was passed and a copy cabled to John Dillon, nationalist leader in Parliament.

The tenor of the address and resolutions was to the effect that all questions of home rule and other matters affecting Ireland must be subordinated to the more pressing duty of preserving liberty and civilization.

T. P. McMahon, one of the speakers, said the people of Ireland were being misled by traitors and German propagandists. Mr. McMahon said it was just as much the duty of Irishmen to stand behind Lloyd-George as it was for Irishmen in this country to back President Wilson.

I ask to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, an expression of a similar sentiment from the lips of Mr. Festus J. Wade, one of the most prominent citizens of St. Louis, Mo., now engaged in the service of his country here, and himself an Irishman.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Louis Republic, Apr. 12, 1918.]

IRISH DECLARATION OF 1914 SHOWS IDEA OF DRAFT REVOLT IS UNFOUNDED, SAYS F. J. WADE.

The following is the address delivered yesterday by Festus J. Wade, State director of the war-savings committee, at the unveiling of the statue, "America defending civilization":

"Mr. Mayor, Ladies, and Gentlemen: The question now before the country is whether liberty and democracy will live or whether militarism, despotism, and German 'kultur' shall survive. The news in the morning paper is not encouraging, and yet I am as certain of the victory of our allies and our flag as I am that there is a God in heaven.

"You must not be misled by the publications coming across the seas. You must remember that we have justice, liberty, and democracy on our side and we can not and will not fail.

"You will notice in the press dispatches to-day it was predicted that when that great old war horse, Lloyd-George, the Premier of England, demanded conscription and draft upon the Irish people that revolution would follow. The Irishmen, and I am one of them—born there—have for centuries stood for the purity and sanctity of their womanhood and the courage and valor of their manhood; and the Irishman in Ireland or in America that for one instant says a word against the British Empire in its hour of distress strikes at the American flag, because that flag, the French flag, and the British flag are all one flag, fighting for one common purpose—for liberty, for democracy, for the sanctity of womanhood, and the freedom of the world.

"Therefore I want you to treat the Irishman who denounces any of our allies the same as you treat pro-Germans. This is not a time to divide. We have all got to stand together. There are slackers in Ireland, there are slackers in America, there are slackers in England, and there are slackers in France. We have been forced to conscription and draft in this country to raise our army, and do not think for a moment that we will lose this war of liberty. We have 500,000 of the grandest men in the world, the very greatest asset that we possess, men between the ages of 20 and 30, in France to-day—your people and mine—and we are sending over to the battle field 20,000 men a week, and with God's help we will increase that to 40,000 a week until victory shall be ours.

"I want every man here to-day to become a bond salesman, and I want every woman here to become a bond seller, and I want you to go to your neighbors and tell them that the boys in khaki, who are giving up their lives, who are making the supreme sacrifice, need your support and mine, and I want to get into your minds, because I am an Irishman who loves that flag as no other flag in the world, that these press reports are all a myth; that they are pro-German in their instinct and intent, and are misleading the people. I want to read to you the declaration of the Irish party in Parliament, delivered December 17, 1914, and I want to call your attention to the fact that when this was delivered that John Redmond, the greatest Irishman in his day, was at the head of that party, and I want to tell you in addition that John Redmond's brother at that time was an officer in the British Army, and has since lost his life fighting for you and me. Here is the declaration:

"'A test to search men's souls has arisen. The empire is engaged in the most serious war in history. It is a just war, provoked by the intolerable military despotism of Germany. It is a war for the defense of sacred rights and liberties of small nations, and the respect and enlargement of the great principles of nationality. Involved in it is the fate of France, our kindred country, and the chief nation of that powerful Celtic race to which we belong; the fate of Belgium, to whom we are attached by the same great ties of race, and by the common desire of small nations to assert their freedom, and the fate of Poland, whose sufferings and struggles bear so marked a resemblance to our own. It is a war for the high ideals of human government and international relations, and Ireland would be false to her history and to every consideration of honor, good faith, and self-interest did she not willingly bear her share in its burdens and sacrifices.'

"That is the Irish platform.

"In conclusion, ladies and gentlemen, let me say to you, it is your sacred and solemn duty to forget all your 'isms.' Remember that you owe allegiance, first to God and then to the flag of your country."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it is the expression of sentiments such as these from the gallant natives and their descendants of the Emerald Isle at this time that gives to Americans renewed courage and stimulates them for continued fighting to the end.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I ask the Secretary to read a resolution adopted by the Knights of St. Patrick of San Francisco.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

KNIGHTS OF ST. PATRICK,
San Francisco, March 16, 1918.

Resolved by the Knights of St. Patrick of San Francisco, assembled at their forty-third annual banquet on St. Patrick's eve, 1918, That as a patriotic American organization we send greetings of respect, friendship, and loyalty to Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, and express our highest approval of his wisdom, statesmanship, and humanity in conducting the present war with Germany; and be it further

Resolved, That we, as native-born Americans and as naturalized Americans of Irish blood, reaffirm our undying devotion and loyalty to the righteous cause of our beloved country, the United States of America, in its present effort to make the world safe for democracy and to protect the autonomy of smaller nations; and to promote this end we cheerfully pledge our honor, our possessions, and our lives, if need be.

Unanimously adopted at the banquet of the Knights of St. Patrick on St. Patrick's eve, March 16, 1918.

Attest:

ROBERT P. TRAY,
Past President, Knights of St. Patrick.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, it might be asked what appropriateness there is in introducing a subject of this kind at this time. The Senator from Colorado saw fit to introduce resolutions of similar tenor, which seem to differentiate between the rights of foreign-born men, naturalized Americans, as to their duty to America and to their duty to the land from which they sprang.

In the Evening Star of last evening I find that Lloyd-George, the Premier of England, said in a speech, which I shall read, and which will, when I repeat his remarks, serve very greatly to explain why I, in common with the Senator from Colorado, have broached this question at this time. He said:

"As to America, the opinion reaching the Government is that sentiment in America supports the bill"—

That is, the conscription bill—

"provided self-government is offered Ireland. It is vital to us at the moment that America is coming to our aid through the most remarkable decision ever taken by any executive. President Wilson's decision was not without difficulty, but it was the only way America could render practical assistance in this battle.

"WOULD ADD TO UNITED STATES SUPPORT.

"In these circumstances America is entitled to expect from the British Government—though they could not ask any government to carry out domestic legislation—that they would smooth these difficulties and, at any rate, not increase them. I am certain nothing would help more at the present juncture to secure the full measure of American assistance than the determination of the British Parliament to tender to Ireland her own parliament."

It seems to me that the Americans of Irish extraction are not opposed to rendering every support possible to the allied armies in our great cause, and in winning our great cause for the liberty of the world it will necessarily include the winning of their own liberty. The cause of the smaller nations of the world is our cause, and their cause is our cause. The German doctrine of the survival of the fittest, the right of the strong to crush the weak, which is repulsive to Christian civilization, shall never be tolerated.

I have here a telegram from Mr. T. P. O'Connor, the delegate of the National Irish Party to the United States, and also a telegram from Garret W. McEnerney, considered by many as the leader of the bar of San Francisco, on the same question, which I beg to submit:

"SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., April 13, 1918.

"Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
"2249 R Street, Washington, D. C.:

"I take most serious view of proposed conscription in Ireland. All my information makes me feel certain it can not be carried out without bloodshed, and I feel certain that in the conflict between the Irish population and the English military forces that women and quite likely children will be killed as well as men. You will know better than I the effect such unfortunate results will have upon American opinion and morale, but I am strongly of opinion that it will dreadfully inflame the Irish race in America and Australia and have profound effect on the feelings of the English-speaking world. I am looking at the moment from the American point of view. I suggest having you consider appropriateness of laying these aspects of the case before the President in the hope that it will bring about in London a reversal of the plan of conscription.

"T. P. O'CONNOR."

[Telegram (night letter).]

"SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., April 15, 1918.

"Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
"Washington, D. C.:

"As Americans, and as believers in the nobility of the allied cause, we would both be very happy if every Irishman of military age could be induced to join British fighting forces on western line. Conscription of all Ireland by England and Ulster in combination is quite a different thing. For last four years England and Ulster combined have denied Ireland the enjoyment of her rights constitutionally fought for and constitutionally won. Ireland's rights and duties now are correlated. Home rule and conscription should go together. We are fighting for moral issues, and England owes it to her allies and to her own glorious place in the war not to embark upon the indefensible and immoral course of exacting allegiance from all Ireland while refusing the just and equal operation of law to both Catholic and Protestant Ireland alike.

"GARRET W. MCENERNEY."

[Telegram.]

"SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., April 16, 1918.

"Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
"Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

"It is of the utmost importance that there should be struck the true note upon conscription in Ireland if the occasion arises. I should say the public opinion upon this subject may be fairly divided into four classes: The first class may be said to embrace those who have little or no acquaintance with Irish affairs and little or no sympathy with Irish aspirations. This class is as firmly committed to the idea that there should be conscription in Ireland forthwith, on account of urgent military necessity, and that conscription should be carried out in total disregard of any other considerations whatever. The second class, I should say, hold the views which I attempted to express in my night letter of last night. The third class are those who hold that conscription should not follow home rule until conscription should be agreed to by an Irish parliamentary body or other body representing the public sentiment in Ireland. The fourth class will embrace those who are opposed to conscription in any form, largely upon the ground that they do not wish the Irish to augment the British fighting forces. I believe that some of this fourth class are opposed to a settlement of the home-rule question because they feel that conscription will logically follow a home-rule settlement. It may very well happen that many of the Nationalist Party in Ireland will be found in the third class, and the propaganda of the leaders of the Sinn Fein Party would throw that party into the fourth class. In my opinion the overwhelming body of American opinion would fall into the second class. In expressing the foregoing views I have been dealing with the matter as one of abstract fairness. I am, of course, mindful all the time that Ireland is now pretty thoroughly distraught and frenzied, and that conscription may transform Ireland into a slaughterhouse, thereby bringing about a result infinitely more harmful than any good that was ever thought to be accomplished. If the enforcement of conscription in Ireland were attended by butchery of the civilian population, I am afraid that the horror of it all would chill the heart of many a brave young soldier of Irish origin in the American Army. These are psychological matters which no amount of fidelity can altogether overcome. To my mind the matter is one of the greatest possible complexity, and, after all, it may require the assistance of Divine Providence to pull us through.

"GARRET W. MCENERNEY."

Mr. President, I assume that Mr. O'Connor means by "reversal of plan" the granting to Ireland of autonomous government on the principle of self-determination before any attempt shall be made to enforce conscription. That would put the population in the sure position of fighting for itself; and that is the only honorable and feasible plan.

Mr. President, the speech by Lloyd-George published last night meets this demand and seems to indicate that the premier has a profound understanding of American public opinion, which, while it requires service by every friend at this time for our cause on French battle fields, it also is convinced that England owes self-government to Ireland, and that it should be promptly granted, in line with the universal sentiment of justice and fair play so ably voiced by our President.

I ask permission that an editorial from the New York World of April 17 be printed in the RECORD without reading, which fairly states, in my judgment, a fair expression of American public opinion.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOME RULE BEFORE CONSCRIPTION.

If the British Government, as a matter of justice no less than of policy, should grant Ireland home rule before applying conscription to that country its position would be strengthened.

The man-power bill, so suddenly projected into the House of Commons, has created a dangerous state of feeling throughout Ireland. Serious consequences may be expected unless prompt steps are taken to right the situation by methods of conciliation.

The Irish people have reason to regard with suspicion the intention of the Government in respect to home rule. They received an absolute pledge of local government for Ireland when Parliament in 1914 passed the home-rule act, but at the beginning of the war it was held expedient to suspend indefinitely the operation of the law. Lloyd-George, on assuming the premiership, held out definite promises that home rule would soon be established, but at once unionists, at the instigation of Lord Lansdowne, vetoed the agreement entered into with John Redmond. To the charge that the Coalition Government had broken faith with Ireland, Lloyd-George could offer only a lame explanation.

To impose conscription at this time on Ireland while leaving in doubt what action shall be taken on the majority recommendations of the Irish convention will be only to aggravate the old distrust of the Government on the part of the Irish. It will place new weapons in the hands of advocates of violence and civil war like the Sinn Feiners. But urging Lloyd-George to put home rule ahead of conscription for Ireland, the labor ministers of the cabinet are pointing the way to a peaceful settlement of the whole Irish question. Their proposal is the best hope of removing the difficulties that the Government faces.

"STRONG MEN TO THE FRONT."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate a few passages from an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post this morning:

STRONG MEN TO THE FRONT.

The appointment of Charles M. Schwab as director general of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, to have complete control of shipbuilding, is the best of evidence that the United States is rapidly going through the process which has been experienced by every nation in war, whereby the strong displace the weak, and the fittest survive and triumph. In some nations the process is slow and incomplete. In the United States it is to be quick and thorough.

Some men in authority are so constituted that they can not bear the thought of sharing responsibility with strong men, for fear that their own abilities may be overshadowed. The really great man, the true patriot, will always welcome cooperation. He is conscious of his own strength, and therefore he is not jealous of the strength of others. He is bent upon success, not upon exploitation of personalities. Chairman Hurley's action in calling in Mr. Schwab is most gratifying proof of breadth of character, earnestness, and manly devotion to the country's cause. It is the act of a strong and great man, an act that a weakling could not bring himself to perform. Mr. Hurley is acting solely for the success of the country, and inspired by this zeal he has selected Mr. Schwab as the best qualified industrial field marshal in the United States to take command of the forces of ship construction. These forces are becoming a mighty army, and they can not be victoriously commanded by anyone of mediocre ability. The country applauds the selection of Mr. Schwab, and is appreciative of his prompt and wholehearted response to the call of duty.

The appearance of strong men at the front is in no sense accidental. It is inevitable in a virile country like the United States, where overwhelming victory merely awaits the organization of the Nation's manhood and its material resources and their proper employment in war. France and England have weeded out incompetents and feeble-willed officials, replacing them with men whose keen intelligence, iron will, and capacity for work are among the indispensable factors of national success. The same process in America is beginning to relegate weaklings and pacifists to the rear.

The war is to be long, and the United States is to have a major rôle in the tremendous drama. The times are heroic, and they call for heroic men. Plans must be amplified to meet the needs of the war and commensurate with the capacity of the United States to make war. It is impossible for small men to conceive of the problem in its full magnitude. That can be done only by brains accustomed to great problems and enkindled with a realization of the immensity of the task that confronts this Nation and its allies. Then, when the plans have been laid and the work of execution begins, there must be equally strong wills and firm hands to supervise the work of production and delivery.

I can only express my earnest hope that a Schwab will be found at an early day to handle the creation of fighting flying machines and that all through our service able men will be put on guard and kept there.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think we all join with the Senator from Georgia in that declaration. For some reason or other it has taken a long time to discover the able men. I trust the appointment of Mr. Schwab is the beginning of better things, both as to the airplane situation and other situations that confront us at present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was the hope I meant to express.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? [A pause.] Morning business is closed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I made the point of order on the conference report when it was presented yesterday on the ground that it contains new matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Kansas point out the new matter against which he makes the point of order?

Mr. CURTIS. I desire, if I may, to make merely a brief statement. The amendment numbered 60, as the bill passed the Senate, on page 53, included the words "excluding oil and gas leases," and, on page 54, amendment numbered 60 included the words "except oil and gas leases." Under the law leases of every kind and character of the Five Civilized Tribes must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

When this bill was considered by the Senate an amendment was proposed that would allow certain uncontested leases to be approved by the superintendent, but the Senate specifically excluded oil and gas leases. When the bill went to conference the conferees agreed to strike out the words "except oil and gas leases," and the words "excluding oil and gas leases," which made the provision general, and went much further than the Senate intended to go. The proposition was not considered in the House or the Senate, because the oil and gas leases were specifically excluded. I take it that if the amendment had been drawn in another way there would have been no question about it; in other words, if the amendment had provided that farming, grazing, coal, asphalt, or stone leases should be approved, and had said nothing about oil or gas, and if the conference committee had then added oil and gas, there would have been no question. The word "mineral" was used, which is a broad term, and the Senate committee intended that oil and gas should not be included, and therefore specifically excluded them.

I insist that the conferees went further than they were permitted to go under the new rule, when they struck from the bill the words "excluding oil and gas leases" and the words "except oil and gas leases." In answer to a question asked by a Senator behind me, I will say that the House inserted nothing on the subject.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. Speaking to the point of order, I desire the attention of the Senate for a moment to the amendment to Rule XXVII, which reads as follows:

Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House.

It will not be pretended that the conferees in this case inserted anything not agreed to by either House.

Nor shall they strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses.

Both Houses did not agree to this amendment. On the contrary, the Senate passed the general amendment and the House rejected it.

If new matter is inserted in the report, or if matter which was agreed to by both Houses is stricken from the bill a point of order may be made against the report, and if the point of order is sustained the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference.

I was on the conference committee, and the language of the amendment which was offered in the Senate and which was passed on by the Senate made this provision:

Provided further, That no part of said appropriation—

For the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes—shall be used in forwarding the undisputed claims to be paid from individual moneys of restricted allottees, or their heirs, or in forwarding uncontested agricultural and mineral leases, excluding oil and gas leases, made by individual restricted Indian allottees, or their heirs, to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, but all such claims or leases, except oil and gas leases, now required to be approved under existing law by the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid, approved, rejected, or disapproved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma.

At the end of the section the conferees inserted the words:

And provided further, That the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes shall, immediately upon the approval of any lease, notify the Secretary of the Interior of such approval, giving the names of the parties and description of the property leased.

And they struck out the words "excluding oil and gas leases." They also struck out the words "except oil and gas leases," so as to leave the language of the agreement to mean that the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes should pass on uncontested oil and gas leases and uncontested leases of any kind and undisputed claims of any kind, leaving an appeal to be made in case of contest to the Interior Department. The conferees put at the end of this provision the safeguard that the superintendent shall immediately upon the approval of any lease notify the Secretary of the Interior of such approval.

The reason for the amendment is that the clerical work has been and is being duplicated over and over again. There was given to the committee hearing the evidence with regard to this the record of the mail division of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes; and I ask Senators to listen to this, for I shall only detain the Senate for a few moments. It is a matter of importance to my State, and it is a matter of importance in saving the money of the United States.

The mail division of this superintendency amounted to 880,000 pieces of mail. A large part of it was in this incessant duplication of work, sending uncontested and undisputed matter from the superintendent's office to a corps of clerks in Washington, to be passed on by those clerks in Washington, and then sent back to the superintendent's office.

There has been no question about the integrity or the ability of the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes; there has been no such question of any of the superintendents who have had control there in the years which have gone by. The mistakes, in my judgment, which have been made at all in Oklahoma questions have very largely been made in Washington City by the clerks in this city.

The Senate having agreed that these uncontested and undisputed cases, except oil and gas leases, need not come to Washington if they were reported promptly, the conferees struck out the words "oil and gas leases," leaving uncontested and undisputed claims and leases of any kind to be settled in Muskogee, where they have 300 clerks passing upon questions of this character.

The work ought not to be duplicated, as a matter of national economy. If there is any question about the integrity or the ability of the superintendent, of course he ought to be removed; or if the department thinks that another visé of everything going on there should be made, they ought to have some other representative of the Interior Department on the ground to pass upon it; but these cases coming here have laid in the department in the past for long periods of time. Leases come here and stay for six months. I have in my hand a large record of leases, appearing on page 100 of the hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, showing that very many of these leases staying here for months and months and months without action, interfering with the ordinary and reasonable conduct of Oklahoma business.

Now, speaking to the point of order, I wish the Senate to realize what this really is. The Senate agreed broadly that the sum of $185,000 appropriated for the expenses of the administration of this office should not be employed in this work of duplication, but the Senate excepted uncontested gas and oil leases. The House disagreed broadly to the whole provision, having disagreed to all the Senate amendments as a formal matter of disagreement. Then the conferees took this matter up, the Senate having inserted an amendment bearing upon the limitation of the use of this $185,000, and the conferees exercised their judgment in adjusting the matter. I will say, in passing, that when we considered it all of the conferees agreed to it; all of them signed the report, and after we had signed the report the Indian Office, never willing to give up any jurisdiction whatever, made themselves very busy, urgently protesting against the inclusion of "oil and gas leases," and suggesting that it would lead to harm and wrong of all sorts; but they did not specify anything; they did not do what they should have done, written a letter to the committee and state what their objection specifically was. I want them to state their objection openly, not by whispering under cover, where the objection can not be seen, understood, and analyzed.

As appears from page 253 of the hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, this matter was suggested and the question was discussed by the committee. I proposed an amendment broadly covering these matters, and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who has been long in the service, in speaking of undisputed claims and uncontested leases, said:

I think that uncontested matters ought to be settled down there and gotten rid of. I have been trying to get the department to do that for some 15 years.

But the department do not willingly relinquish authority; they do not want to have their clerks give up the going over of this matter.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Just a moment. I will yield to the Senator from Kansas. I think I have the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. OWEN. I think not.

Mr. ASHURST. I think I have.

Mr. OWEN. No.

Mr. ASHURST. I will leave it to the Chair.

Mr. OWEN. The Chair must decide that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona yielded to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I did not know the Senator from Arizona had yielded; I thought I was speaking in my own right to the point of order of the Senator from Kansas. I yield the floor, of course.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has listened to the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Kansas. As these points of order are not discussable in the first instance, and as there will probably be an appeal from the decision of the Chair, the Chair wishes to rule on the point of order. This is not a question as to what the law is or what the law should be, nor is it a question as to what the legislation should or should not be; it is a plain question as to what can be done in this conference report under the rules of the Senate. The Senate adopted an amendment appropriating certain money and providing that no part of that money should be used in forwarding undisputed claims to the department at Washington for approval, but that they might be approved by the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma. The claims which the Senate provided should not be forwarded to the Interior Department were agricultural and mineral leases, and the provision specifically excepted oil and gas leases therefrom. The rule of the Senate recently adopted is that—

Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House.

The conferees have now provided that oil and gas leases shall not be sent to Washington for approval by the Secretary of the Interior. That is a plain insertion of new matter by the conferees, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I do not think it advisable for me to take up the time of the Senate, which is so important, upon a minor matter of this kind, and I shall take no appeal from the decision of the Chair. I wish to say, however, in my own behalf, as one of the conferees, that I do not agree with the decision of the Chair in this matter, because the House of Representatives in rejecting this matter rejected the whole of the Senate provision, and, having rejected the whole of the Senate provision, rejected what the Senate did in its attempt to limit the expenditure of this money in this way. Therefore the whole subject matter was before the conferees, in my judgment, and I think the conferees did not exceed their jurisdiction in limiting the expenditures, subject to immediate report of all leases approved to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the controversy, except to state that when I signed the conference report, in language quite plain I advised the Senator from Oklahoma that this was a plain and palpable violation of the rules; and I am very glad that the Chair has passed upon it, so that hereafter conferees, whatever the pressure may be, will manfully stand up and refuse to insert matter that the Senate has precluded them from inserting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report is recommitted to the committee of conference.

ARMY CHAPLAINS—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 216).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate:

I am taking the liberty of returning without my signature S. 2917, entitled,

"An Act to amend section fifteen of the Act approved June third, nineteen hundred and sixteen, entitled 'An Act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' as amended by the Act approved May twelfth, nineteen hundred and seventeen, entitled 'An Act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and eighteen, and for other purposes,'" because I fear that the last proviso contained in the Act, and constituting the last printed line of the engrossed copy herewith returned, is susceptible of being interpreted to mean that no chaplain shall retain his commission in the Army of the United States after reaching the age of forty-five.

I assume that this was not the intention of the Congress and respectfully suggest that these words be substituted,

"That no person shall be appointed chaplain in the Army who on the date of appointment is more than forty-five years of age."

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 18 April, 1918.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The objections will be entered at large on the Journal, and, unless there is some objection, the reconsideration of the question will be postponed until the Committee on Military Affairs can examine the veto.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 10783. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to increase the facilities for the proof and test of ordnance material, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 11245. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto, approved October 6, 1917, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 4292, on the calendar, relating to the use of metallic silver.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4292) to conserve the gold supply of the United States; to permit the settlement in silver of trade balances adverse to the United States; to provide silver for subsidiary coinage and for commercial use; to assist foreign governments at war with the enemies of the United States; and for the above purposes to stabilize the price and encourage the production of silver, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are the amendments to be passed upon as they are reached?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Oklahoma, having the bill in charge, if he intends to make any statement as to the necessity of the legislation?

Mr. OWEN. I shall be very glad to do so. I submitted a report on the bill which is before the Senate, and in which a statement is made with regard to it. I shall be glad to make the statement on the floor or to answer any questions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Pending that, I ask that the bill be first read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency is, on page 1, line 5, before the word "hundred," it is proposed to strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized from time to time to melt or break up and to sell as bullion not in excess of 350,000,000 standard silver dollars now or hereafter held in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill the reason for the increase in the amount of silver dollars to be melted and broken up.

Mr. OWEN. The reason is that there is in sight a demand for a larger amount than the $250,000,000 first proposed.

Mr. SMOOT. Or, I might add, the $350,000,000.

Mr. OWEN. Possibly.

Mr. THOMAS. In sight for what purpose?

Mr. OWEN. In sight for the purpose of meeting the international debtor trade balances of the United States for the use of nations at war with Germany. There is a large demand for silver in India, among others.

Mr. THOMAS. That demand is not the demand from the United States directly, is it?

Mr. OWEN. It is from the most important ally of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be; but it is a demand which is not primarily that of the United States?

Mr. OWEN. I think it is properly to be regarded as a demand on the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course that is a matter of opinion between the Senator and myself.

Mr. OWEN. I think we have no difference as to the facts. It is a matter of opinion.

Mr. THOMAS. Frankly, I understand that the demand is one which is against Great Britain rather than against the United States. If I am wrong in that impression, I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is wrong. We need $50,000,000 per annum to take care of our jute from India alone.

Mr. THOMAS. Then that is only $50,000,000 of the $350,000,000 of this money that is going to be destroyed.

Mr. OWEN. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the facts, without expressing any opinions of my own at all.

The United States has, as a matter of fact, found it necessary to finance in large part this war. We have been furnishing our allies thousands of millions of dollars. That money has been used to pay for goods shipped from neutral countries which are in excess of the amounts that neutral countries import from the allies; and those trade balances can only be paid for in one of three ways: Either by commodities—and that possibility, of course, is already destroyed when we get the trade balances—by gold or silver, or by the placing of credits. We are, therefore, face to face with a very large demand for metallic money in the Orient to meet the demands there of our debtor-trade balances.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not object for a moment to any expenditure which this Government has made, or which in the opinion of its officers should be made, in aid of any of our allies in this war. I heartily approve of every such step of the past and every such step of the future, because we are in this war practically as a unit, and every ounce of credit and of financial aid that needs to be furnished and which can be furnished will, if it is so directed, meet with my unqualified approval. Hence, my queries are not of a complaining nature, nor should they be taken to indicate any purpose upon my part to oppose that general policy. But, frankly, I am suspicious of any movement in the American Congress which has for its purpose the diminution of our silver supply. It has been said that a burnt child dreads the fire; and the people whom I in part represent here have been burnt so much and so frequently that they are apt to shy at a fire even from a distance. I want to know why, and I want to know definitely why, it is going to be necessary to take out of the Treasury of the United States three hundred and fifty millions of silver dollars and melt them up, when there is a good deal of silver in the markets, and will be more silver in the markets if the Governments needing it will obey the law of supply and demand and pay for it what it is worth and what it costs to produce it.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to say——

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment, and I will yield the floor. So that my queries are entirely for information. If it is necessary to take them all, and anything else we can lay our hands upon, for the purpose of prosecuting this war, God knows I am willing to go to the extreme limit; but a bill of this sort, which is taken up practically as an emergency measure, is one about which I must be fully informed before I can consent to support it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, answering the Senator's suggestion that this bill would diminish the supply of silver in the United States, which is the essence of the anticipated fear he suggests, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this silver is lying unemployed as dead metal in the Treasury of the United States as a basis of the silver certificates which now we intend to replace, as far as currency is concerned, with the Federal reserve bank notes, based upon the security of United States one-year gold Treasury notes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. Then one purpose of this bill is to retire a perfectly good currency, represented by silver certificates, circulating at par, and costing the people nothing, for an equal amount of paper money, based, of course, upon security, but costing the people of the United States the interest upon the certificates and other evidences used for the issue of the new money. In other words, we are going to substitute an interest-bearing for a noninterest-bearing currency. Is not that correct?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, when the necessity arose to use this metallic silver it was perfectly plain that if we used the silver which was the basis of the present silver certificates we would be compelled to replace that with currency of some kind; otherwise we would shrink our own currency. Therefore the plan was devised to use the Federal reserve banks, which represent practically every bank in the United States, and the stockholders of all of these banks, as an agency for issuing Federal reserve bank notes against the security of United States Treasury gold notes. When they get those gold notes they will pay for the notes. The Government will get the funds, I take it, for the gold notes. They will not give the gold notes for nothing. They will get the money at a very low rate of interest, which would be a little over 2 per cent, probably 3 per cent, and then the Government would get the use of that money; but the certificates representing the indebtedness would become a basis, instead of the silver. But the Senator interrupted me before I was able to answer the real crux of his suggestion.

Mr. THOMAS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not intend to do that.

Mr. OWEN. I wanted to say this: Silver has fluctuated between 85 cents an ounce and $1.12 an ounce; and it was proposed here to fix a price of $1 an ounce for whatever the Government should buy of silver, and in that way stimulate the production of silver, by giving the miners of silver a positive market to this extent at least, which would probably absorb the output of the mines for two or three years.

The present output of silver is between seventy and eighty million ounces. Commercial purposes require about 22,000,000 ounces, leaving somewhere about 40,000,000 ounces that would be available for the purpose of money.

When the Government fixes a definite price for silver the miners can make their plans accordingly, and seeing for several years ahead a fixed market at $1 an ounce, it will stimulate the production of silver in this country and replace the idle silver which is now in the Treasury merely in storage.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. My attention was distracted while the Senator was discussing some matters with the Senator from Colorado. Possibly he may have answered what I am going to ask him. If he has, I do not care to have him go over it again.

As I understand the provisions of the bill, the standard silver dollars now in the Treasury are to be melted or broken up and their place is to be supplanted as these dollars are taken up by the subsequent purchase of silver, to be coined into standard silver dollars.

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What I wanted to understand was why that is done. Why not purchase the silver? Why break up the standard silver dollars already coined only to replace them by a subsequent purchase and coinage?

Mr. OWEN. The answer to that is that the cost is very small to mint silver, and the need for metallic silver at this moment is of great urgency.

Mr. TOWNSEND. You can not buy silver?

Mr. OWEN. You can not buy the bullion silver now. I wish to read a telegram which I received from the Secretary of the Treasury. He wired me from San Antonio, Tex., April 16, saying:

A war emergency of the utmost urgency makes the prompt passage of the Pittman bill imperative. I commend this subject earnestly to the consideration of yourself and your associates on the Banking and Currency Committee. Will you please permit Assistant Secretary Leffingwell to lay before you my views about this matter immediately?

The Assistant Secretary and his experts came before the committee and I think satisfied the committee of the absolute necessity for the passage of this measure so that the committee reported it with these amendments.

I have not stated really what the bill proposes. I will be glad to do that. It will take only two or three minutes.

The bill proposes to melt up the metallic silver which now lies in storage in the Treasury of the United States and to replace it by purchasing silver at a fixed rate of a dollar an ounce, selling the silver at not less than a dollar an ounce, and buying it back at a dollar an ounce, so that the Treasury neither gains nor loses. Since we would have to retire the silver certificates if we melted up the silver now in the vaults of the Treasury it is intended to temporarily replace that by Federal reserve bank notes safeguarded by United States Treasury one-year gold notes, so that our currency would not be contracted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the event of this bill becoming a law, the silver certificates will be called in and canceled, of course.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; they will be called in and canceled.

Section 9 provides for the extension of the acts now in force, which only run to the term of the war, as to the issuing of licenses for exports of silver, so as to leave the United States Treasury in a position where it could actually replace the silver which is to be taken out of storage.

It was the spirit and purpose of the bill to avoid any controversy with those who believe in silver as a metallic money by replacing exactly the amount of silver which was taken out, so as not to interfere with our existing use of silver for coinage purposes.

This matter was discussed quite extensively, I understand, by those who produce silver, and while they believe that silver will go to a higher point than a dollar an ounce, they were content as a war measure to have a definite value fixed. With the silver taken out of the Treasury restored to the Treasury by fixing a definite amount of a dollar an ounce, and having the right to issue licenses against exports, the United States could assuredly obtain from our own mines the amount of silver within two or three years which would be necessary to replace the silver now used for this war emergency.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want the Senate to get the impression that this bill, if passed, will be of any benefit whatever to the silver producers of the West. The silver producers of the West would be perfectly content to allow silver to take its regular course in the commerce of the world.

Mr. THOMAS. And keep hands off.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say now that if silver were treated as a commodity and nothing else and hands off was the program of our Government the price would advance immediately to $1.29 an ounce. I think I occupy a position that has given me the information to justify that statement. I never was classed as a silver man. I opposed Mr. Bryan's theory of 16 to 1 in the year 1896, and I have continually taken the position that every dollar of money circulated in the United States should be worth 100 cents. When the silver question was a political one, the opponents of silver claimed that silver was a commodity, and was worth only what it would bring in the market. To-day if silver were treated upon that same basis it would be worth $1.29 an ounce. And why? Because the demand for silver to-day caused by the war is such that the world is not producing one-quarter of the amount of silver that is absolutely necessary.

At a meeting of officials of the Government and representatives of the silver producers of the West held last December I called attention to the fact that the balance of trade in favor of India last year that would have to be met in gold or silver was such that the production of silver was but a fractional part of the amount that would be necessary.

In September last silver began to rise rapidly. It reached the price of $1.18 an ounce, and it would have continued to have increased in value until it reached $1.29 an ounce if it had not been for an understanding between our Government and England. The price was forced down in the interest of England, and the silver producers were the losers.

The annual production of silver for this year in all the world will not be above 160,000,000 ounces. The highest production of silver at any time that I can remember now in any one year was 226,000,000 ounces. India prefers silver to gold for her metallic money. She is demanding it to-day in payment for the balance of trade in her favor. India produces wheat and jute and other articles that the war has so greatly increased their values and thus has greatly increased her usual balance of trade against the principal countries of the world, and now she is demanding a settlement and wants it in silver.

Mr. LODGE. If I may ask the Senator a question, is it not true that silver is much more than currency in India? It is the form in which they hoard their savings.

Mr. SMOOT. As the Senator suggests, they hoard their savings in silver rather than gold. That has been the practice for hundreds of years, and it is so to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Will the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. That statement is absolutely correct up to the time when England entered upon her attempt to establish the gold standard in India. Since then vast quantities of gold have gone to India and have been similarly hoarded. The fact is that the two metals whenever they reach India disappear from the world's circulation. They are as completely absorbed and done away with as though they were sunk in the middle of the ocean. That is true now of both metals, more particularly so of gold, since the experiment to which I have referred.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when we stop to think that of the silver produced annually 100,000,000 ounces are used in the world's industries, and that on account of the Mexican situation the world's production has been greatly reduced, we find that of the production of silver for the year 1917 not to exceed 60,000,000 ounces are available for the increase of the money of the world.

In August, 1915, silver dropped to 48½ cents an ounce, and I want to say to the Senate now that the silver producers of the West could produce silver at 50 cents an ounce under ordinary conditions at as good a profit as they can produce silver to-day at $1 an ounce. The labor conditions are such, in the first place, that they can not get the necessary labor, nor does labor produce as much to-day as it did before the war in a given time. Again, wages have increased by leaps and bounds. After increase upon increase in wages, and increased cost of from 100 to 400 per cent on everything that the mine owner purchases, such as powder, steel, and tools of all kinds, the mine owner could better afford to allow his properties to lie idle and produce silver at 50 cents an ounce when ordinary conditions return than to extract the ore at this particular time.

Are the western producers of silver going to follow that course? No; they are too loyal to their country, and they are willing to produce silver, even if they get only enough out of it to pay actual cost. I wish to say that many of the mines of the West are doing that to-day. In many mines the price of silver is not sufficient to pay operating expenses.

Mr. President, I know that the situation in India is critical, and that this bill is to relieve that situation. England must have more silver to meet her obligations to India, and India wants silver. There is only one great reserve of silver in the world to-day and it is found in the Treasury of the United States, and that reservoir of silver must be opened and hastened to India in order to relieve the existing conditions.

I am not going into details, Mr. President, because it would do no good nor improve the situation, and perhaps be unwise. All I want to say is that if conditions were not such as they are to-day in the world, and if one of our allies, and the principal one, was not involved, I never would support legislation of this kind. I am going to vote for the bill because I know its passage is necessary.

I think I ought to say that the situation would not have been as critical as it is to-day if England had not held off from purchasing silver at a reasonable price during the last six months. I know within that time she has been offered silver at much less than a dollar an ounce, and she has refused to purchase it, and it has been purchased by Japan. England for years and years past has been buying our silver at from 48½ cents to 60 cents an ounce and paying her obligations at 94 cents an ounce, and she wanted to maintain that advantage just as long as possible.

The balance of trade of our country with India is adverse to us. It is true that we can pay the amount of that balance, and will pay it in silver if this bill becomes a law, and I admit that the United States ought not to allow the exportation of gold, and certainly none of our allies are in a position to do so. All the gold we have we must keep. The notes that are being issued and the notes that will be issued must have something back of them; and while we have one-fourth of all the gold in the world we have none too much.

As far as the price of silver is concerned, following the war it will not go back to what it was a year ago. I do not believe that we will live long enough to see the price of silver below a dollar an ounce. Why do I say it?

There is not gold enough to cover the paper money that is being issued by all the countries of the world, and when we see some of the nations involved in the present war with only 3 per cent of gold back of their paper issues, and the war is not closed yet, is it possible to think that every ounce of silver that is in the world to-day and every ounce that will be produced in the world for 25 years will be more than sufficient to cover the paper money that will be in circulation in all countries at the close of the war?

So, Mr. President, coming from a State which is deeply interested in the price of silver, one of the largest producers of silver of all the States of the Union, I say that the price of a dollar an ounce, as fixed in this bill, is no advantage whatever to the silver producer, and yet our miners say if that is the price the Government decides upon, and if they are called upon as patriotic Americans to produce it at that figure, they are going to do it. I approve of that position; but let us understand the situation, and let the American people know that it is no benefit whatever to the western producer of silver.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Hostile, as I have been and now am, to disturbing in any way the gold standard, I am going to vote for this bill because of the emergency that is upon the world at the present time; but somewhat as a justification for my vote and my attitude I want to ask the Senator from Utah, who doubtless is well informed on this point, what the conditions are surrounding the production of silver in the silver-producing States? What about the labor situation, as an illustration?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that, as to the labor situation, we are to-day paying at least 100 per cent more than we were paying before the war began. We are paying more for steel; we are paying more for powder; we are paying more for tools; we are paying more for everything that enters into the production of silver, and we are paying all the way from 100, 200, 300, and 400 per cent more. The Senator can see from these facts what effect they must have on the cost of producing silver.

There is another thing I do not particularly like. I have said nothing about it on the floor of the Senate, but I do not believe, Mr. President, that we are being treated by our allies as we are treating them. The Government has fixed the price of copper at 23½ cents a pound; the producer sells it to all of the allied countries for that price. We not only sell it to them, but we sell it to the general trade for the price fixed by the Government; and yet Canada, our neighbor to the north of us, a producer of copper, receives as high as 30½ cents a pound on the identical day for her copper purchased by England, being a difference of 7 cents a pound in favor of the Canadian producer. The same condition exists as to Mexico. Canada is receiving more for lead than we in this country are receiving.

However, I have expressed no bitter opposition to the fixing of the prices of commodities that were absolutely vital to the successful prosecution of the war, although I am opposed to the principle of price fixing. I agreed, Mr. President, beforehand that we should undertake to produce copper in the West at 23½ cents a pound. I know that the Utah Copper Co. can produce it for that price and make a profit; but I am speaking not for one company in my State, but I am speaking for the hundreds and thousands of producers who produce copper in small quantities, and who do not have the advantages which some of the great companies enjoy.

But, be that as it may, I know that there is lying in the Treasury of the United States to-day some 476,000,000 ounces of silver which has been coined into silver dollars. Much of that silver has been purchased at 50, 55, and 60 cents an ounce from the silver producers and has been coined into dollars at the rate of $1.29. I should be perfectly willing for our Government to make that difference if it were absolutely necessary; but with that great reservoir of silver lying there and serving no useful active purpose, with our allies crying for help—and our Treasury is the only place that can furnish the relief, and that by releasing that reservoir—I say let it be done. Let it go, Mr. President, to India, to China, or to Japan in order that the balance of trade against our allies with those countries may be met. They can not send the gold, for they have not got it; but if we do not furnish them the silver we shall have to lend them the gold or we shall ourselves have to arrange as to how those balances shall be settled.

I thought the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] should have admitted immediately on the question that was asked by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] in relation to the retirement of these silver certificates, which are noninterest bearing, that they were to be replaced by Federal reserve notes, one being a noninterest bearing currency and the other being an interest-bearing currency.

Mr. OWEN. I stated that in the report, and it is perfectly obvious.

Mr. SMOOT. I may have misunderstood the Senator in his answer to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. OWEN. I stated that fact, and, more than that, I agree with the Senator from Utah with regard to this being a patriotic contribution by the miners of the West. I do not regard these prices during the present exigency of the world as high prices or as adequate prices; but the American people have been making contributions, they have answered the charge that was leveled against them at one time, and have proven that they are not in this war for profit, but they are in this war for principle, and are willing to make sacrifices when they are met with the exigency.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think it ought to be stated that when we sell the silver, which is now drawing no interest, we shall either get money which we can put out at interest or we shall get an interest-bearing obligation, so that the interest that is paid on what we get as the proceeds of the sale of the silver will probably at least counterbalance what we shall lose by the operation to which the Senator calls attention.

I think nearly all of us are for this measure, but I am afraid, if we get into a debate, we may have the "crime" of former years before us and not get the bill through; but I think it ought to be stated in justice that the Government will not lose anything by this operation.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from New Hampshire is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what the Senator from New Hampshire says is correct; but this is what the Senator from Colorado had in mind, I think, or at least it appears to me that that is what he had in mind, that to-day the silver is in the Treasury, and it is performing its function not by circulation but by a currency issue.

Mr. THOMAS. Absolutely; and partially by circulation.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, partially by circulation; but that will not be interfered with by the passage of this bill. In other words, the subsidiary coin will not be touched nor will the silver dollars that are in circulation be touched. We reserve some $126,000,000 in silver dollars, which will still be in the Treasury.

Mr. THOMAS. That will go later.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be; but now that we are to withdraw the silver certificates, and that silver is to be sent out of the country in the shape of bullion and sold, we must have another issue of paper money to take its place; or, in other words, it will result in placing another class of obligation upon the American people; the American people will have to take that much more of the Government's obligations through this transaction. That is necessarily so, because when we take out of our financial system the amount of money proposed it is just the same as if we had loaned that money to our allies, so far as the investments of the American public are concerned, and that is the source from which the Government will receive its payments for Government bonds.

Mr. HOLLIS. On the contrary, if the Senator will permit me, we not only issue a part of the people's obligations, but we get an equal amount of obligations in return, which will bear a higher rate of interest.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know, Mr. President, that there is any necessity for me to discuss the question further. I think the points to which I have called the attention of the Senate are the main ones involved in this proposed legislation.

So far as the people of the West are concerned, I know how loyal they have been to every call of our Government. There is not a State in the West that has not only subscribed all it was asked to subscribe to the Red Cross fund and purchased its share of every issue of liberty bonds, as it will of the present issue, but the States of the West have purchased bonds sometimes to the extent of 150 per cent more than their quota. When we take into consideration the fact that scarcely one dollar of the money collected by our Government is paid in the West to producers of munitions of war, steel of every kind, aeroplanes, and similar products that are necessary for the carrying on of the war, it will at once be seen how loyal they have been to our Government. In the purchase of bonds in the West it is almost like taking the money out of circulation at once, and it amounts to that in many cases.

I asked the Secretary of the Treasury to allow the payments upon liberty bonds to be withdrawn from the banks, say, at four different periods of a month apart, so as to allow business to go on in its regular ordinary way without taking the amount of the purchase immediately out of circulation.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to say to the Senator that I agree with him very cordially in that proposal.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Secretary told me a number of times that, unfortunately, it was impossible to do that. Why, Mr. President, over $16,000,000 were invested in second issue of liberty bonds by the people of Utah, and the banks were not given time to get exchange from New York or San Francisco by mail, but were asked to telegraph the money to San Francisco immediately upon payment. That is a burden that the Eastern States do not have to carry. The money paid for the bonds in the East immediately is paid to eastern manufacturers, and in the eastern section of the country it amounts virtually to a transfer of credits at the banks.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the American people ought to know these facts. Notwithstanding this condition, the people of the West are asked to produce silver for the Government at a dollar an ounce, and they are going to do it, no matter if they do not make one cent in so doing. Remember that whenever a ton of ore is taken out of a mine it is gone forever. It can not be replaced. A mine is not like a farm, which produces wheat year after year; it is not like a beet field, that produces beets 1 year, 2 years, 25 years, and the ground is as good as ever; but whenever you take a ton of ore out of the ground it is gone forever. Dividends paid by a mine are not paid in the way of an ordinary dividend; they are paid out of the capital of the concern. But, Mr. President, we are not only willing to give whatever profit there may be, but we are willing to give the capital of the mine to assist the Government of the United States and its allies in these trying times, when the cause of liberty and justice is at stake.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to say only a word, for I wish the bill to pass as soon as possible. I am very much opposed to price fixing if we ever can possibly avoid it. I think it was a great mistake to fix to our allies and to the domestic market the price of copper and lead, to which the Senator from Utah has referred; but silver stands, of course, upon a different ground, because it enters into the currency, not only our currency but the world's currency. The situation simply is that to prevent a financial convulsion in India silver must be supplied, and we are the only people who can supply it. I see no other way to supply it except that proposed by the committee in their bill, which I think they have guarded well.

I do not take quite such a dark view of the dollar-an-ounce proposal as does the Senator from Utah. I think the stabilization of the price, the certainty, will be worth what they might get on a sudden fluctuation in addition.

I have been examining the bill and listening to the debate, and I believe the bill is safe as framed. That the emergency must be met there can be no question, and I think the committee has met it very well. I shall be very glad to vote for the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this bill, although proposed as an emergency measure, was not originally prepared as such. A copy almost in the present phraseology of the bill as reported was transmitted to me for examination some two or three months ago. I have had occasion, therefore, to examine it with some degree of care, and reach some definite conclusions about its contents when the emergency, now so palpably apparent, hastened the committee in its examination and report.

Primarily this bill had for its purpose the release of silver from the Treasury in order to meet some of our exchanges with silver-using countries, and also to stimulate the production of silver, and the fact of its pendency has made it comparatively easy for the committee to consider it speedily.

It is true that the United States possesses the sole remaining supply of silver in quantity, and that as a consequence our greatest ally may appeal to us for assistance at this time with an assurance that, if granted, our supply of the needed metal is ample for its purposes. I can not resist the temptation to refer for a brief moment to the opposition which the friends of silver encountered in an effort to secure its remonetization and, failing in that, to provide an adequate supply for the currency needs of the United States.

I know of no legislation in the history of the past 50 years that has been so derided and so rediculed as the Bland and Sherman silver bills, said to have been sops to the silver Cerberus, a violation of the natural laws of supply and demand, and a lowering of the integrity of American coinage and currency. But a majority of the people, represented by a majority in Congress, persisted, and successfully persisted, in their efforts to secure the supply of a considerable quantity of silver in the Treasury through monthly and other purchases. That silver, Mr. President, has been doing duty as currency ever since its purchase by the Government, and every ounce of it has been in circulation at par, represented in my section of the country by silver dollars, and elsewhere by silver certificates based upon them.

The volume of silver, therefore, has played quite as important a part in supplying the people with their currency needs and in developing the industries and resources of the country as gold and greenbacks. Through a system of forced supply, as it were, denied the same right to entrance at the mints that gold has always enjoyed it has, nevertheless, in actual practice, refuted the reflections that have been cast upon it as a currency and as a monetary metal.

I could not help thinking, Mr. President, while this debate proceeded, what our condition and the condition of England would be to-day had this much-abused legislation been defeated or had the Government yielded to the many attempts which have been made to do away with the supply on hand at whatever cost.

Mr. President, I differ from the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] with regard to the general question of silver as money. A great many years ago I endeavored to make an impartial and dispassionate study of the entire question. I entered upon that investigation with a mind free, I trust, from either prejudice or preconceived views, and after a long period of anxious investigation and inquiry I came to the conclusion that the two metals were absolutely essential to the world's business, functioning as money of redemption, and that the discarding of either would mean ultimately the abandonment of any metallic basis for the currency of the Nation. I have never been so impressed with the soundness of that conclusion as I have been since this world's war was staged, every development of which has more and more demonstrated the danger, not only the danger, but the impossibility of pivoting the world's credits and money upon the world's supply of gold.

The Senator from Utah said that we could not afford to lose a dollar of our gold supply. So say England and France; so say Japan and Germany. In all times of stress, because the world's credits and the world's currency have unfortunately been based upon one metal, the apprehension consequent upon its loss in extraordinary periods of excitement or of war becomes a hysteria of international proportions.

Let me say to the Senator, though he is absent, that we may retain all the gold we possess, we may secure all the gold of all the other nations of the world, and yet the supply will be woefully unequal to the burden of money and of credit now based upon it. Our system may be likened to an inverted pyramid, as may that of all the other countries, in that they have selected a restricted base, because insufficient in quantity, for the structure of money and of credits; and no matter how this war may end, the edifice will topple to the ground and lie prostrate sooner or later. Hence, Mr. President, the silver which we are now using as money, and with which we propose to aid the great monometallic nation of the world; the silver which it first demonetized and reduced to a condition of monetary vassalage—that metal, Mr. President, comes to the rescue of that great nation in her extremity, and which will tide her over any crisis, however great it may be, with which she may now or hereafter be confronted.

Mr. President, there are some considerations attendant upon this measure, and which may flow from it, which I think we should consider very carefully before we finally determine to part with the metal absolutely, physically.

I assume that the great bulk of it will go to India. Now, if it does go to India, it will never appear in any form outside of that country hereafter. It will be, as I have said, as completely withdrawn from active circulation or from metallic use as though it were reburied in the ground from whence it was dug. From the earliest periods of human history, all silver reaching India has disappeared. Since about 1902, practically all gold reaching India has likewise disappeared. Great Britain, in her unsuccessful attempt to establish the gold standard there, was compelled, until the menace to her own reserves made it impossible to continue the policy, to supply India with millions upon millions of pounds sterling in gold; and, having educated the East Indian to the idea of the gold standard, his habit attached to that as it had previously attached to the white metal.

Therefore, Mr. President, we are faced with this condition: Can we afford, if it is possible to use the representative of silver in the shape of silver certificates, if you please, to part with the metal, when parting with it means its virtual destruction? Of course its physical destruction is impossible; we all know that; but if it becomes inert, if it seeks hiding places, if it is no longer found in the highways and byways of industry and commerce, it is as much dead to the world as though it had been destroyed by fire. I wonder whether this thought has occurred to the members of the committee in their preparation of this bill—whether the notes which we use as the representative of this silver can not be made equally serviceable to the British Government at this time? If it can be done, then it should be done. If it can not be done, then, whatever the result may be, let us act as the emergency requires, leaving the consequences to the future.

But, Mr. President, I can not accept the suggestion that the production of silver will be stimulated by this bill by stabilizing the price at $1 an ounce. The production of silver at present is enormously expensive, not only because of the reasons assigned by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], but because the old bonanza silver mines no longer exist. They have been worked out. They are practically exhausted. Silver now is largely a by-product. It is always found in conjunction with gold, very frequently with lead and with gold, in the West with copper as well, and with iron.

Since the demonetization of silver by the repeal of the Sherman law, and since the establishment of the gold standard by the act of 1900, silver has necessarily become a by-product, except in rare instances. It is produced through processes which separate it from other metals which are commercially more valuable and more desirable. In addition to that, Mr. President, improved economic processes for the separation of silver from refractory ores in small quantities have proceeded apace, and during the period between 1896 and the present time millions of tons of ore not before then commercially valuable for their silver contents have been made so through these improved processes.

Now, it may be that the world still contains hidden within its bosom vast deposits of silver ore. If so, the miners have not yet been able to discover it. The last important discovery was at Cobalt, in the Dominion of Canada, to the north of us. That was a number of years ago. By this time it must be well toward the process of ultimate exhaustion. In Mexico mining is practically impossible, owing to the disturbed conditions of the country, and in South America the product is scarcely more than necessary for the financial uses of that continent.

So I do not perceive, Mr. President, the possibility of depending upon our mines and miners for any greatly enhanced amount of silver, whether this bill becomes a law or whether it does not. Since the adoption of our forest-reservation policy, since conservation has gone so far as to produce stagnation in mining circles everywhere, there has been no great inducement to the prospector to attempt to further prospect and discover ores. Nowadays the moment a man opens a new body of ore or discovers a well upon the public domain official and public opinion in the East brands him as a thief and a scoundrel, and, instead of being rewarded, that which he has is taken away from him by departmental action. This bill will not change that situation, however much we give the miner for his silver. The only way to stimulate the production of that or any other metal on the public domain is to go back to the good old way of dealing with the prospector—to encourage him by rewarding him with what he finds by way of discovery. Then he will again endure the heats of the desert and face every danger confronting his pathway in the search for these valuable necessities of trade and commerce. Until he is stimulated by such hope of reward the mining industry of the West will lag, if, indeed, it does not disappear. The way, therefore, to stimulate him is to let him alone, let the laws of the country operate without interference, and give him the rewards to which he is entitled by virtue of his hazards, his expense, and his discoveries.

Mr. President, I do not believe that there is any immediate prospect of such a stimulation. It may come at some time—some time after the war—a long time after I, perhaps, shall have been laid away; but it must come if there is to be a real stimulation to the production of silver in the West.

If, however, the bill is to carry out its professed purpose, I am unable to perceive why the price of silver should be rigidly limited to $1. I propose to offer an amendment making that the minimum price. I do not believe that silver can be produced, except in conjunction with other metals, to-day at a profit if a dollar an ounce is to be the limit of the miner's compensation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no idea as to the form of the amendment which the Senator will draw, but, as far as the Government is concerned, the Government does not attempt in this bill to go further than to state that the Director of the Mint shall purchase silver at a fixed price of $1 an ounce.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I know; but the Government will need every dollar of silver that can be mined, in my judgment, and need it as fast as it is mined; and it is very easy to construe this proviso so as to enable the Government to take that silver and pay a dollar an ounce and no more, however great the need of outsiders may be for the metal, and however great the tendency, therefore, for the price to rise.

Let us not deceive the miner by telling him we are going to stimulate his prices when we are doing no such thing. Provision is made by a very proper Senate amendment to this bill on page 2, line 1, by which the sales of bullion to be realized from the melting of our silver dollars "shall be made at such prices, not less than $1 per ounce of silver 1,000 fine," as shall be established by the Secretary of the Treasury. That is proper; but when we come to the price to be paid for silver hereafter, the bill provides that the purchases shall be made in accordance with existing regulations at the fixed price of $1. Now, that should be "at not less than $1," so that the play of the same forces which enable the Government to get the prevailing price for its silver and which are recognized by the committee may be so extended as to apply to the miner.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it limited to the war?

Mr. THOMAS. Why, I suppose the bill is limited to the war. Personally, I should prefer to see the provision fixing the price eliminated from the bill and let the law of supply and demand take its course; but if we are to fix it, let us fix it so that the miner will be satisfied and stimulated to some degree. I shall offer an amendment, Mr. President, to that effect.

I think, too, Mr. President, that this bill should require not only the recoinage of all the dollars melted, but the issuance of silver certificates as well for each dollar that is coined.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator please suspend? The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will not agree to temporarily lay it aside until we conclude this measure?

Mr. OVERMAN. On yesterday I stated that I would not agree to lay it aside for any other measure. However, the argument has proceeded upon the bill which has been before the Senate for an hour or two, and I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma how long he thinks it would take to dispose of the bill he has in charge?

Mr. OWEN. As far as the chairman of the committee is concerned it will take very little time. I do not think that any other Senators perhaps are going to discuss it further than the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Colorado. I think the Senator from Colorado can indicate the time better than I.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall occupy but a comparatively short time of the Senate beyond this point. I wish to say in this connection, however, that I do not feel like permitting this bill to go to a vote until the return of my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH], who I know is greatly interested in the general proposition and who has given considerable study to the measure. He is absent attending the funeral of the late Senator from Louisiana, Mr. BROUSSARD, and I presume will be back to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Oklahoma can see the situation. The Senator from Colorado will object to the disposition of the bill at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not mean to make a statement so arbitrary as that. I will put it in the shape of a request.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will not permit the measure to be proceeded with for three-quarters of an hour?

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to know whether I could not get a unanimous-consent agreement not to take a vote on the unfinished business, but unanimous consent that the debate at not later than 3 o'clock on Thursday next shall be limited on the bill to 30 minutes and on all amendments to 20 minutes and that after that time no Senator to speak more than once on the bill or an amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. That will require the presence of a quorum, I presume.

Mr. OVERMAN. It would not.

Mr. THOMAS. It may result in debate in either event.

Mr. OVERMAN. If there is going to be any objection, that is the end of it. I will keep the bill before the Senate all the time, we will have no morning business, and it will give us to-morrow, Saturday, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday for long speeches, and then after Thursday at 3 o'clock Senators can debate the bill, but their speeches are to be limited.

Mr. SWANSON. I could not consent to that unless we have a morning hour so as to dispose of the housing bill. It is a very urgent measure, and I ask the Senator not to eliminate the morning hour from his proposed agreement. However, I shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. We will have Friday, Saturday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday until 3 o'clock when Senators may speak as long as they desire, but after that time their speeches will be limited to 30 minutes on the bill and 20 minutes on amendments to the bill, and no Senator can speak more than once on an amendment or on the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I am satisfied if that is insisted upon at the present time the absence of a quorum will be suggested, and I do not want to yield the floor for that purpose, because I will get through very soon.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator has a right to continue his speech. He has the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. Having the bill known as the housing bill in charge, I agreed to give way this morning in the morning hour to the Senator from Oklahoma on account of the vast importance of the measure he has in charge. The housing bill is very urgent, and I should like to know from the Senator from North Carolina whether, in case the silver bill is disposed of or laid aside, if he will yield to dispose of the housing bill to-day.

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not agree to that.

Mr. SWANSON. The reason why I make the request is because I have an engagement to attend a patriotic liberty loan meeting on Saturday, and unless I have an opportunity to take up the housing bill for consideration this afternoon it will be impossible to call it up again before Monday.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that instead of taking a recess we can adjourn on Saturday until 12 o'clock on Monday and have a morning hour on Monday.

Mr. SWANSON. Then I understand there will be no opportunity to consider the housing bill until Monday in the morning hour. The Senator would not consent to displace the unfinished business to take up the housing bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. I could not, after what I said yesterday. That is as far as I can go. I think I will ask the Senate to adjourn Saturday afternoon, and not take a recess.

Mr. SWANSON. So as to give the housing bill the morning hour on Monday?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes. The Senator will be here then.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not think there is any measure pending before Congress, except possibly the silver bill, that is more important than the housing bill. There is a delay in producing munitions needed in France now. Nothing has been urged of more importance than that measure. It will increase the facilities from 25 to 50 per cent when it becomes operative. I wish the Senator from North Carolina would relent and permit the housing bill to be considered this afternoon.

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President; they have $50,000,000 now with which they can build houses, I think I heard it stated on the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. That applies simply to ships. It does not apply to arsenals, it does not apply to powder, it does not apply to guns, it does not apply to destroyers. If the Senator would read the reports and surveys that have been before the committee, and which have been given to the Senate confidentially, I am satisfied that he would realize the urgent necessity of the early passage of the housing bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I heard the Senator's able argument and the information he gave, but I can not agree with him that it is such an important bill as to displace other bills. I think if we get through with that bill on Monday morning it will be soon enough. The Senator could bring it up Saturday morning, but I understand he is going away. I promise that I shall ask the Senate to adjourn, so as to give him Monday morning.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to give notice that on Monday morning, as soon as the routine morning business is concluded, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is commonly known as the housing bill. I am sorry the Senator from North Carolina can not yield so that we may dispose of it this afternoon.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if there is the least objection to the consent I ask, of course I can not insist on it, but I should like to have some fixed idea so that Senators may know. I do not want to take advantage of anybody. I never have done so.

Senators will bear me out in the statement that I never have taken any advantage of anybody in any parliamentary situation. I do not want to do that, and I shall not, but if we are all agreed I should like to fix a time when the debate shall be limited That is all. I do not ask for a vote.

Mr. McCUMBER. How long has the bill been before the Senate now?

Mr. OVERMAN. About a week or 10 days.

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the necessity of taking another full week before we begin to even debate under the 30-minute rule?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not mean that we should necessarily take a week. I say not later than Thursday, because I do not want to take any advantage of Senators who may want to speak on the bill. I understand that a great many want to speak and we may reach a vote before that time. The Senator will remember how it was with the espionage bill. The consent was given there to limit debate, and the bill passed some hours, probably a day, before the time fixed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does not the Senator really think we could get a vote more quickly if we just go right along with the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am going along with it, and I am going to get it as soon as I can.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think a unanimous-consent agreement would delay rather than facilitate the progress of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. That has not been my experience.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That reminds me that it is unnecessary really to ask the question I rose to put. I was going to ask the Senator from North Carolina why he did not submit the so-called Overman bill to a vote right now. But the Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I am going to do when we take it up. I can not take a Senator off the floor. The Senator from Oklahoma asked me if I would not yield. Of course, the Senator from Colorado has the floor, but I was trying to see if we could not get a unanimous-consent agreement to limit debate. I am going to press the bill to a vote next week. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he thinks this is really an emergency measure that he has in charge?

Mr. OWEN. It is a matter of war emergency of the first magnitude.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until 3 o'clock p. m. for the consideration of Senate bill 4292, known as the silver bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Caroline asks unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business, S. 3771, until 3 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not wish to even seem to be using valuable time at present which might be much better employed by the passage of what are said to be measures of great emergency. From what has been said it might well appear that I am occupying the attitude of an obstructionist, which is not the case. I feel so deeply the importance of these measures that I shall abbreviate what I intended to say by omitting a number of considerations which seem to me to be of importance regarding this bill and confine myself to the proposed amendment, together with one other consideration as to the possible effect of the bill, unless some provision is made to guard against it.

I understand that silver at present in South America is very much less than a dollar an ounce, and if that be so there is an opportunity for speculation at the expense of the Government by the exportation to us of large quantities of silver purchased at a comparatively small price in adjoining countries. Certainly we do not or should not intentionally so legislate as to produce such consequences. There is a query in my mind, therefore, whether or not the purchase of silver at a dollar an ounce should not be limited to the United States, and possibly to Canada, for the present. I make that suggestion to the Senator having in charge the bill for his consideration.

Now, Mr. President, coming to the amendments which I have proposed, the first will occur on page 2, at lines 14 and 15, to strike out the word "fixed," on line 14, and between the word "of" and the dollar mark, on line 15, insert "not less than," so that the sentence will read:

Such purchases shall be made in accordance with the then existing regulations of the mint and at the price of not less than $1 per ounce of silver 1,000 fine.

The other amendment has reference to the issuance of silver certificates in place of those to be retired when this bill goes into effect. As I read the bill, there is no such requirement at present. The Government may buy silver and coin it or it may not. If it does coin it, it is not required under the provisions of the bill to reissue the silver certificates. I think a first-class currency which costs the people nothing is a great deal more valuable to them than a first-class currency which costs the people something. These silver certificates bear no interest and they circulate as money. The Federal reserve notes which are to be issued are based upon other securities that do pay interest, and there is no answer to that except to say that the Government does not pay it.

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator will allow me, there is an answer and an adequate answer.

Mr. THOMAS. There may be. I should like to hear it.

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. You take $100,000,000 of these silver certificates and retire them, and then you issue $100,000,000 of gold one-year Treasury gold notes. That is the basis of the new Federal reserve bank notes, and those new gold notes of the Treasury will bear interest at 3 or 4 per cent, as the case may be. So, in lieu of the silver certificates that are retired, you have issued a Treasury note bearing a high rate of interest which is used as a basis of Federal reserve bank notes that themselves would not bear interest, but——

Mr. THOMAS. If I construe the Senator's answer properly, it is an admission instead of an explanation, and bears out entirely what I am insisting upon.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator could not possibly have understood what I said.

Mr. THOMAS. Possibly not.

Mr. OWEN. What I said was, that in order to retire these silver certificates we have to replace them.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. When we turn over the silver we get the interest-bearing securities of Great Britain, for example, if we let Great Britain have a part of them. So the silver certificates which now bear no interest will be substituted for a security which will bear interest.

Mr. THOMAS. That security costs somebody something. The fact that the Government of the United States does not pay it does not detract from my assertion.

Mr. OWEN. The United States receives it.

Mr. THOMAS. The United States receives it, but I deny that the Government should go into the business of issuing money upon an interest-bearing plan for the purpose of profiting by a circulation needed by the people.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Federal reserve notes which are to be issued to take the place of the silver certificates of course will not be issued without the legal gold reserve?

Mr. OWEN. They will have the reserve behind them.

Mr. KELLOGG. The only difference then practically would be that the silver certificates have the full amount of silver behind them and the others would have the gold reserve?

Mr. OWEN. They have 80 cents of market silver behind them now.

Mr. THOMAS. The immediate basis of the money that is to be substituted for the silver certificates is securities bearing interest. The basis of those securities is gold, as I understand it.

Mr. President, there is more money in circulation in this country now than we would have the gold to redeem if we were obliged to do so. We are increasing the burden of an already overburdened metal by retiring these certificates without making adequate security for their replacement. My only proposition is that they shall be replaced by currency of a similar kind just as rapidly as we secure the silver for it. I do not think that is an unreasonable demand.

I want the bill, in other words, to provide in terms that when we get more silver to make more dollars we shall have more certificates, and of course any substituted money doing duty in the interval will be retired. Hence my suggestion of the second amendment, occurring after the word "coinage," in line 23, page 2, so as to read "shall be coined into standard silver dollars or held for the purpose of such coinage, and silver certificates shall be issued to the amount of such coinage." I think that is a perfectly fair proposition.

Mr. OWEN. As far as the issue of new silver certificates against the silver going back into the Treasury, I assume that would occur under the law governing the issue of silver certificates.

Mr. THOMAS. Let us say so here.

Mr. OWEN. I am perfectly willing to say so, because that is the intent.

Mr. THOMAS. Very good; that is perfectly satisfactory to me. I am not disposed to take any chances on it. I know that in a good part of the country with a majority of the people now there is a prejudice against silver money and against silver certificates, and we have never made any concession in all the silver legislation that has occurred since the Civil War, but what through construction, and, I think, in some cases misconstruction, the people of the West have been euchred out of the conclusions and purposes which they sought to effect by such legislation. So I do not want to take any chances. If the amendment is accepted by the chairman of course that ends the controversy so far as I am concerned.

Mr. OWEN. I would be glad to have the Senator state precisely the terms of his amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. After the word "coinage," add "and silver certificates shall be issued to the amount of such coinage."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is already one amendment pending. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I ask the Secretary to state the second proposed amendment. Of course it is not in parliamentary order, but I want to know what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. First, the Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 14 and 15, strike out "fixed," and after the words "price of," insert "not less than," so as to read:

At the price of not less than $1 per ounce of silver, 1,000 fine.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw that amendment temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw it in order that we can dispose of the other amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Colorado please state the other amendment he proposes?

Mr. THOMAS. After the word "coinage," on page 2, line 23, strike out the period and insert "and silver certificates shall be issued to the amount of such coinage."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Now, I renew the original amendment on line 14 to strike out the word "fixed," and between the word "of" and the dollar mark to insert "not less than."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 14, strike out the word "fixed," and, in line 15, after the words "price of," insert "not less than."

Mr. OWEN. I do not think that representing the committee I can agree to that amendment, for it would mean that the United States would sell its silver in the Treasury at a dollar an ounce and be perhaps confronted with having to buy it at a larger price. I do not think that would be fair to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think there are two answers. In the first place, the Government purchases the silver for very much less than $1 an ounce. We have painful reason to recollect the fact. I think I am entirely within bounds when I say that the average cost to the Government of this silver was less than 75 cents an ounce.

The other answer is that the Senator, by an amendment of his own committee, has expressly provided that the sale of this bullion shall be made at not less than $1 an ounce of silver 1,000 fine, and it is the duty of the Government, I take it, to sell it for what it is worth, as it is equally the duty of the Government to buy it from its own citizens at what it is worth. The law of supply and demand would determine it. I would rather see, as I said a few moments ago, the provision eliminated and have nothing said about $1 an ounce at all as the price of silver. It would be far better.

Mr. OWEN. That is the effect, of course, of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. No.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator would compel the Government to buy and sell on the market. The policy of the bill is to fix a market at a dollar an ounce, both for buying and selling, until the Government gets back the silver which is now temporarily used in the war emergency.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. So the Senator is opposed to the policy of the bill, and it is expressed in his amendment accordingly.

Mr. THOMAS. The Government coins the silver on the basis of a dollar to 129 ounces of silver. I do not think silver will go beyond that. I am very sure that if it is given an opportunity it will go to that. If the Government is going to fix the price lower than that, it will be in a position to enforce that price as against all the silver the miners of the West produce. It is not fair. These men want to do all they can, they have done all they can, and they will continue to do all they can, even if you force them to deliver their silver without any pay at all. They should have the same opportunity for a free market for their product—that is necessarily limited; there is not much of it in the world—that is given to the man who mines gold and other metals. So I want to insist on that amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am in sympathy, naturally, with the desires which are indicated by the Senator from Colorado regarding the pending bill, and also with the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], but this is not the original discussion of this matter by any means. This matter has been under discussion for three months, and this is a compromise bill as the result of those discussions.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator who has discussed it? It has not been discussed on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I intended to explain that without being asked to do so. The silver producers of this country, whom the Senator from Colorado in part represents, do not want the fixed price left out of this bill.

The men who make their living by working in silver mines and who depend upon the production of silver for a livelihood do not want to take the theoretical chances that the Senator from Colorado is willing to take upon what the price of silver will be. If the 350,000,000 ounces are dumped on the market it would be foolish to do so. Dump 350,000,000 ounces, or rather dollars, of silver on the market and the market would be satisfied for a long time to come.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator in the course of his argument, but does the Senator suppose for a moment that a dollar of this money is going to be dumped on the market? In this emergency it is going to India, every dollar of it, and the world will never see it again. If that is not so, then we ought not to pass the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator's constituents would not be as careless as the Senator is in regard to their livelihood. It is very easy for a person who does not depend upon a certain occupation to be very careless with regard to the future of such occupation. You can be as theoretical as you please in regard to it. In fact, you can be as independent as you please in regard to it. A man who does not have to have water can refuse to accept water under certain conditions. A man starving to death accepts food and he accepts it on those conditions under which he can obtain it. Everyone knows that.

I know that silver has been discriminated against. There is not any question about that. That was known to the mining congress that met in Denver in December, which indorsed this bill; that was known to the committees that represented the various western producers who met in this city and discussed this matter. It is nothing new; it has not suddenly come before the Senate here that there is a discrimination against silver. For years it has been general knowledge.

Why, as matter of fact, Mr. President, the demand for silver for 16 years has been every year, every month, every day twice the production. We all know that. Then, we are asked, if that is the case, if the demand is and has been twice the production, why did not the price of silver go above a dollar? It is because there are artificial barriers against the law of supply and demand in the case of silver with which we are all familiar. We understand that. We know that Great Britain constituted itself the sole buyer and distributor of silver for practically the whole world, and we know, on the other hand, that it is against the law of this country for the silver producers to form a combination so that they can sell as one seller to one buyer.

The result was that a thousand sellers were consuming each other in competition to sell to one buyer. Those things were known. There is not anything new in the situation. We know that we can not remedy that condition now; we know we shall never remedy that condition until after this war is over; and we know it will be after years of fighting in Congress. Of course, the Senator from Colorado is going to fight to remedy the wrong, and the Senator from Nevada will join him in that fight; but that fight can not be won now. We are meeting a condition now. We are not discussing the free-silver issues of 1896, nor are we discussing the silver issues that will arise after this war is over. We are discussing a condition that exists now, and that is as well known to the silver producers of this country as it is to any Senator on this floor, including the distinguished Senator from Colorado.

Silver in September went up to $1.15 an ounce, and in one week after that it went down to 85 cents an ounce. Why? By reason of the action of Great Britain, because of the policy of Great Britain; but what control over such actions have you and I? What control have the silver producers of the country over the condition that has brought about that tremendous fluctuation? None on earth; and there is no legislation that we may enact, during this war at least, that will remedy that condition. That is a condition that faces us now, which has faced us for years, and which will face us during this entire crisis.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will put the Senator's question down and answer it later. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I merely want to go on with this thought; but I prefer to have the Senator from Colorado ask the question now.

Mr. THOMAS. I was simply going to ask the Senator if his last statement was correct, that we could not do anything, why does he try to do something by putting into this bill an arbitrary price for silver?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think it is apparent that we can not control the violent fluctuations that I have just mentioned, because we can not by reprisal control our allies during this war; we will not do it; and that is all.

I want to say to you now frankly, however, as knowing the silver situation, knowing the views of the representatives of the silver producers of this country, knowing the sentiment of the West, that I would rather have the fixed price of $1 an ounce for silver than to have the price $1.15 one week and 85 cents the next week. That is exactly the condition that we are now under, and we shall continue under that condition unless this Government stabilizes the price of its own product. That is the situation.

This Government could not utilize the silver in the Treasury of the United States unless it was fair to the silver producers of this country. The Treasury Department knew that. Its representatives knew they could not arbitrarily do an injustice by legislation in this Congress; and I want to say in justice to them they have never attempted it. They met here in November with the representatives of every western silver-producing State. The distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] being sick at the time, but his colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] attended several of those meetings, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] attended many of those meetings, former Senator Newlands, of Nevada, attended; in fact, nearly every western Senator who was here at that time and was interested in a State where silver is produced was there. The questions that are now being discussed by the Senator were discussed for days. The very question came up as to whether or not they would leave the price to chance; and those representatives were overwhelmingly of the opinion that they did not dare permit millions of ounces of silver to exhaust the demand of the market, and then trust to a future market, under the artificial conditions that surround the silver market, to which I have already referred. Those representatives insisted that the word "fixed" should be in the bill. They said they would never stand for any bill that did not give them some definite idea as to how they were going to be treated in the future. This was a mutual condition of the agreement.

There was a meeting of the mining congress, which consists of representatives of miners from all over the country, which was held in the Senator's own city of Denver in December. By the invitation of that body I appeared before them and discussed this very measure together with others. It was discussed fully before that meeting. The bill then was in exactly the same form it now is with regard to the fixed price of silver; just the same with regard to a dollar an ounce as it now is. The only difference between the bill then and now is that they have increased the amount of silver to be taken from the Treasury. They knew that the price was to be a dollar an ounce, and knew it was to be no more and no less than a dollar an ounce. The mine producers of this country demanded that it should be a dollar, and the representatives of the Government demanded that it should be no more than a dollar.

Do you not know that the representatives of the producers of the Western States, do you not know that some of the western governors who were present, and that the western Senators urged that there should be the same provision in the bill that you now offer? It was the first provision urged, and the demand was met with an absolute positive objection—a final objection, a conclusive refusal. It was declared that the Government of the United States was not going to be deprived of buying silver possibly at 85 cents an ounce when it was down, and then have to buy it at $1.15 an ounce when it was up. They had an argument that was even better than that. They said the object of this whole transaction was simply to anticipate the production of silver; that they did not want to change any conditions whatever, but desired to take the silver out with one hand and use it and reach into the market with the other hand and replace it in the same condition. Their idea was to sell it at the same price at which they bought it, place it back in the Treasury in the same coined condition in which they took it out. It was one transaction. When that transaction was completed, the law ceased to exist. After the transaction is consummated silver takes its course, following the law of supply and demand as well as artificial barriers will permit. But I will say frankly that I agree with the Senator that the laws of supply and demand have nothing to do with the price of silver and have not had for many years and never will have until the Government of the United States sees fit to protect this product just as it protects wheat or cotton or anything else against unjust discrimination in the markets of the world. It does not protect silver, and we can not change that policy, and we are not going to change it during this war. If we do not get this help that the Government holds out to us now, they will not only crush the price of silver down to 85 cents an ounce, but they will crush it as low as they wish to crush it.

If the law of supply and demand had anything to do with silver, the price would have been $1.29 all the time, because the demand has been twice the supply for 16 years, to my knowledge. There were only 156,000,000 ounces of silver produced in 1916 in all the world, and the United States produced 75,000,000 of that; yet during that time the price of silver in 1916 never went to 75 cents an ounce. Why? Because the law of supply and demand had nothing to do with it. You had a monopoly among the buyers but a monopoly among the sellers was prohibited. You had a thousand poor little men who had to live from hand to mouth on the silver they produced, all trying to sell to one person. Of course, Great Britain is partially responsible for the condition in India by trying to bear the silver market; but no matter what the result has been in Great Britain, the result to us was such as I have described, and there is not a prominent mining man to-day in the United States who does not know it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLOGG. Do I understand the Senator to say that this is a bill for the relief of the silver producers?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know how the Senator could have heard that; it was never said.

Mr. KELLOGG. That was the substance of what I understood the Senator to say.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the Senator mean that he is inferring that the Senator from Nevada is arguing that it is for their benefit?

Mr. KELLOGG. I received that impression from the statement that they demanded this relief from the Government.

Mr. PITTMAN. They demanded this relief from the Government in consideration, mark you, of having their market destroyed by the utilization of silver that has already once been used and has served its purpose; that is all. The silver miners never asked for this legislation; the silver miners knew nothing about this legislation at the start. I agree with the Senator from Colorado that this is not the kind of legislation they want.

Mr. KELLOGG. What is the price of silver to-day? I do not happen to know.

Mr. PITTMAN. The price of silver yesterday—I do not know what it is to-day—was 104, which means a dollar and four cents an ounce. But that does not amount to one thing or another; it might be 85 cents to-morrow or it might be $1.15; in other words, the law of supply and demand has nothing to do with it.

So far as the price of $1 an ounce is concerned, I wish to say that that matter was canvassed by every committee from the West, by representatives of all the silver producers, and by the Representatives from those States, with the experts of the Treasury Department. I agree that at a dollar an ounce the producers of silver are not going to make any more than they made at 60 cents an ounce before the war. That is absolutely true. I will go further than that and say that the price of 60 cents an ounce for silver, the average price before the war, was a subnormal price. Of course it was subnormal; if it had not been for the artificial barriers put on silver at that time it would have been a dollar an ounce in 1916; but it was not. The silver men simply say this, "You have got to use this silver as a war measure; you have got to have this silver to conserve the gold supply of this country; you have got to have this silver to buy jute bagging in India." Right here I will say to the Senator from Colorado that, according to the report of the comptroller of India, the producers of jute bagging will not accept gold or silver notes or anything except silver metal. That is the position that the Treasury of the United States was in; that is the position that the business men of this country were in. They had to have silver, and you might know there would be no surplus in the world when the demand has been twice the supply for 16 years.

You would know there would be no supply of silver in the world when in 1916 the demand was for 270,000,000 ounces and the supply of the world was 156,000,000 ounces; so that there was only one place to get it, and that was the silver supply in the Treasury of the United States. They had to have it. It was then an American emergency. To-day it is not only an American emergency but it is a British emergency, and I want to say that that British emergency is an American emergency as long as this war lasts. It is just as much our duty to support the credit and the power of production of Great Britain and its territories in this war as it is to support ourselves, so far as war products are concerned.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say that I fully concur with him in that, and I hope I have not said anything that indicates any contrary view.

Mr. PITTMAN. I did gain that impression from the Senator, and I am very glad to hear him make that statement. I got a different iden about his position.

That was the situation before this last emergency arose, and it was that situation which appealed to the patriotism of the western men. While they were not satisfied with $1 an ounce, because $1 an ounce now affords less profit than 60 cents an ounce before the war, it was a matter of negotiation between the experts of the Treasury Department on the one hand and the producers on the other hand, and they came to the definite understanding that in the emergency $1 per ounce would be a fair and reasonable price to charge the Government.

I desire to say that the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve Board have bound themselves to stand behind that as a fair price and I understand that the mine producers of the West have bound themselves to stand by this bill with that fixed price in it. I know that if it were left to a vote of the West they would say, "We will stand by this agreement; we are going to insist also that the other beneficiaries of this bill throughout this country shall stand by every word of the agreement." I feel bound to support this bill by reason of the negotiations that have taken place and by reason of the mutual pledges that have moved on both sides. It would only be in case there was an attempted violation on the other side of this agreement that I would feel released, and if that ever took place I would feel at liberty to offer any amendment that I saw fit.

I agree with the Senator from Colorado that the price of silver at $1 an ounce is a less increase than in almost any other metal we produce. At a dollar an ounce the increase in the price of silver since the war will be 44 per cent; whereas the increase in the price of steel has been 137 per cent; in copper, 65 per cent; in wheat, 124 per cent; in lead, 58 per cent; in cotton, 122 per cent; in zinc, 50 per cent; in mercury, 188 per cent. So, at the price of $1 an ounce, silver will have increased less in price than any of the other great mining products. Yet the cost of the production of silver is just as great as the cost of production of the others.

The producers of silver knew these things; the committees knew these things; the western governors knew these things; and the Senators from the Western States who were present at those conferences knew these things, and yet I state to you that all of them for the sake of patriotism have agreed to the compromise of a fixed price of $1 an ounce until every dollar of the silver is returned to the Treasury of the United States. I have got to stand by that agreement.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I dislike to delay the Senate a moment longer upon this bill, but in view of some of the assertions of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] I must say a word or two additional to what I have already submitted with regard to the amendment now pending.

I was aware, Mr. President, of the meeting to which the Senator refers, attended by representatives of the silver-mining interests of the West; I was in correspondence with many of those interested in them and in the purpose of the meetings at the time. In that correspondence I took at that time the same position which I take now, and advised as earnestly as I could advise against any arrangement whereby a definite price should be fixed upon the metal, my conviction being—and I think I have some right, without being unduly conceited, to advise—that legislation fixing the price of silver, which in the past had failed of successful results, would be equally disappointing, should act as warnings and that we should again imitate them now.

I believe I know more about this question, its history, and the effect of legislation upon the metal than the average man knows; and I say that with all becoming humility, merely because I have made a very careful and earnest study of it for many years. It was my fortune, good or bad, to oppose the late Sherman law, which every silver miner in the West was clamoring for, because he thought he knew that it would not only stabilize the price but ultimately give him $1.29 an ounce for his product. He lived to learn the bitter lesson of disappointment and discouragement.

Let me say, Mr. President, also that the condition which confronted the silver industry last summer is not the condition which requires the enactment of this bill at this time. Had the bill become a law then, its effect would have been to place upon the market a very large amount of silver bullion, which would necessarily have affected the price, but no such condition exists at the present time.

This bill, according to the chairman of the committee, is an emergency measure of the first magnitude. Not one penny represented by the silver now in the Treasury will go into circulation in this country. The Senator from Nevada has just assured me that the jute producers of India demand silver for their product—not silver certificates, not gold, no form of currency, except silver bullion—and yet his argument would indicate——

Mr. OWEN. I did not——

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment—that this bill would result in unloosing a huge reservoir of silver and deluge the markets of the United States. I now yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I did not make that statement.

Mr. THOMAS. Did I say the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. OWEN. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I beg the Senator's pardon; I meant the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. It was a misstatement. The Senator from Oklahoma did not make that statement.

So much, Mr. President, for the statements which the Senator from Nevada has offered regarding this amendment, and which he has made with so much earnestness and apparently with so much heat—why, I do not know. I still insist, Mr. President, that this amendment should be adopted if there is to be any price fixing in the bill at all. I say that from my conviction of what I owe to the very interests which the Senator says will accept this provision and no other.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, if I may do so at this time, if he will not accept an amendment to provide that the purchase of silver shall be made from the production of American mines, American smelters, and American reduction works in this country?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I will accept such an amendment.

Mr. FALL. Then, Mr. President, after the word "purchase," in line 9, page 2, I move to insert the words "in the United States, of the products of mines situated in the United States and of reduction works so located."

Mr. OWEN. I accept that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first committee amendment.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency was on page 1, line 5, after the words "in excess of," to strike out "two," and insert "three"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "melted," to strike out "and," and insert "or"; and in line 3, after the word "prices," to insert "not less than $1 per ounce of silver one thousand fine"; so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized from time to time to melt or break up and to sell as bullion not in excess of 350,000,000 standard silver dollars now or hereafter held in the Treasury of the United States. Any silver certificates which may be outstanding against such standard silver dollars so melted or broken up shall be retired at the rate of $1 face amount of such certificates for each standard silver dollar so melted or broken up. Sales of such bullion shall be made at such prices not less than $1 per ounce of silver one thousand fine and upon such terms as shall be established from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 5, line 9, after the word "notes," to insert "issued under authority of section 5 of this act, if then outstanding," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That as and when standard silver dollars shall be coined out of bullion purchased under authority of this act, the Federal reserve banks shall be required by the Federal Reserve Board to retire Federal reserve bank notes issued under authority of section 5 of this act, if then outstanding, in an amount equal to the amount of standard silver dollars so coined, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay off and cancel any United States certificates of indebtedness deposited as security for Federal reserve bank notes so retired.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 6, line 1, after the word "That," to strike out "nothing in this act shall be construed as repealing or restricting the right of Federal reserve banks to issue Federal reserve bank notes under authority of the Federal reserve act, and," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That except as herein provided, Federal reserve bank notes issued under authority of this act shall be subject to all existing provisions of law relating to Federal reserve bank notes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 7, to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 9. That the provisions of Title VII of an act approved June 15, 1917, entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," and the powers conferred upon the President by subsection (b) of section 5 of an act approved October 6, 1917, known as the trading with the enemy act, shall, in so far as applicable to the exportation from or shipment from or taking out of the United States of silver coin or silver bullion, continue until the net amount of silver required by section 2 of this act shall have been purchased as therein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I now ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are very few Senators in the Chamber, and I know the Senators are all interested in these amendments and in the bill itself; so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. WILLIAMS answered to their names when called.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are detained, taking part in the third liberty loan campaign.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will state the pending amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is on page 3, line 11, where the committee proposes to strike out the word "available" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "expended only," so that, if amended, it will read:

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, any moneys heretofore and hereafter appropriated for the use of any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer shall be expended only for the purposes for which it was appropriated under the direction of such other agency as may be directed by the President hereunder to perform and execute said function.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes to insert a new section in the bill to be known as section 4, and to read as follows:

SEC. 4. That should the President, in redistributing the functions among the executive agencies as provided in this act, conclude that any bureau should be abolished and it or their duties and functions conferred upon some other department or bureau or eliminated entirely, he shall report his conclusions to Congress with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think it very important to understand exactly what this means. Is the President to abolish the bureau and then report, or is he to report before action is had and submit the question to Congress?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, under the bill the President can not abolish anything. I think that is an improper word to be used there. There is no power given in the bill to abolish anything. This is an amendment introduced and adopted by the committee, which I think the Senator from Georgia favored:

That should the President, in redistributing the functions among the executive agencies as provided in this act, conclude that any bureau should be abolished—

It ought to read, "conclude that any change should be made in any bureau"— and it or their duties and functions conferred upon some other department or bureau or eliminated entirely, he shall report his conclusions to Congress with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

That was the understanding in the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of course, this amendment gives the right to transfer the duties and functions at once. The bill does not give the right to abolish permanently the bureau or department—I do not think it would—but it does give the right at once to transfer the duties and functions to some other department or bureau.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it seems to me to be very clear from section 4 that the President can do nothing more than report to Congress in case he finds that any bureau should be abolished.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is it.

Mr. BORAH. And that was the intent of the Senator who offered the amendment. If there is any possible doubt about that, I should be glad myself to have the language changed accordingly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it would seem——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment; let me answer the Senator from Idaho first. The bill does not give the right to permanently abolish a bureau.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have heard that statement made a number of times, that the bill does not give the right to abolish bureaus or other agencies, but does give the right, so it is stated, to transfer the functions and to transfer the officials. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia what would be left of a bureau after the functions and the officials had been transferred?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It would not be temporarily in existence, unquestionably. For the time being it would not be operative.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. The concluding lines of the amendment indicate very clearly its purpose, it seems to me. The President is required to report to Congress, with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then suppose we add, after the word "proper," on line 22, the words "before action is taken." That would make it clear. Otherwise I think it is very far from clear.

Mr. BORAH. Speaking for myself, I should have no objection to that, although I must say that I can not see that it adds anything to it; but if the Senator thinks it does I am perfectly willing to have that amendment made, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think, under the amendment as it is drawn, action can be had before reporting to Congress, so far as the bill in other portions gives the right of action. The bill in other portions gives the right to transfer the functions from any bureau, commission, officer, agent, or agency.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will excuse me just a moment, how would it do to say that the President shall report his conclusions to Congress, with such recommendations for the abolishment of the bureau as he may deem proper? That would certainly leave no possible doubt about it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why not say "before action is had"?

Mr. BORAH. Well, I have no pride of authorship.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to ask the Senator from Idaho a question about this section and see if his view of it corresponds with my own. Is it not true that it was understood by the committee in adopting and reporting the amendment that the purpose was this, that after the war, when we resumed normal conditions, we might be able to readjust our system permanently to a degree through the experience which the President had during war times, and that if he thought we could reform our various civil establishments to advantage he should point that out and recommend legislation to that end? That is the purpose of it, is it not?

Mr. BORAH. I think that states it fairly. The idea, stated in another way but I think with the same purport, was that the President, in redistributing these agencies and rehabilitating these bureaus, in a measure, would undoubtedly discover—at least, there are some who think he should discover—that there are some bureaus which are unnecessary, some duplications, both in expenditure and in function, which Congress ought to have the benefit of in the nature of recommendations from the President; and that, as I understand, is what the Senator understood.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. That view of it is emphasized if we turn to the last six or seven lines of the bill, which read:

> Upon the termination of this act all executive or administrative agencies, departments, commissions, bureaus, offices, or officers shall exercise the same functions, duties, and powers as heretofore or as hereafter by law may be provided, any authorization of the President under this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Taking the two things together, I think it very clear that the purpose was that at the end of the war, or even before the end of the war, the President might recommend a re-formation or reorganization of our bureaus or departments, and that we might permanently achieve some economy and some further efficiency by reorganizing.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely. That is my understanding of it; and I think, if I may make a suggestion to the Senator from Georgia, that when you take section 4 and read it in connection with section 5 there is no room for possible misconstruction. While I am not in charge of the bill and have only a right to bind myself, I have no objection to the words which the Senator suggests. In view of the fact that the last six or seven lines specifically provide that all the functions of all departments are to be restored to their integrity after the war, nothing can be done until Congress acts upon it, and the President's recommendation would have no effect until Congress had enacted a law in pursuance of it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the effect would simply be that the President could not permanently abolish a bureau; he could not permanently interfere with the existence of a department. He is simply left temporarily to suspend a bureau or temporarily to suspend a department or any portion of our civil government that he sees fit, pending the war. After the period has expired to which the power is limited in this bill, then, under the last section, they would revive in some sort of shape, somewhere, I suppose, in their original place. I suppose something would have to be done then to put somebody in them, after they had been torn to pieces; but, though torn to pieces theoretically, they go back into existence for renewed organization.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator knows that a bureau is like a cat; it has nine lives, and you can not destroy it very easily. It was not really necessary to put this in here. Under the terms of the bill, without the last six or seven lines, in my judgment, they would go back to their original functions and be restored to their original integrity; but there were those Members who thought it was necessary to put that in in order that there might be no doubt at all about it. But my observation and my experience here is that it takes a heroic and extraordinary effort, in the most plain and specific terms conceivable, to abolish a bureau, and that it is never done by any indirection or by any ambiguous language.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is already a provision in the act of 1917 that authorizes the President, wherever he finds duplication in the bureaus, to consolidate and eliminate them, so that that feature of authority is given without reference to this statute. This act could not be considered one simply for that purpose. At least I wish to emphasize the fact that there is no saving grace in section 4 affecting the unlimited authority given by this bill to the President to temporarily wipe out of existence anything from a department on down and put it and its functions wherever he sees fit.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in not opposing the amendment before the Senate I want to be clearly understood as the Senator from Georgia has now been understood. Section 4 is about the only good part of the bill, in my judgment. I am as wholly opposed to the bill in its present form as I was the other day, when I made some remarks with regard to it, and I intend later, when the time comes for amendments to be offered from the floor, to present amendments and make some observations with regard to them. I would not have anyone gather the idea that in allowing these amendments to be adopted without discussion I have in any manner tempered my opposition to the bill itself in its present form, although I repeat that there are certain great powers which I think the President ought to have, if he has not them already, which may be doubtful, and I stand prepared to give them to him without reservation, but not all the powers that are granted by this bill. I shall be very glad to see section 4 as well as the final committee amendment on page 4 adopted, for these two amendments together at least give assurance to the people of the country that the disaster which I think is involved in a part of this bill is to be temporary only.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia will remember that the law that was passed in 1917 authorized the Economy Commission to investigate duplications of work and recommend as to the abolishment of certain departments where there was duplication or unnecessary departments or agencies of the Government. That Economy Commission has not reported, and, as I said before, there is nothing in this bill that authorizes the abolition of a department; but if the President, after investigation, in transferring these functions, should find in his judgment that some of these agencies or that some of these commissions or that some of these bureaus should be abolished, then the act authorizes him to report to Congress his judgment as to whether or not they ought to be abolished, and let Congress say whether they should be abolished and not himself. That was the amendment offered in the committee, and I can not see how there can be any trouble about that.

Let us see what it says:

> That should the President, in redistributing the functions among the executive agencies as provided in this act, conclude that any bureau should be abolished and it or their duties and functions conferred upon some other department or bureau or eliminated entirely, he shall report his conclusions to Congress with such recommendations as he may deem proper

Leaving it entirely to Congress as to whether it will abolish any of these bureaus or agencies. That is to be done after the war, after he has thoroughly investigated, and after he has exercised the authority conferred in this bill; so I do not see how there can be any mistake about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendment known as section 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to renumber section 4 to stand as section 5, and after the word "That," on line 23, page 3, to strike out the following words:

During the time this act is in force all restrictions in any existing law creating any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, or defining the duties thereof, shall be deemed to be suspended to the extent that they may be inconsistent with the exercise of the authority herein conferred.

And to insert:

All laws or parts of laws conflicting with the provisions of this act are to the extent of such conflict suspended while this act is in force.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Also, on page 4, beginning on line 6, it is proposed to insert the following paragraph:

Upon the termination of this act all executive or administrative agencies, departments, commissions, bureaus, offices, or officers shall exercise the same functions, duties, and powers as heretofore or as hereafter by law may be provided, any authorization of the President under this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. One amendment was passed over on page 2, line 23, where, after the word "executive," the committee proposes to insert the words "or administrative," so as to read:

Or consolidate any executive or administrative commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, or officers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to explain what the effect of this amendment is.

On page 3 the original bill contained the following provision:

And to employ by Executive order any additional agency or agencies and to vest therein the performance of such functions as he may deem appropriate.

That provision was stricken out. When it was stricken out, this word "administrative" was offered as an amendment on line 23, page 2. I submit that it accomplishes practically or exactly the same thing as the language stricken out on the next page.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think that amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amendment inserting the words "or administrative"? The Secretary says not; that it was passed over.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Chair whether that is so or not. The word "utilize" was passed over, I think, but not the words "or administrative."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment now under consideration was passed over.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Secretary to state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 23, after the words "or consolidate any executive," the committee proposes to insert "or administrative," so that it will read:

Or consolidate any executive or administrative commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, or officers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, as I stated, the original bill had a provision on page 3 authorizing the President to employ, by Executive order, any additional agency or agencies, and to vest therein the performance of such functions as he might deem desirable.

This bill takes all the functions connected with every officer in the Government, except, perhaps, the President and Vice President and Congress and the judiciary, and authorizes the President to transfer all their duties to any other department or any other officer or any other bureau or any public official whom he sees fit. It puts the whole civil Government of the United States in a basket without order or regulation or legislative enactment affecting it, whenever the President sees fit.

The original bill as drawn went further and provided not only that any of these functions be transferred to any other department or to any other bureau or any other officer or to any commission, but to any new agency that the President might see fit to create. That was the bill as it came to us. That was the first bill that the Senator from North Carolina introduced. It is almost shocking to contemplate it unless we are ready to abandon all legislative responsibility. I am aware of the fact that there are some who think it should be done. If I thought it would help win the war and was necessary to its prosecution and it could be done constitutionally, I would be in favor of it, but my conviction is that the performance of their constitutional responsibility by Congress is the way to help win the war, and Congress can bring wisdom and force and not hindrance to our military operations.

Now, let us see what is proposed after this broad power creating additional agencies was stricken out. The amendment still will accomplish just as much, but in not as open a way.

In section 2 three additional words are added:

That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to utilize, coordinate, or consolidate any executive or administrative commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, or officers now existing by law, to transfer any duties—

And so forth.

To transfer any duties or power from any existing department, commission or agency, office or officer to another and to transfer the personnel thereof or any part of it either by detail or assignment, and so forth. That is to say, if this word "administrative" goes into the bill, then any function of any department or any commission can be transferred not only to an officer of the Government but to an administrative agent.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator what distinction he draws between an executive agency and an administrative department?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the term "executive agency" as there used has reference to officials as a part of the executive department. I think the term "administrative agency" is much broader.

Mr. McKELLAR. What does the Senator say would be included in "administrative"?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am just coming to that. I want the Senate to understand it as I understand it. Let us see what is an administrative agency. It is any agency of any kind that is given something to do in connection with the administration. Every one of your advisory committees under the Council of National Defense were administrative agencies.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does not the Senator think that these so-called advisory committees could also be properly called executive agencies?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I hardly think so, but I am perfectly clear that they are administrative agencies. They helped administer by advice, but they did not actually execute.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt too greatly the Senator from Georgia, but I think we might as well settle one question right now with regard to the meaning of the word "administrative." It was questioned by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] and possibly by others at a former time whether the Interstate Commerce Commission is an administrative agency or an administrative commission. It seemed to me that that was worthy of inquiry. I find that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that. It has not only referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission as an administrative body many times in its opinions, but in the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, reported in One hundred and fifty-fourth United States, beginning at page 447, the question is as definitely decided as a question of that kind could be. Of course that was not one of the issues in dispute. I beg leave to refer to the case so that the Senator from Georgia may have it in mind as he proceeds with the discussion upon this point.

In that case, as all lawyers will remember, there first arose a controversy with regard to the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to require the presence of witnesses to testify in some matter that might be pending before the commission. The law was—and it is yet, for that matter—that if any witness summoned by the commission fail or refuse to appear, the matter could be certified to the court, and thereupon the court could compel the witness to appear if the commission was acting within its jurisdiction. During the course of the opinion the court in the case, on page 476, it said:

We have before us an act of Congress authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to summon witnesses and to require the production of books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to the matter under investigation. The constitutionality of this provision—assuming it to be applicable to a matter that may be legally intrusted to an administrative body for investigation—is, we repeat, not disputed and is beyond dispute.

The court then proceeds along the same line to argue; and there is another——

Mr. BORAH. Does the court decide there that it is an administrative body as contradistinguished from an executive body?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, it does not. Personally, I think it is both.

Mr. BORAH. Yes, I think the Senator is correct; and I do not believe that the Supreme Court used it in any other way than as synonymous with an executive body or an administrative body.

Mr. CUMMINS. Personally, I think it is both, but we all know why this word was inserted in the bill. It was inserted in the bill by the committee to catch the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think the Senator ought to say that. I never heard that suggested except by the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators should address the Chair.

Mr. OVERMAN. We put in the words, the Senator will remember, "now existing by law."

Mr. CUMMINS. I will not go further into it, because I may have occasion to deal with it later, but the opinion of the court in that case repeatedly refers to the Interstate Commerce Commission as an administrative body. I do not think we ought to proceed upon the theory that it is not within the terms of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not the Senator think it is an administrative body or an executive-administrative body?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not care which it is, it is administrative and we bring the Interstate Commerce Commission within the terms of the bill beyond all dispute by inserting the word "administrative." I think it is an executive commission also, whether it executes for Congress, or whether it executes for the President is immaterial.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Georgia left out the words which were put in by the committee, "or administrative commissions now existing by law;" that is, an administrative body, an administrative commission, which Congress has passed a law to establish. While Congress has passed the law, it is an administrative commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. As in this case, the Interstate Commerce Commission was established by Congress and it exists by law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa just one question, if I may. If the words "or administrative" were left out, does the Senator think that it would still include the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. CUMMINS. Answering the question very frankly, I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am inclined to think the same way. My notion about the word "administrative" was that it was intended by it to include some of these advisory bodies of which we have had so many.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know what was in the mind of every Senator, but I got the notion very clearly that there were some who believe the Interstate Commerce Commission might be brought within the terms of this bill, and that if the word "administrative" were inserted there would be no doubt about it.

Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. OVERMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do for a moment, but I really would be glad to go on shortly with what I have to say.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I shall take a very few moments. The Senator from Iowa has called attention to some language in the Supreme Court decision. I was interested to see if the words "executive and administrative" had been defined by judicial decision, and I made quite an extensive search for some authority on the question. I find none. I did see the language the Senator from Iowa refers to. I saw also in another Supreme Court case, familiarly known I think as the Railroad Commission Cases, where the question came up from Mississippi that Justice Brewer used the word "administrative" as descriptive of a railroad commission with powers similar to those of the Interstate Commerce Commission; but there is no place in the decisions I have been able to find, at least, where there is a judicial definition of these words. I have read the decisions. The court simply uses the word "administrative" as descriptive of the particular body it is speaking of, but not as conveying any particular definiteness or refinement of meaning. I think also that the Senator from Georgia will find that many of the law dictionaries define "executive" and "administrative" as synonymous, and I question whether there is very much difference.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have no doubt the term "administrative" has a broader meaning and is offered to cover the agencies that the word "executive" would not cover. If it has the same meaning, why put it in? If it does not add anything to "executive," then let us leave it out by unanimous vote.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think if we would leave out "or administrative" the Interstate Commerce Commission would be in no danger?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think myself it would still be in danger. I read from the dictionary the difference in the meaning of the two terms. This is the Century:

> Administrative: * * * Sometimes the term "executive," which strictly means an authority which puts the laws in force, is opposed to the term "administrative," which implies the performance of every other sort of immediate governmental act, such as collecting taxes, organizing and directing the Army, Navy, and police, supervising trade, locomotion, postal communication, and carrying out in detail legislative measures for promoting public health, education, morality, and general contentment.

It is recognized as a broader and more comprehensive word, and it is put in to cover everything that "executive" has not covered.

I was about to state what some of these administrative agencies were. The most distinguished that we had for a while were the advisory boards that were administrative agencies not to execute but to gather information—an agency for information. Take the Creel bureau. That is not an executive agency, but I would consider it an administrative agency. It performs the function of gathering up romances and scattering them throughout the country.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is not that created by law?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I think there is a statute which authorizes the organization of a bureau for the presentation of information. If it was not created by law, who is paying for it out of the Government Treasury, and by what authority?

Mr. McKELLAR rose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Wait a moment. I want to give these administrative agencies. The Food Administration is an administrative agency. In all its ramifications the people connected with it are administrative agents. The Fuel Administration—Dr. Garfield and all his force—are administrative agents. The alien-enemy organization is an administrative agency. They are just so innumerable already that anybody who is desired can be put into them, and by using this word "administrative" the President might name any agency he saw fit to perform any of these duties. Any of these administrative agencies can be used, and that would cover anybody whom it is desired to put in charge of functions of government.

So I insist that the word "administrative" put in here and the privilege of utilizing the administrative agencies have broadened out the scope of this bill. It seems to me this amendment was found necessary when the language was stricken out which permitted employment by Executive order of any additional agent or agency and to vest therein the performance of such functions as might be deemed appropriate. That language having been stricken out and the same power being desired, it became necessary to put in the two words "to utilize" and to add "or administrative agency." Thus those to whom transfer of Government functions may be made are not limited to officers of the Government—those who are, strictly speaking, officers—but transfer can be made to those entirely outside of the classes of men confirmed by the Senate and outside those holding positions fixed by law. All these agencies come within the purview of the bill, and to any of them we as legislators are to permit a transfer of the functions of our civil Government. What functions we are not told. Why? We are told, "To win the war." Mr. President, if it was necessary and it would win the war to transfer them all to Mr. Hoover and his organization I would be willing to do it. But to say that you do it to win the war is one thing and to show that it would help win the war is a very different thing.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the Senator take the point of view that it is not necessary to transfer anything anywhere, to do any reorganizing, in order to enable us to get along to advantage in this war?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think there is a great deal of reorganizing that ought to be done, and it ought to be done at once, and I think it is lamentable that it has not been done before. I commend a splendid act of reorganization when Charles Schwab was put in charge of the shipbuilding work. That was great. That is the kind of reorganization I urge and pray for.

I will tell you where I think there ought to be reorganization. Take the production of fighting flying machines. Do we need a reorganization? Yes, there. Not in our civil government, not in the Interstate Commerce Commission, not in the Federal Reserve Board. They are splendidly organized now. Do not turn the President to the task of tearing them to pieces. Ask the President to take hold of the problem of preparing flying machines to fight our battles in France. For 12 months we have waited. How many are there? If the $680,000,000 that we appropriated for that purpose had been properly used during the past 12 months we would have had 5,000 or 10,000 of them in France, ready to meet the Germans in their recent onward march, and they would have been worth 500,000 men in the ranks.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator to say we should not impose upon the President the task of tearing some of these departments to pieces, such as the Federal Reserve Board and others. Of course, we do not impose anything upon the President at all by this bill. We do not obligate him to make a single move, and certainly we would not assume that the President would, for instance, make a move which in his judgment as Commander in Chief was not only likely to be but absolutely essential to what he conceived to be the best interests of the situation. We do not impose the duty upon him to tear anything to pieces.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have more confidence in the judgment of the Congress in organizing the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Reserve Board than I have in any advisors outside of Congress the President might have who would undertake to help him perform that task. I am unwilling to leave it to any President. The Constitution placed the duty of legislation upon Congress; not upon the President, and I believe it was wise. I believe it will be a better Interstate Commerce Commission and a better Federal Reserve Board if Congress fixes its functions and prescribes its duties and passes upon the men than if any President did it. He must do it by the advice of others; he could not do it by himself. I would rather have the judgment of the Senate upon a problem of that sort than the judgment of the President and any who might gather around him to advise him. I am unwilling to see the plan we have prescribed by law changed by any President.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Congress has already acted with reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, in my humble judgment, there is nothing the President can do which will more completely emasculate that institution during the war than Congress has already done. Congress has rendered the Interstate Commerce Commission into a situation where it is not only powerless but one which it is humiliating for it to occupy. It has taken away from it powers which belong to it, which were delegated to it, and suspended those powers; and it has given it an inconsequential reviewing power and admonished it in the bill not to exercise those powers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I take issue with the Senator in the conclusion he has just drawn. I admit that we went further than I desired in the recent bill which provided for the handling of the railroads by the Government. The bill as it came to us from the administration obliterated the Interstate Commerce Commission. It left to the Director of Railroads the unrestricted control of railroad rates. It took away any review by the commission of discriminatory or excessive rates. The bill does not leave the commission as much power as I would wish, but it still leaves the power of review and the power of final decision. I read the language:

Mr. BORAH. I know——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to put in the RECORD the language of the bill in reply to his statement. After the schedule has been filed by the Director of Railroads with the Interstate Commerce Commission changing the rates—

> Said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall be reasonable and just and shall take effect at such time and upon such notice as he may direct, but the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, upon complaint, enter upon a hearing concerning the justness and reasonableness of so much of any order of the President as establishes or changes any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice of any carrier under Federal control, and may consider all the facts and circumstances existing at the time of the making of the same. In determining any question concerning any such rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices or changes therein, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall give due consideration to the fact that the transportation systems are being operated under a unified and coordinated national control and not in competition.
> After full hearing the commission may make such findings and orders as are authorized by the act to regulate commerce as amended, and said findings and orders shall be enforced as provided in said act.

The further proposition to which the Senator refers, which I would not have had put in the bill if I could have prevented it, is as follows:

> Provided, however, That when the President shall find—

Which means the Director of Railroads—

> Provided, however, That when the President shall find and certify to the Interstate Commerce Commission that in order to defray the expenses of Federal control and operation fairly chargeable to railway operating expenses, and also to pay railway tax accruals other than war taxes, net rents for joint facilities and equipment, and compensation to the carriers, operating as a unit, it is necessary to increase the railway operating revenues, the Interstate Commerce Commission in determining the justness and reasonableness of any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall take into consideration said finding and certificate by the President, together with such recommendations as he may make.

Now I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. What does the Senator think, in its practical operation, would be the effect of the law during the continuance of the war, so far as any real control of the situation is concerned, by the Interstate Commerce Commission? Does he expect anything from the Interstate Commerce Commission except that which emanates from the Commander in Chief, either directly or indirectly, with reference to the entire matter?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator contemplate that the Interstate Commerce Commission, after its record in the 5 per cent rate case, in which it took into consideration the conditions of the war at the time when the law did not authorize it to take it into consideration, in reviewing the action of the Chief Executive, the Commander in Chief, under those instructions, will undertake to make any changes in the adjustment of rates?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; if they do their duty.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Furthermore, let me say, and then I will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts, the very fact that you have a tribunal where you can obtain a hearing, where you can obtain the facts, where you can present testimony, where you can show injustice, where you can bring proof to demonstrate that a rate is discriminatory as well as unreasonable, will be a restraint upon the railroad superintendents all over the country, who really make these rates. The President does not do it. It can not be his work. No 10 men could do it. It will exercise a tremendous restraining influence of great value, and it will make it possible for shippers and communities and owners of industries to protect themselves from being closed up.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does not the Senator know that when these different communities and industries and interests become dissatisfied with their situation, they will not go to the Interstate Commerce Commission, but that they will go to the Commander in Chief and to the Railroad Directors? Does he suppose that they will go to the Interstate Commerce Commission, as they formerly did? Why, Mr. President, they will appeal direct to the power which has not only the initiative, but, in practical effect, the conclusion with reference to this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I dissent from the view of the Senator that the action of the Railroad Director will be the conclusion; I dissent from his view that shippers will have much of a hearing before the Director. I furthermore believe that the fact that shippers can put their cases before the public through the Interstate Commerce Commission will be most helpful even if they go first before a local superintendent under the Director.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the point I was going to inquire about was this: The Interstate Commerce Commission was intrusted by Congress with the duty of making a physical valuation of the railroads. It has been engaged in that work, I think, for now some three years. The railroad law, from which the Senator from Georgia has quoted, does not take that work from them; they still have that. Under this bill as it stands, that work can be taken from the Interstate Commerce Commission and transferred to the Director General of the Railroads, which I think would be a very great misfortune.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has said that we do not impose the duties on the President. I do not think it is a question of whether we impose them or not. I think that we ought never to grant a power, whether we make it mandatory or permissive, that we do not expect to see and are not prepared to see exercised. I think nothing can be worse than to loosely grant powers on the theory that they will not be exercised.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we pass laws here every day—we have passed half a dozen acts since this war began, and we shall pass a dozen more—in which there are powers which if used improperly would be destructive. We grant such powers continuously upon the theory that they will be exercised in a proper, intelligent, and patriotic way, and if this power is exercised in that way the things which the Senator from Massachusetts speaks of will not happen.

Now, for instance, take the railroad law. What are the powers of the President under that law? The President under that law could build up one town and destroy another; he could build up one industry and destroy another; he could do things which would be absolutely destructive of the business interests of this country upon the theory that he would not proceed with intelligence and with a desire to protect the situation, but upon the theory that he would proceed with a willful desire to do injury.

Mr. LODGE. But, Mr. President, if we think—and I believe the majority of the Senate does think—that it would be a mistake to take from the Interstate Commerce Commission the work of the physical valuation of railroads and give it to the President, why should we give it to the President on the theory that he will not exercise that improper power? If he does not want the power, and it is an improper one for him to exercise, let us not grant it to him.

Mr. BORAH. That is precisely what I have been saying. We must grant certain general powers here if the President is going to redistribute these functions at all. Within that grant he may do things which it would be wholly undesirable to have done. We are constantly doing that in all these measures. There are many things which might be done under the railroad law which the Senator from Massachusetts would not want to see done. Under the railroad law as it now stands the President could practically stop the physical valuation of the railroads. I have not learned anything particularly about the physical valuation of the railroads as it is progressing and as it is disclosing the facts that ought to endear it to anybody in this country. In saying this I do not mean that the commission is not properly carrying out the law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] may have more information upon that subject than I have, but I think the work that has been done by the Interstate Commerce Commission and by the Bureau of Valuation is the most important work that this Government has carried on, save the prosecution of the war, during the years that it has been in progress, and that as much has been done for the protection of the people of this country in that respect as has been done anywhere else within the administration of the law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to debate with the Senator from Iowa about his conclusions. He is much better informed about these things than am I; but I venture to say that if the physical valuation of the railroads continues along the trend which it now takes and the result is what the present situation indicates it will be of very great benefit to the railroads of the country. It will be a distinct boon to them. And again I say that I do not contend that the officers are not doing their duty. But the facts seem different than they were supposed to be.

Mr. CUMMINS. It may be, but certainly if it is taken out of the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission and transferred to——

Mr. OVERMAN. Right there——

Mr. CUMMINS. If it is transferred to Mr. McAdoo, it will be of infinitely more benefit to the railroads than it will be if left in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to both Senators.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rose really to ask the Senator from Georgia to put in with his quotation from section 10 of the railway law the whole section. There is a great misapprehension here with regard to what we have done in the railroad law, bad as it was. The first part of section 10—that is, the section in which the quotation made by the Senator from Georgia occurs—is as follows:

SEC. 10.-That carriers while under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control or with any order of the President.

As it is now under the present law, with the exception of initiating rates—and that the railroads had the right to do before the law was passed—the President, in order to interfere with the Interstate Commerce Commission, must override by an order an act of the commission; and he would be much more reluctant to do that, to the prejudice of the people, than he would be to transfer the entire authority to some other person.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Iowa a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Iowa speaks of the President transferring the power from the Interstate Commerce Commission to some other body to make a valuation of the railroads. Could the President do that under this bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly he could.

Mr. OVERMAN. Could he do it, unless it was done in the interests of the prosecution of the war and as a matter solely in the interest of the prosecution of the war?

Mr. CUMMINS. It would be done against the war, in my judgment, if it were done; but when the President decided its relation to the war, there would be no review of that decision.

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is simple, pure camouflage, if I may use that much abused word; it does not mean anything.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator from Iowa think that the limitation as to its being done in the interest of the prosecution of the war does not mean anything?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is no limitation, in my judgment.

Mr. OVERMAN. The other day the Senator argued that the President might abdicate his function as President of the United States and transfer it to a boy 4 years old.

Mr. CUMMINS. He could do that under this bill, certainly. There are certain constitutional provisions, however, that would prohibit that.

Mr. OVERMAN. He would at least be limited to a man who was over 21 years of age.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, then, I am assuming that we are disregarding the Constitution. Assuming that that fundamental law has no restraining force now, under this bill the President could transfer his own functions to any officer of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. Provided it was done in the interest of the prosecution of the war.

Mr. CUMMINS. Provided the President thought somebody else could manage the war better than he could.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does that statement not reduce itself to the fact that the President is a fool?

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Iowa contend that the President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must ask Senators to address the Chair and obtain permission to interrupt. Four Senators have been now on the floor at the same time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am going to yield to the Senator from Idaho, and then I will request an opportunity to go on with what I was saying.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I shall not interrupt the Senator, because, if I should ask the question which I have in mind, it would require an answer from the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield for that question and its answer.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to ask whether the Senator from Iowa does not contend that the President could relieve himself of the executive duties imposed upon him by the Constitution simply because the proposed statute says that he may redistribute the executive agencies of the Government?

Mr. CUMMINS. This bill says a great deal more than that.

Mr. BORAH. I know; but a statute can not relieve the President from his constitutional executive duties.

Mr. CUMMINS. So long as we observe the Constitution, no; but if we depart from the Constitution, as I think we are departing from it in this instance, and assume that the Constitution has no binding force either upon Congress or upon the President, under the terms of this bill the President could deputize any officer he might select to act as President during the war. Possibly that may be what he desires to do, for aught I know.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to express a few views, first, with reference to the effect of this bill on the Interstate Commerce Commission. Without the word "administrative" I am perfectly clear that the Interstate Commerce Commission is reached, and I had not intended to bring the Interstate Commerce Commission into the discussion of this word "administrative," but since it is here, I will say just a few words with reference to it.

I regret that we were not able to retain in the railroad law exactly the same status for the Interstate Commerce Commission which it had prior to the passage of that law. I would give it just as complete authority, if I could, to review rates fixed by the Director of Railroads as it had over rates fixed by the corporations. I dislike this class of legislation, which provides that the President shall perform tasks when we know he can not and when we know the extent of the tasks make performance by the President impossible. It is bad legislation; it is misleading.

We really ought not to say "the Director of the Railroads," for no one man can fix the rates on the railroads from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf to the Lakes; they will be fixed by local men all over the country. No one man would have time to consider their suggested changes; he could not and would not. They will come automatically through the Director of Railroads to the President and go to the Interstate Commerce Commission after they have been acted upon locally all over the land. So if we strike down the remaining powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the local superintendents from one end of the land to the other, or local organizations—dozens of them in number—will really make the new rates. They will hold in the hollow of their hands the power to destroy towns and cities by discrimination; they will hold in the hollow of their hands the power to suppress any industry anywhere. A discriminatory rate can destroy any industry; a discriminatory rate can destroy any city or any town; and, without this power of revision by the Interstate Commerce Commission, we would turn the industries of the country, we would turn the cities and towns of the country over to the pleasure of local organizations, many in number, scattered throughout the entire land. Even to hang the threat of such a condition over them, to hang the possibility of such a condition over them, is to menace their prosperity. I would not go into business or put a dollar in an industry requiring the use of transportation if the local superintendents or the local railroad officials could stop me by an excessive rate or a discriminatory rate at pleasure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me, Mr. President, that a couple of months ago or so the question which the Senator is now discussing was a live one; but I want to ask the Senator if he does not think since Congress has passed the railroad law that that settles the question which he is now discussing? The railroad law itself provides:

> After full hearing the commission may make such findings and orders——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I have read that.

Mr. McKELLAR. The act proceeds:

> as are authorized by the act to regulate commerce as amended, and said findings and orders shall be enforced as provided in said act: Provided, however, That when the President shall find and certify to the Interstate Commerce Commission that in order to defray the expenses of Federal control——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, those provisions have all been read during his absence and put in the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not that provision absolutely put it in the hands of the President to control the rate-making authority, and is not the Interstate Commerce Commission denuded of authority by the act of Congress which we have already passed?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I answer the Senator with no embarrassment and with emphasis, it is not. When, a half hour or an hour ago, we had the provisions of the railroad bill up for discussion, we read them and views were expressed with reference to them. If the Senator will go just a little further back in the railroad act he will find this provision:

> Said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall be reasonable and just and shall take effect at such time and upon such notice as he may direct, but the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, upon complaint, enter upon a hearing concerning the justness and reasonableness of so much of any order of the President as establishes or changes any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice of any carrier under Federal control.

And after hearing all the facts the Interstate Commerce Commission is to determine the question, and its decision is to be final.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, Mr. President; but there is still a further provision, which says that after all that is done—

> The Interstate Commerce Commission in determining the justness and reasonableness of any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall take into consideration said finding and certificate by the President, together with such recommendations as he may make.

After the matter has been gone into by the Interstate Commerce Commission under this act and a decision has been reached, then the act prescribes that it must listen to recommendations made by the President of the United States, the same authority that appoints each member of the commission; and the conclusion is inevitable that what Congress meant by that provision is that, if the President overrules the Interstate Commerce Commission, the President's ruling must go and the commission must accede to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On the contrary, the reverse is true; it is expressly declared that the commission shall set aside the order if it is unreasonable and discriminatory. While the President may file a certificate, and while the commission may consider it, still, if they are men of courage and character, they will overrule the President when he is wrong. They will well understand also that the President can not have mentally acted upon the rates. He will only certify what others have done. They will perfectly understand that the President knows nothing about it; that it is not the work of the President; they will perfectly understand that it is not the work of the Director General of Railroads; they will perfectly understand that it is the work of a superintendent or of men away off from the center handling the railroads; they will perfectly understand that the President could stand an examination on any certificate he may send to them, and that if they should make inquiry concerning the certificate he could not tell them what was in it. No one human being can keep up with the changing rates. There are sent in over 10,000 changes a year, as a rule; and if the President remembered the number he had signed he would do well. Instead of meaning that they are to abandon their duty, the law puts a duty on them. It may be true that the spirit is abroad in the land that officials charged with duties by the Constitution and by law ought to lay down and abandon their responsibilities, but this puts a responsibility upon the commission, and I regard it as valuable.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, Mr. President, will the Senator explain why such a proviso was put there if the Interstate Commerce Commission was not to consider the advice and the recommendation of the President?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It says they are to consider it for what it is worth, but are not to be bound by it. The provision was put there because there was influence enough in one branch to pass this bill putting all the powers in the Director of the Railroads. That is why. The Senate passed it with no such provision; and I would have been willing, if a majority of the Senate had been, to have stood by the Senate provision, even if there never had been a railroad bill passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him once more?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. That brings the Senator to the very statement that I made in the beginning, that the unfortunate part of the situation, as it seems to me from the Senator's standpoint, is that we have already acted on it; we have already yielded the power.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have not; we have expressly made it the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to render their own judgment as to whether a rate is reasonable and just; but the act provides that the commission can consider the certificate of the President. That is what it says. Now, if they are servile, possibly they will lie down and abandon their duty; but I do not believe they will. I tell you the power to have a discriminatory rate reviewed before them and to take testimony regarding it to show its reasonableness is a valuable power. The local body, knowing that they will be subject to public presentation as to action, knowing that they will be subject to public criticism before a semijudicial tribunal, where testimony can be taken, will be a little more careful of the rights of those whom they touch. Turn them loose without the right of hearing, turn them loose without any right of review and reversal, and I would not give the snap of a finger for the rights of any industry dependent upon the privilege of transportation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Take a concrete case. Suppose a body of shippers had petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission and had secured a reduction of rates from a certain class of railroads; that that action was made final by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and then, after that was done, the President of the United States should say, "While your finding is no doubt in a way all right, still, because of 'war taxes'"—I am reading from the statute now—"because of the additional cost of operation, because of railway tax accruals other than war taxes, net rents for joint facilities and equipment, and compensation to the carriers operating as a unit, the rate provided is too low." The statute says the President has a right to take into consideration all such questions and submit them to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Does the Senator, as a practical question, think that the Interstate Commerce Commission would refuse to consider the certificate of the President?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of course, they would consider the certificate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am inclined to think they would not only consider it, but that they would feel that they were bound by it, if the President of the United States enumerated all those things.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then why did the law give the right to have a hearing?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it is nugatory myself.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is nugatory if they are a set of cowards that ought to be impeached, but not otherwise. The Senator misunderstands the certificate from the President. It comes in as a part of the original case and is to be before the commission before they render their decision; but in spite of that certificate from the President, it is their duty to pass upon the testimony and decide the case. That certificate has no bearing upon discriminatory rates; that certificate is to bear upon the general problem of how much money is to be raised as a whole.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. May I suggest to the Senator from Georgia also that the facts which the President may certify to the commission are facts which the commission would take under consideration in any event in fixing a rate. The courts have held and the commission has held over and over again that such facts should be taken into consideration. There may be an object in the President certifying to those things, because the President is operating the roads and has all the knowledge and the facts.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thank the Senator. In point of fact, as he states, the certificate of the President simply covers matter that even to-day under the law they would be required to consider. It is not a certificate that is to be filed with them after they render a decision, but it goes to them as part of the original evidence. I apprehend that the greatest danger to the public from the loss of this authority to the commission would be in the case of discriminatory rates, where a rate is intentionally made so heavy affecting a particular industry as to suppress it.

The President's certificate is to have reference to the general problem of the amount of money that is to be raised, the amount that will be needed. I apprehend that there will be a substantial increase of rates; I am not enthusiastic about Government operation of railroads; and had not the President already seized them, I would not have voted to allow him to seize them. When the act was passed in 1916 I did not think we had voted to do so, and I have not changed my mind. Why should we authorize the President to break down the service which we have reserved to the Interstate Commerce Commission? The answer is to win the war; yes; if it would win the war; but suppose it would help the Germans?

I think it would help the Germans, and therefore I am against it. I know it would help the Germans, and therefore I am against it. Do not put on us this help to the Germans; do not put the industries in a state of doubt and break them down in the interest of Germany, the enemy of the universe. Give some better reason than that you want to win the war. Is the President going to use the power or is he not? If he is not, leave it out; he does not need it. If he is going to use it, keep it out; do not let him do so. That is my view of it. If I knew that the President wanted to use it, I would know that I ought to help keep it out of the bill and not give him the power; and if you know he does not intend to use it, why do you object to leaving it out? I tell you, you menace the prosperity of the country by putting that provision in the bill.

I had not intended to discuss that feature of the bill at this time. I was objecting to the word "administrative." I think we should leave that word out. I think that word "administrative" was put there so that all these Creel agencies and Garfield agencies and the advisory commissions of the Senator from Tennessee and all the remainder of these administrative agencies——

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will not call them my advisory commissions. I am sure I am as much opposed to them as almost any man in this country.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call them his, because he has rendered good service to the Senate by showing how useless, how worse than useless, how harmful they have been. I think the word "administrative" ought to be stricken out, because it broadens the distribution of all the functions of our Government to all these indefinite agencies, changeable and shifting day by day and hour by hour, the agencies that have caused most of the confusion that has existed at this capital during the past 12 months.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I do not want to interrupt the Senator unless it is agreeable to him.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is entirely agreeable.

Mr. NELSON. I merely wish to say, in reply to the question why was the word "administrative" put in the bill, that it was an amendment offered by myself and was put in the bill to differentiate and segregate administrative bodies from what we call advisory commissions, of which we have such a multitude. It was to leave them outside of the breastworks. That was the only malice prepense there was in the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I know that any purpose the Senator from Minnesota ever has is a good one. While I may not always agree with him, I never doubt, when I differ with him, the earnestness of his patriotism or his devotion to his conviction of what is right. I think he used an unhappy word. I am afraid that instead of cutting them out they are included, and I want to cut them out.

Mr. President, I have said a good deal this afternoon about the Interstate Commerce Commission. While I am on my feet I wish to express my earnest delight that the President has put into the Shipping Board a mentality capable, in my judgment, of handling that tremendous enterprise. Oh, let him have his time for work of that sort. The Interstate Commerce Commission is doing all right. The Federal Reserve Board is doing all right. If there is an organization in the United States that has commanded the respect and confidence of the country, it is our Federal Reserve Board. Our banks during this year of war have moved on with a confidence in the Federal Reserve Board that has been simply splendid, and that has not helped the Germans. It has helped us. Breaking down the Federal Reserve Board will not help win the war. It will help the Germans.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator does not think the President wants to help the Germans, does he?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; but I do not think the President's judgment is infallible. I would rather have the judgment of the Senate on the organization of the Federal Reserve Board than that of the President and any advisers he may have; and there is where the Constitution puts it. The framers of our Constitution believed that the Senate and the House of Representatives, coming from every part of the Union, were better capable than one man of doing work of that character. I believe in the Constitution, and I do not intend to abandon at anybody's dictation my part of the responsibility which falls upon me under the Constitution, and I do not want to abandon it. I want to help whip the Germans and I want to stop hindrances through the unwise delegation of authority that can not be properly performed. I believe we ought to stay here and do our part. If any change is needed in the Interstate Commerce Commission, I say we know how to make it better than the President does or would if he had nothing else to do. The Senate as a whole has had broader experience in matters of this kind than any man that lives. It has had broader experience than any one Senator. Men are men, whatever place they hold. I wish to save these organizations, to save them for the service of my country during this war. We need them. I am not willing to help the Germans by running from my responsibilities as a Senator. If I am called upon to stand by the President by supporting every bill that is labeled "Administration," I reply that it is not wise for Senators to vote without mental action. The Constitution requires us to say whether a measure is wise or not, and I intend to help decide this as a Senator——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand from the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Georgia that this was framed so as to exclude the advisory commissions and take them out of the reorganization?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was what the Senator from Minnesota said.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will address his question to me, I can answer it.

Mr. LODGE. I shall be delighted to have the Senator answer it. Is that the purpose?

Mr. NELSON. We had a lot of advisory commissions, any amount of them, and I did not want them inserted in this legislation; and so we put in the word "administrative" to refer to those that had administrative jurisdiction, as distinguished from legislative authority. Is not that plain?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; so far as it goes. What I want to get at is whether this takes the advisory commissions from the control of the President.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, although I have not the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will examine the bill, he will find that we also put in there the words "now existing by law." The Creel commission is not created by law, as the Senator knows. The Senator from Georgia thought it had been created by some law. I understand that it was not created by law, but that it was established by the President under some fund he has. But that is administrative. There is a Council of National Defense that is established by law. The Council of National Defense, under that law, has established certain agencies. Those are created by law; but there are certain commissions as to which I do not know how they are established. This does not apply to them.

Mr. LODGE. What I want to get at is whether the advisory commissions, of which we have a great many, were exempted from the operation of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not if created by law.

Mr. LODGE. Are those exempted that are not created by law?

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator mean whether they are exempted by this bill?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; exempted from the operation of this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. It exempts all administrative agencies not created by law or existing by law.

Mr. LODGE. But the Senator from Minnesota stated with the utmost clearness that the word "administrative" was put in in order to distinguish them from the advisory commissions. What I am trying to find out is whether the advisory commissions are exempted from the operation of this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not if they are created by law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I answer the Senator without any hesitation that this term "administrative," which is applied to places to which these functions can be transferred, covers, in my opinion, all the advisory commissions or any others that might be appointed, because there is a law which authorizes the creation of the Council of National Defense and authorizes it to appoint an advisory commission and such other commissions or committees as it deems proper. Now, all these advisory commissions heretofore appointed, or any that may be hereafter appointed, are appointed in pursuance of law, for there was a law that authorized their appointment; and in my opinion this word "administrative" would bring all of those committees into a position where any of the functions of any part of the Government might be placed on them.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want the Senator to misunderstand me. It is not because I am anxious to have them exempted that I am asking these questions. It seems to me that they are the very things that should be specially included in the bill, for if anything can be done to consolidate the advisory commissions and reduce their numbers it is very desirable.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the Senator does not catch the criticism I make. This term is used in a class naming the agencies to which the functions of the civil government may be transferred; not from which they shall be taken, not from which any authority they have is to be removed. It is a description of the agencies to which all the powers of every department—all the powers of the Federal Reserve Board, the Interstate Commerce Commission, all of our functions of government—might be transferred; and as it is broadened it includes more indefinite agencies, and creates additional uncertainty as to where the civil government is going.

Mr. LODGE, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. NELSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Georgia yield? There are three Senators on their feet.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, as he was addressing me, I shall be through in a moment. I am in entire agreement with him that the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Federal Reserve Board, and a number of other wholly civil departments, should be exempted from the operation of this bill; but I should be sorry to think that the advisory commissions could not be consolidated or reduced.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say that I think there was some confusion in the statement just made by the Senator from Georgia. We have a statute—I have not it before me—creating what is known as the Council of National Defense, consisting of the members of the Cabinet.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. That Council of National Defense is authorized to appoint advisory commissions, but they have no administrative functions. If the Senator will read the law—I will point it out to him afterwards—he will see that the only power that all those commissions have is to give advice and furnish information. They have no administrative authority. That is the status of the case.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that.

Mr. NELSON. Take, for instance, Mr. Creel's bureau. That is outside of the breastworks. I do not know any law for that. The President has appointed that bureau by a species of main force; and I do not use the term in any odious sense. He has appointed that bureau, and it is a bureau that might do a good deal of good, but whether it has or not up to the present time is a question that I leave for Senators to judge.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I have the impression—and I refer him to the Senator from Minnesota to confirm it—that his idea in offering this amendment was not to recognize in the law at all those commissions which are not created by law. The purpose of the amendment was to ignore those outside commissions, and not include them or recognize them under this law. That was the main purpose of the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. That was what I supposed, and that is what I am trying in my humble way to point out as something that ought not to be done. I think if we are going to have everything consolidated and transferred and practically abolished, that is a splendid place to begin.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator feel that those commissions are the proper commissions to distribute functions to, and have them perform functions that are now performed by departments?

Mr. LODGE. Why, Mr. President, what we have been suffering from more than anything else is diffusion of responsibility. Under those commissions and under those boards there has been continual diffusion and separation and scattering, when what we want is concentration.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is precisely the object of the Senator's amendment—to except those commissions that are scattered here and there, and not to include them in this law at all.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Florida has just assured me that all these endless advisory commissions are to be carefully preserved.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I said distinctly the other way. I said that the purpose of the amendment was not to recognize them.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia allow me to say a word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the attention of my friend from Massachusetts to the fact that we have stricken out of the bill lines 4, 5, 6, and 7, on page 3. That ought to be considered in connection with the phrase that we have used there, "administrative commissions." We struck out those words—

> And to employ by Executive order any additional agency or agencies and to vest therein the performance of such functions as he may deem appropriate.

We did not want him to establish any outside agency, outside of any of the Government bureaus.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is a very wise provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the Senator about these advisory committees. For instance, the Council of National Defense is composed of six Cabinet officers. They are given the right under the law to designate an advisory commission, and they have so acted. Now, as I understand that very vague law, it authorized the advisory commission to constitute advisory committees, and they have constituted so many committees that I do not believe anyone in this country can count them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A few thousand.

Mr. McKELLAR. I imagine it is a very, very large number. I do not think anyone ever knew the exact number.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So many that nobody could ever locate them.

Mr. McKELLAR. The question that I want to ask the Senator is: Does this bill include all of these various committees appointed in this way? Does the Senator understand that the President will be given the right to furnish an office for each member of each committee, if he so desires?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; and not only that——

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not understand the bill in that way.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not only that, but he can transfer to them, if this word "administrative" is used, any function of any department he sees fit.

The Senator from Minnesota says that they added the word "administrative" to exclude these advisory commissions. Why, "administrative" is a much more comprehensive word than "executive." I have read from the Century Dictionary to show that the word "administrative" covers, in the broadest manner, all connected with the administration. That was why I read from the Century Dictionary. Anything connected with administration that is an agency is an administrative agency. All the advisory commissions are connected with the administration, and are administration agencies; and this word "administrative" will extend the right of transfer of functions practically without a limit.

Mr. President, I shall not at this time discuss the evil of permitting the Federal Reserve Board to be subject to the effect of this bill. I wish I could call the attention of the banks of this country to it and make them realize the threat held over the whole banking system of the United States by this bill. I wish I could make the banks from ocean to ocean understand that, with this bill as it is drawn, the powers of the Federal Reserve Board could be transferred to the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator whether he has any real basis for assuming that any such thing is contemplated, or whether he contends that that is one of the things that would be possible under the act?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then will not the Senator join me in excepting it from the bill, so that it will not be possible?

Mr. FLETCHER. Why, I do not think it is necessary for me to say that I am in favor of this bill on condition that you add to it a proviso to the effect that the President does not go crazy and commit an insane act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I do not want to go crazy and authorize him to do it. I decline to go crazy myself and embrace in a bill an authority to the President to do something which I think the President must go crazy before he uses. I am asked to do something which it seems to me requires that I should be worse than stupid—to vote to authorize the President to do something which would be so wicked, so helpful to the Germans, so hindering in our effort to win the war, that I could rely upon the President never doing it. Mr. Wilson may not always be President. This power is given to any President during the war. It may be some other President. No man has a guaranty even of life. Any President could do it. I will not vote to authorize any President to ruin the country. I will not, abandoning my constitutional responsibility as a legislator, vote to authorize him to tear to pieces one of the greatest securities to the financial system of my country. The Senator from Florida knows he ought not to use the power if we give it to him. Then, O Senators, help us to save from doubt so necessary a part of our Government!

The great Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the whip of the Democratic side—my side—who frequently speaks by suggestion, not with complete authority, but with suspicion of something else coming, advised us that the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Reserve Board ought to be consolidated. Upon the floor here he maintained that they should be consolidated, and he wanted this bill in order that they might be consolidated into some new board, to be termed the board of finance and transportation. Now, he did not say he spoke by authority; but we frequently hear——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator think he ought to make that suggestion?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What?

Mr. OVERMAN. That the President suggested that to him.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not say he suggested it to him.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is arguing the matter in that way.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all. I said he did not say he spoke by authority. That is what I said, and I do not think he spoke by authority.

Mr. OVERMAN. I heard the Senator say that something was gotten to him by suggestion. As I understood the Senator, he was suggesting that——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I said that the Senator from Illinois frequently brought matters before the country which seemed to come to him by suggestion. I said he disclaimed having spoken by authority. I understand that the Senator from North Carolina means that nothing of the sort would be done. Then let us cut it out of the bill, so that it can not be done. We may not have so wise a President as Mr. Wilson during the whole of the war. Any President could do it. Oh, Senators, let us help whip the Germans! Do not whip your own country.

Mr. OVERMAN. We will never whip the Germans by attacking the President indirectly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You force this discussion by insisting upon dangerous legislation. You will never whip the Germans by giving any President power that he ought not to have or transferring to some one authority to tear to pieces our institutions which ought not to be disturbed.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the trouble with the country now; it will not stand by the Commander in Chief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators should address the Chair.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would you have Senators abandon their convictions as legislators, supinely rest upon their backs, and turn over duties that belong to them to the Executive, to be exercised under the advice of men who are not as competent as Senators to act? We are asked to place upon the President duties that must be performed by others for him, duties it is humanly impossible for one man to perform. I will stand by the Commander in Chief, and I will help him, but I will help by being candid and by doing my duty as a Senator. I commend him for his splendid work in putting Mr. Schwab on the Shipping Board, but would I have been patriotic to commend everything that has taken place before on that board? Would that be the way to help whip the Germans?

We have our organization to build flying machines. Shall we have them built? Are you pleased that we have not one finished here flying in France to-day? Shall I commend the men who have mismanaged this part of our work? I stand by the administration and urge it to promptly put a competent man in charge of that work. If we had had five or ten thousand armed flying machines in France the Germans could not have made this drive. We appropriated $680,000,000 for the work. We ought to have had 10,000 of them to-day in France, armed and ready for service.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator charge that the President is responsible for that?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not charge the President with being responsible for it. I regret a competent man was not in charge to handle it. When months ago it was found machines were not being built somebody should have forced construction. Whose duty was it? The President has had more placed upon him than any human could perform. Others acted for him. Of course, in detail this was not his duty. Perhaps the Secretary of War should have known about it.

I would leave the President a free hand in all military matters. I wish your bill to give him that. I will go further. I hope he will name a competent Chief of Staff and keep him here to do his work. I hope the head of the Ordnance Bureau will be selected and kept here to do his work. During the past 12 months there has been change after change. You say we help the Germans by not standing by the Commander in Chief. Do you mean we help the Germans when we urge a better organization in the War Department? I can not say that I approve the failure to furnish flying machines for use in France. For me to say so would not help whip the Germans.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I think I should say at this point, in justice to the administration, that the men who were put in charge of the aviation program were men of the highest business experience in automobile production and were recommended as such to the President.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Allow me to say, further, that those gentlemen are well-known manufacturers. They were not selected from the President's party. Aside from that, the Senator surely does not say that the administration is to blame for not having 20,000 battle planes—fighting planes—in France, when this entire industry was absolutely new a year ago, when it takes time to organize to prepare to construct these machines, when changes and improvements have been made in the motor from time to time, and are being made yet?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And I think the failure to construct on tested models, while waiting these changes, was very unwise.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; improvements are suggested by the use of the machines, by the experience of those who are operating the machines over there, that it would be absolutely absurd to ignore; and it is an utter physical impossibility to have manufactured the engines, the motors, and these planes in order to have them in any such quantity anywhere in this country or in the world.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Florida speaks about our not being prepared to make them. American firms were turning out motors which have been used by England and France over the battle lines at the rate of 100 a week. They could have turned them out for us. They are flying now all over the French lines—American motors in English and French models. Why did we not go on and take those motors? Instead of taking those motors we wasted a whole year in trying to develop one of our own. We could have developed one of our own among the automobile manufacturers, if you please; but why did we not take those that were ready and use them?

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator tell me what motors of American manufacture are being used, and where?

Mr. LODGE. In England. I only know they are making them here in large numbers, and have been ever since the war began.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts is rather broad.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think there is any testimony justifying it.

Mr. THOMAS. At the time we declared war I do not think American manufacturers were manufacturing engines for fighting planes. They were manufacturing engines for training planes. I may say that I quite agree with the Senator that we should have used the best models at the English and French fronts in France, and should have manufactured them contemporaneously with the development of our own engines; but the manufacture of the Hispano Suiza engine, which is, I think, the engine used in the British fighting plane, has been carried on here by the Wright & Martin Co. in New Jersey, beginning, if I recall correctly, some time last December.

Mr. LODGE. But we have been making fighting planes here.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, unquestionably.

Mr. LODGE. And fighting planes on French and English models.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. And these planes have been successful abroad. Their motors have been perfectly successful.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. They could have made those motors for us. If we had only gone ahead and allowed them to make those motors for us, in the meantime our geniuses could have devoted themselves to perfecting a Liberty motor. What I find fault with is that they told the country that they were to have these motors, and that on the 1st of July a year after the war began we would have 20,000 motors. There is where the number came from; and they make the country think we have them already, when we have not one now.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. My purpose in interrupting the Senator was not to criticize the Senator's comment upon how we should have proceeded. I quite agree that we should have manufactured improved planes and improved engines contemporaneously with the development of our own engines.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely. That is my whole point.

Mr. THOMAS. To some degree, however, that was done, since Gen. Pershing placed orders abroad, and fortunately, through those orders, we have some flying machines.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; we have had them made abroad.

Mr. THOMAS. Subsequently, beginning, as I remember, in December, the plan suggested by the Senator was adopted. It was, however, after we had lost a number of months of precious time, for which to some extent we are paying the penalty.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to take the Senator from Georgia off the floor, but in this connection I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado, who is thoroughly informed on the subject——

Mr. THOMAS. Not thoroughly.

Mr. LODGE. Who is very well informed on the subject about the Bristol fighter, one of the best of these planes. We tried to make them, and did make one, I believe. Did we improve it before it was burned or was it an improved model?

Mr. THOMAS. The Bristol plane is a machine considered apart from the engine. It is the boat—the ship. I think efforts were made to improve the plan of the Bristol, but as to that I am not now absolutely certain. At any rate we began to manufacture them, and I think the first one was turned out something like three months ago, and a small number have been made.

Mr. LODGE. The report of the Committee on Military Affairs states that one Bristol fighter—if that is the name, it is a good name——

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; the machine sent to France to which the Senator refers is composed of a Liberty engine and a Bristol body.

Mr. LODGE. Is that the one that burned?

Mr. THOMAS. No; the one which burned was turned out in Buffalo. It made a successful flight, and immediately after the flight it was destroyed by fire.

Mr. LODGE. That is the one we improved?

Mr. THOMAS. I can not answer as to that, but I think it was a regulation standard Bristol body.

Mr. LODGE. Very well. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Georgia. I did not mean to take him off the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator from Georgia will allow me to refer back to the original statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts, he said we were manufacturing machines in this country and sending them to France and England, and they were actually being used over there when we should have been manufacturing them for ourselves. That statement is wholly inaccurate according to my information.

Mr. LODGE. We have been making planes—I may be mistaken about their having been fighting planes—we have been making motors, and they are being used abroad to-day. The French and English planes are the only ones we have, as the Senator knows.

Mr. FLETCHER. We are using planes made in France and England. We have shipped the material over there and I think we will make them there. I believe it would be wise for us to continue to ship the raw material to France and England, where they are prepared to manufacture these machines, and at the same time make them here. I think it would be wise to do both, to make them here and to ship the raw material over there. They requested us to do that.

Mr. LODGE. I think it would be wise to send the raw material there and let them manufacture them and then we would get some planes.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what we have been doing.

Mr. LODGE. We leave them to be manufactured here, but somehow or other—I blame nobody—we do not get fighting planes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, what I was seeking to do was to show that the transfer of power to the President does not necessarily mean that we have taken a step to help whip Germany. The President had power over the Shipping Board; the President had the power over the manufacture of airplanes; the President had power over the organization of the War Department. The mere transfer of power to the President does not necessarily mean that thereby you will help whip the Germans.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will yield, but after all this I will not yield any more because I should like to say a few words in closing.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will take only a few moments. The Senator paid a very high compliment, and I apprehend a very deserving compliment, to Mr. Schwab, who has been appointed head of the Shipping Board.

If later on the President in the exercise of the power conferred upon him by this bill should see fit to consolidate the airplane industry under Mr. Schwab, knowing Mr. Schwab's great capabilities, his wonderful experience as the head of the largest steel organization in the country, does not the Senator think that a distinct service would be performed by the consolidation of those two departments of the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not. I think Mr. Schwab has all of one man's job to build ships. I have no doubt a man practically of the same ability can be found and put in charge of the construction of flying machines, and I think that would be better, but as I would amend the bill the power would still be left in the President to make the consolidation suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts. Everything that pertains directly to the war or the construction of ships, the Navy Department, the War Department, all those functions, I think, must be left in the President, because he is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy.

What I have been trying to point out is that transferring additional powers to the President did not mean necessarily a better performance of the duties now vested in public servants nor does it necessarily mean a better organization than we now have.

I instanced the flying machines. I am asked by the Senator to approve everything the administration has done. I can not do it. I think we ought to have had flying machines in France before now. I think we ought to have had a Chief of Staff on the job, an able man, all the time since the war began, selected with a view to his capacity and fitness and kept here. I do not believe we get the best service by so many changes. I think we should have had an able head of the Quartermaster's Department selected at the beginning of the war and kept here. I think we should have had an able Chief of Ordnance selected 12 months ago and kept here. I do not believe that you strengthen your organization by changing and changing and changing.

If we are to whip the Germans and if we have made mistakes, the way to whip them is to be honest about it, admit the mistakes, and overcome them by correcting them. You can not strengthen yourselves by declining to admit that you have made mistakes. The strong way to do is if you made a mistake to frankly face it and correct it. What we are all bent upon doing is what the Senator from North Carolina wants to do, "Win the war." He has just started a little along the wrong road. We must whip the Germans, and we know that there is still plenty for the President to do in our strictly military establishment in the War Department, in the Shipping Board, in the construction of fighting planes, in thoroughly and permanently reorganizing our military bureaus in Washington, so that a man will be in the same place after he masters the work. That is a full share for one man to do, and I beg that we do not throw into the sea of uncertainty two such organizations as the Federal Reserve Board and the Interstate Commerce Commission, when they can not be helped by doing it, when they may be harmed by doing it, and when our banking system and our industries will be jarred by doing it. I beg that they be saved at least from this misguided effort to fight the Germans in an unwise way.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I know there are some Senators who think they can run this country better than the President has done, and not only Senators think so but others. The trouble is that they are not President. The people of the United States have elected Woodrow Wilson President. Congress has placed this matter in his hands as Commander in Chief. The Constitution has made him Commander in Chief. When you declared war you pledged the President to support him to the last limit, that you would give him all the resources of the country. I can not see that the Senator from Georgia is supporting him in making the speech that he has made here to-day and criticizing him for mistakes that any man might have made. The President has done his best. He has made errors. He has come to Congress and asked Congress to give him authority that he may correct errors. The trouble is that we have Senators from day to day fighting a bill when the President comes here and asks for authority to carry out the laws already enacted in the interest of the war alone, and to fight the war. You have got to trust him. He is the Commander in Chief, and if Congress is going to give him this authority——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Are we obliged to trust him with the Federal Reserve Board and the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; Senators do not trust him, but the people of the United States have implicit trust in Woodrow Wilson. You may get up on the floor and denounce him and denounce the mistakes of the administration, but it goes in deaf ears, because the people of this country know him, they know his patriotism, they know he is trying to do right, and when he asks this authority from Congress they know you ought to give it to him. They are standing behind him, and the Senate is going to stand behind him.

Now, Mr. President, I submit the following proposal for a unanimous-consent agreement:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that after the hour of 3 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Wednesday, April 24, 1918, no Senator will speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes upon the bill S. 3771, authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, etc., or more than once or longer than 20 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. LODGE. Before we undertake to get a quorum——

Mr. OVERMAN. It will not require a quorum.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not a proposed unanimous-consent agreement to vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it will not require a quorum. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to hear it read again. I misunderstood it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be again read.

The Secretary again read the proposed agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless the time for a vote is fixed in a unanimous-consent agreement it does not require the call for a quorum. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. I misunderstood it. I thought it was a unanimous-consent agreement to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

ARMY CHAPLAINS—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, there was laid before the Senate a short while ago a veto message of the President. The basis of his veto was a proviso added to Senate bill 2917, as follows:

Provided, That the maximum age limit of chaplains in the Army shall be 45 years.

I think the President very properly suggests in his veto message that that language is ambiguous and might mean that the chaplains would go out when they reached the age of 45 years. He suggests an amendment as follows:

That no person shall be appointed a chaplain in the Army who, on the date of appointment, is more than 45 years of age.

That was the intention of both branches of Congress, I am sure. I move that the bill and veto message be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to call up the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 141) amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations. It simply permits persons who have already taken the examination to be——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is so much confusion I can not hear what the Senator says. I wish he would repeat his statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. In 1909 a joint resolution was passed allowing civil-service examinations to be held here in the city of Washington——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Can not the joint resolution be read so that we may hear what it is?

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act of July 2, 1909 (36 Stats. L., 1), and any amendments thereto, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to permit the United States Civil Service Commission to excuse all applicants who may have successfully passed civil-service examinations for temporary positions since April 6, 1917, from taking such examinations again, and the said commission shall have the right to certify such applicants without further examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee if in reporting the joint resolution the amendments were reported as agreed to by the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are amendments of the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that the committee was polled and the amendment adopted that was suggested, and very properly suggested, by the Civil Service Commission itself; that is to say, that applicants for these positions who had already stood the examination should prove their citizenship and be apportioned to the several States. That, I think, is a very proper amendment, and I hope the Senate will agree to it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the one I had reference to in asking the question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Those are the facts about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 4, to strike out the word "any" before "amendments."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the joint resolution the following proviso:

Provided, That such applicants prove their citizenship and are apportioned as now provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 19, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 18, 1918.

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock noon by Mr. KITCHIN as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Infinite Spirit, our Heavenly Father, for that long line of patriots, statesmen, and soldiers, who by their daring and heroism made our Nation possible, a government of the people, by the people, for the people, and who have brought it through every crisis it has been called upon to meet.

We thank Thee for what they did, but more, for that deep and hidden principle within, which prompted them to high resolves and self-sacrifice, which while it lives insures the life and perpetuity of our Republic.

With profound sorrow and keen regret we are called upon to record the death of a veteran Member of this House, who, though modest, was ever firm in his convictions; strong, yet unobtrusive; a patriot who served his State and Nation with all the fervor of soul. Comfort his colleagues, friends, and those to whom he was near and dear, with the imperishable hope that he lives to a larger life in one of God's many mansions; through Him, who died that we might live. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President as notice of the action of the House.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF INCOME TAXES.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KITCHIN). The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House this morning to what I consider a very important and urgent matter in connection with the third liberty loan, now being subscribed by the people, and that is that some provision ought speedily to be made to provide for the payment of income and excess-profits taxes in installments rather than in a lump sum. I have received this morning the following telegram from the committee at Rockford, Ill.:

ROCKFORD, ILL., April 17, 1918.

Congressman CHARLES E. FULLER,
National Hotel, Washington:

Winnebago County third liberty loan committee are unanimous in belief that requirement of full payment of income taxes in June will seriously hamper the banks of this district in financing liberty loan purchases for their customers and work great hardship on individuals and corporations desiring to buy liberty bonds. If payment of taxes in installments is permitted it will greatly relieve this situation and contribute materially to success of the third liberty loan in this county and Middle West.

F. G. HOGLAND,
Chairman Winnebago County Third Liberty Loan Committee.

I also received this telegram from Belvidere, Ill.:

BELVIDERE, ILL., April 10, 1918.

Hon. C. E. FULLER,
Washington, D. C.:

Full payment income taxes in June is seriously hampering liberty loan particularly in securing corporation subscriptions. Greatly increased corporation subscriptions can be secured here if income-tax payment can be made in three installments.

BOONE COUNTY LIBERTY LOAN COMMITTEE.

Also this from the members of the committee in the seventh Federal reserve district:

CHICAGO, ILL., April 10, 1918.

Hon. CHAS. E. FULLER,
Representative, Washington:

Requirement of full payment of income taxes in June is seriously hampering the banks of this district in financing liberty-loan purchases for their customers and working great hardship on individuals and corporations desiring to buy liberty bonds. If payment of taxes in installments is permitted it will greatly relieve this situation and contribute materially to success of the third liberty loan in the great Middle West.

H. L Stuart director of campaign; Heman Gifford, Illinois director of sales; George H. Dunscomb, Indiana director of sales; Wm. L. Ross, Wisconsin director of sales; F. R. Fenton, Michigan director of sales; C. H. McNider, Iowa director of sales; Chas. W. Folds, Chicago and Cook County director of sales of the liberty-loan campaign committee, seventh Federal reserve district.

We want this liberty loan to succeed, Mr. Speaker, and to "go over the top," and I believe that one of the things necessary in order to help immensely, and which could be done without any great injury, would be to provide for the payment of these taxes in installments. I hope some such provision may be made, and made soon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to inform the House of Representatives that the Senate has recommitted to the committee of conference the report of the committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS HOUSE.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present an article which was published in the Boston Herald of yesterday—April 17, 1918—in regard to the completion of the tank "America."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire to ask unanimous consent to proceed?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes; so that this article can be read by the Clerk in my time, or I will read it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts what this newspaper editorial is about?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It is not an editorial. It is an article on the completion of the tank "America," which is to be used in the sale of liberty bonds on Friday and then sent abroad to crush out the Germans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I read:

[From the Boston Herald of Apr. 17, 1918.]

TANK "AMERICA" TAKES CRUISE—BOSTON WINS DISTINCTION OF COMPLETING FIRST UNITED STATES LAND MONITOR—FIGHTER WILL BE CHRISTENED TO-DAY

The United States's first big war tank, the "America," is ready for whatever part she may be called upon to play in the world war. Every rivet has been hammered home, her engines are in place, and she awaits only a starting signal to send her into action.

She is a triumph of American Army engineering ingenuity and every portion of her giant body was "made in America"; in fact, it was constructed in Cambridge under the direction of Army officers of the department of the northeast. To the country and to the world the "America" will be proclaimed a product of Boston, for Cambridge was but the workshop of the officers who are stationed at Boston, and to Boston will belong the glory of the achievement.

GEN. JOHNSTON SPONSOR.

The "America" was to be christened by Brig. Gen. John A. Johnston yesterday, and, though the event was unannounced generally, the news spread quickly through the Copley-Plaza Hotel, where Army and Navy officers congregated during the afternoon. Within a short time the news was on the street and Copley Square was soon thronged. The Coast Artillery Band and the provost guard reported for duty, and their activities added credence to the report that the tank was coming.

Gen. Johnston and his staff waited at department headquarters, and a ceremonial program was arranged for the christening, but word was received from Cambridge that the tank was working out, and her officers deemed it unwise to run her over to Boston until her engines were running smoothly.

The America was constructed in record-breaking time. Gen. Johnston drove her first rivet home January 25, and within three months every final touch was given to her hull, engines, mechanism, and armament and she was ready for her trial.

The tank weighs 45 tons and is of the size of those now in commission on the European battle fields. It is so much larger than the Brittania that the English tank could be stored inside of the America. The American Army engineers took full advantage of the experiences of English engineers and improved upon the British type in many ways, eliminating features and designs which were proved impracticable in the big war engines in Europe and adding many distinctive American engineering improvements, so that the America stands out as a peer of all war engines and a monument to American ability and ingenuity.

While the country has been busy speculating and estimating the speed with which war engines can be manufactured in different parts of the country where factories and materials are available, the engineers of the northeastern department have been turning out the first engine. At the Institute of Technology, which was turned over to the Government, the work has been under way.

Prof. E F. Miller designed the huge machine and Col. Francis R. Shunk, head of the engineering department, supervised its construction. Maj. Henry Adams had direct charge of the work, with Capt. Henry J. Snider as his assistant, while the actual construction of the tank was done by Capt. Albert S. Smith, Lieut. John A. Lunn, and Lieut. Leo H. Praver, and a corps of machinists.

Gen. Johnston will christen the tank to-day, probably at Commonwealth armory, and in a manner quite at variance with custom. There will be no breaking of a bottle of champagne, nor yet of lithia water, over her bow. Instead she will be christened with a gold cross, typifying her dedication to the cause of God and justice. Then she will be ready for participation in the great military parade Friday.

Every detail of the big machine was in working order yesterday. Her engines were span new and required working out, and it was in order that the tank should be in perfect, smooth-running order before she went on to the streets of Boston that these last tests were made at Cambridge yesterday and the exercises at Copley Square deferred.

MEN WANTED FOR CREWS.

Boston and New England have given to America the first big engine of war, even as the first units of the American Army and the first ships of the American Navy went out from New England into the world war. The "America" plans are now available for use in other factories where the Government is turning out tanks and engines, and the "America" is but premier of a great fleet.

The American "tank" service started a drive in Boston yesterday for recruits between 18 and 45. The tank corps is one of the newest and most attractive parts of Uncle Sam's fighting machine. It is one of the few open to men above draft age.

Lieut. T. W. Crosby, in charge of recruiting, announced the time for enlistments is limited. Recruits will be sent to Gettysburg, Pa., for preliminary training and will be certain of seeing active service in France soon. Promotions are rapid in this branch, and pay for noncommissioned officers is higher than the average Army pay. Men skilled in mechanical trades and general clerks, telephone operators, stenographers, chauffeurs, auto electricians, blacksmiths, topographers, cooks, machine designers, and machine-gun mechanics are among those specially desired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, another matter which, although not related to the tank question, it is of vital interest to the prosecution of the war. Last year we had great trouble over the fuel question. Factories were closed and thousands of operatives were thrown out of employment because of the inability to procure transportation and supply coal and other fuel for domestic and manufacturers' use. There was a great shortage of fuel both at home and abroad for the proper and efficient conduct of the war. We ought to guard against the disaster of 1917 by providing.

A WAR PROGRAM BASED ON OIL.

To-day the country is aroused as never before over the necessity for merchant ships, aeroplanes, submarines and submarine destroyers. I fear that the people of the United States do not realize as they ought to that all these programs—ships, submarines, destroyers, and aeroplanes—rest upon oil fuel, and that the United States is not producing, and can not within its own borders produce, the oil to sustain this program without another expensive shutdown in industry.

I am credibly informed that in Mexico alone there is an oil base that can immediately support the great program of our country for successfully conducting the war.

The oil fields of Mexico are threatened by German propaganda and contending military forces. I am informed that two years ago the United States had 162,000,000 barrels of oil in storage. This was reduced last year and the reduction continues. At the present rate of consumption without outside relief, our storage supplies will be exhausted next year when our new ships launch the United States as again a world power on the ocean.

REDUCED AMERICAN OIL PRODUCTION.

The great oil field of the United States is that of Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas, with 50,000 wells, producing about 450,000 barrels of oil per day, but I have been told there is the startling decrease of 82,000 barrels per day in production since last October.

I have been informed our next largest field is that of California, whose 7,800 wells, yielding more than three times per well the Oklahoma output, gives us nearly 90,000,000 barrels a year, a decrease of 10,000,000. Wyoming is a new field, with only 400 wells, averaging somewhat over 40 barrels per day. There is no reason to expect therefrom any relief production. The old Appalachian region, with its 99,000 wells, yields only 63,000 barrels per day. All the 200,000 oil wells in the United States are now producing at the rate of only 300,000,000 barrels per annum, and we shall shortly require 425,000,000 barrels per annum to sail our ships, submarines, and destroyers and produce the very high-grade oil necessary in our aeroplane program.

It is stated Great Britain is using tonnage needed in the war zone on long routes to bring oil from Java. Consumption in California has been somewhat relieved by transfer of the South American demand to the Mexican oil fields, because the distance for ships is so much shorter through the Panama Canal from South American ports to Tampico as compared with California ports.

OIL SHORTAGE GREATER THAN COAL.

Our coal famine, with all its disasters in life and property, was due to a shortage of less than 10 per cent. Yet there are possibilities of a 40 per cent shortage in the fuel-oil supplies unless relief is had from Mexico and production and transportation safeguarded.

We produced 600,000,000 tons of coal last year, an increase of 50,000,000, and of a hundred million over a few years before. But we were still short of requirements by 50,000,000 tons, or less than 10 per cent, and coal is in unlimited supply in the United States. It can be safely mined and safely transported, and supply is only a question of price and men.

But Mexico presents a very complicated situation. It is the greatest oil field in the world, is close to our doors, and has oil to burn and waste.

DANGEROUS WEALTH AT OUR DOORS.

All the oil field over which Russian and Turk, Germans and English, are now contending in European Asia can not compare in present or potential output with the oil fields on the Gulf of Mexico extending north and south 150 miles along the coast and 50 or 60 miles inland. A single oil well here, San Juan Casiano, of the Mexican Petroleum Co., has produced since 1910, 66,000,000 barrels, and its pressure is undiminished. Its flow of oil can not be restrained below 21,000 barrels a day without endangering the surrounding country. When further harnessed in, the earth begins to quake in rebellion. The Casiano well is surpassed by Cerro Azul, a few miles farther south, brought in two years ago.

The company owning these wells and many others is permitted production of only 55,000 barrels of oil per day, because the warring Governments have commandeered its steamers, built and building. This concern produced 18,000,000 barrels last year, only a part of which went into the United States. It has the pipe lines, pumping stations, storage facilities, and loading stations to increase its output to nearly 100,000 barrels a day, and it could again double that in a few months by increase of pipe-line facilities were there available shipping.

The English company—Lord Cowdray's—is the second producer of Mexico and is estimated to have made an output of 15,000,000 barrels last year, all of which went over the ocean, destined, it is understood, for the British Navy.

The total production in Mexico last year was only 55,000,000 barrels, or only 150,000 barrels a day. Three other American companies are building pipe lines, but their shipping problems are still unsolved.

I am informed that last year it was estimated a potential production from the then operating companies of 1,000,000 barrels per day, or an output equaling that of the United States if shipping facilities could be commanded. This was thought to be an extreme maximum estimate. Since that time the Mexican Government has published in detail an estimated potential production from drilled wells of 1,350,000 barrels per day.

THE GERMAN MENACE TO OUR OIL SUPPLY.

But these figures of potential production should not abate; they should rather emphasize our alarm over the United States oil situation.

The Germans knew before the war the potential production of this field. Their propaganda is so strong at Tampico that our Government has blacklisted and forbidden trade from this country with the German firms at Tampico. Before the war Germany was negotiating for a small section of this field, for which it would pay many millions. The destruction of this field, if it were possible, would cripple both the mercantile and naval marines of the world. Its possession or control by any maritime power might give command of the ocean.

There are oil fields from the Arctic Circle to South America and throughout Asia and the eastern islands, but there is no field so valuable for the world's commerce and defense as the Mexican oil field. It is the gem of Mexico's great wealth. It was pioneered and developed by American companies and American capital under charters from the Mexican Government that invited the development of natural resources that had been known for centuries only as a danger to man and beast.

Oil is rapidly superseding coal in both the naval and the mercantile ships of the world. The limit is only as to supply and distribution in bunkers at ports around the world.

ENGLAND MUST HAVE OIL AROUND THE WORLD.

When it was announced in the English Parliament that the expedition to the Persian Gulf was necessary to protect the Persian oil fields which had been acquired by the British Government, it was declared that bunker oil for ships of the future sailing the globe was as great a necessity as bunker coal for England's merchant marine.

I understand that only recently the English Government has bought the control of the Royal Dutch Petroleum Co.

Underneath all the war, all the tariff and commercial strife, and all ship contests in the world, is now the everlasting question of fuel; and the fuel of the future is oil. The coal-burning naval boat is no match for the oil-burning boat.

The future cost of a ton of oil need not be greater than a ton of coal, and it is the equal to 2 tons of coal when burned in place of coal. But burned in a Diesel or internal-combustion engine, 1 ton of oil is the equivalent of 6 tons of coal or 3 tons of oil in steam production.

This was the record before the war, but since that time there is reason to believe the Germans have made great progress in Diesel or internal-combustion engines for use in the submarines; and no man will be able to measure until after the war the future value of oil as compared with coal in internal-combustion engines. It may even be as 10 to 1.

The United States is putting two billions into mercantile ships, another billion into aeroplanes—$600,000,000 appropriated and $800,000,000 already spent, and altogether is putting a billion a month into the war. And success now and hereafter in war and peace must be based on fuel oil.

It has been privately stated that within five years after the close of this war there will not be a coal-burning ship on the ocean in international trade.

WHAT TITLES HOLD OUR OIL BASE IN MEXICO?

Yet, who owns the oil fields of Mexico? Do Americans or English, who bought them at high prices when they were regarded as worse than useless and took perfectly good private and Government title thereto? As fast as the change can be made the title of all these oil fields may pass to our enemies. Germany is the home of I. W. W. socialism, as this country well knows. German I. W. W. socialism has written a constitution for Mexico which forbids private or corporation title to all the mineral wealth of the country and permits whatever party is for the moment in power to confiscate mines of gold, silver, copper, or oil.

To-day the Government of Carranza claims right, in violation of all previous concessions, laws, Government and constitutional pledges, to tax without limit, or confiscate by appropriation, the oil wealth of the allies fighting for the world's democracy.

IS GERMANY WARRING UPON US FROM MEXICO?

Confiscated mineral properties in Mexico are resold to the Germans. The German propaganda was established at Tampico and the leading ports of Mexico through the Hamburg-American steamship organization, whose officers in these ports are declared to be German navy and military reservists.

Labor troubles and disorganization in the oil works and terminals at Tampico have been traced to the Germans. Indeed, Germany is still making war upon American shipping right at the American shipping base in Tampico, while for 40 miles south, along the pipe lines, water lines, railroad, and in the oil fields contending military forces are burning bridges, cutting lines, and interrupting the oil supply.

How long must we contemplate 110,000,000 people plunging into war at the rate of $1,000,000,000 a month and their real power base in neighboring hands in close touch with the enemy and without local or international protection?

It seems to me that we should, as a Nation, be awake to the possibility and necessity of augmenting our supply of fuel for future use. We should not allow an enemy nation to gain a foothold in the vast territory lying to the south of us, and thereby to become a menace to the Panama Canal, which we built for the purpose of connecting the waters of the two great oceans as an advantage to our world trade in time of peace and as a means of greater protection to our commerce in time of war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE TO ATTEND FUNERAL OF THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE JONES OF VIRGINIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints the following committee to attend the funeral of the late Representative JONES, of Virginia: Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. MONTAGUE, Mr. WATSON of Virginia, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Mr. GLASS, Mr. HARRISON of Virginia, Mr. CARLIN, Mr. SLEMP, Mr. FLOOD, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Mr. SLAYDEN, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. HELM, Mr. TOWNER, Mr. TALBOTT, Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, Mr. ESTOPINAL, and Resident Commissioners DE VEYRA, YANGCO, and DAVILA.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that on Monday morning next the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], after the reading and approval of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, may be allowed to address the House for 45 minutes on the subject of the use of gas and gas masks in warfare, the date being the third anniversary of the use of gas in warfare.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that on next Monday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of other matters on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] be granted leave to address the House for 45 minutes on the subject mentioned by the gentleman from Wyoming. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that I myself would be very glad, indeed, to hear the gentleman's remarks; but inasmuch as District day has been taken away on several occasions recently, and as Monday is the day set apart by the rules for the consideration of District matters, I shall be compelled to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STRONG for a week or 10 days, to attend to important business and to assist in the liberty loan campaign.

NATURALIZATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 3132, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate on that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 3132, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is that bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to naturalization.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama whether this bill includes the bill to validate certain certificates of naturalization?

Mr. BURNETT. It does.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It includes that bill?

Mr. BURNETT. It does. The amendment incorporated by the Senate embraces all those naturalization propositions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman proposes to bring all the naturalization bills together?

Mr. BURNETT. That is the proposition exactly. That has been done by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BURNETT, Mr. SABATH, Mr. RAKER, Mr. HAYES, and Mr. JOHNSON of Washington.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 44, and ask for a further conference.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a preferential motion and offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that just a minute?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will withhold it.

Mr. LEVER. I think we had as well carry out the agreement made yesterday afternoon, to yield a certain amount of time to certain gentlemen on either side of the House, and I yield an hour in favor of the Senate amendment to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LESHER], a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that there were to be four hours of general debate on the amendment and amendments to the amendment, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. LEVER. With the further agreement that I should yield one hour of my time to some member of the Committee on Agriculture in favor of the amendment, and I yield that hour to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LESHER].

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That will leave an hour to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and an hour to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LESHER].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, who is to have control of the time on this side?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that I will control an hour on this side against the Senate amendment and amendments thereto and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LESHER] will control an hour in favor of the Senate amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who controls the time on this side?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has not announced.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have had no requests. I am willing to yield to whoever desires it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like 10 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is there anyone on this side who desires to control an hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests that that arrangement be made privately with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. HAUGEN. There is no desire to deprive anybody of time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] will he yield one hour of his time to some one in opposition to the bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is the desire, of course. Under the arrangement made and under the rule that is what I would be expected to do, and it is what I shall do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This was the clear understanding yesterday, that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] would yield one half of his time to a gentleman in favor of the Senate amendment, for him to dispose of as he saw fit, and that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] should control the other half of the time, which was to be divided in the same way.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, when the agreement was entered into yesterday, my understanding was that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] would control time in opposition to these various amendments, and that we would control the time in favor of the amendments; but I understand that now another arrangement has been made, and that the gentleman from South Carolina is going to divide his time among those on his side, pro and con, and that I will be expected, of course, under the agreement to carry out the same arrangement here.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] made the statement on the floor yesterday that he would control one hour in opposition to the amendment. I am not questioning the action of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment? The Chair understood that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] was to control two of the four hours—that is, one-half of the time—but he announced to the House in answer to some question that he would give one hour of his time to gentlemen on that side who opposed his view, and that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] would control two hours, so it is a matter for gentlemen on that side to determine what arrangement they will make with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this a unanimous-consent proposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I shall have to object unless the gentleman from Iowa——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given yesterday.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was unanimous consent agreed to for the arrangement indicated by the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent was agreed to yesterday that there should be debate on amendment 44 and all amendments thereto for four hours, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and two hours by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]. Now, the gentleman from South Carolina in his generosity said that he would yield to some gentleman in the House who was opposed to his view one-half of his time.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House I will read what took place:

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this time to be controlled by both gentlemen who are in favor of the lower price of wheat, or is it to be controlled half by those who are in favor of $2.50 wheat?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska I propose to select some member of the Committee on Agriculture who is in favor of the Senate amendment and yield one-half of my time to him. I do not know what the gentleman on the other side will do.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand the gentleman is going to divide his time; I shall follow the same rule as the other side.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is no misunderstanding about that. I do not question that.

Mr. LEVER. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not understand the situation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If there was an agreement, of course I have no objection; but all the time seems to be controlled by gentlemen in favor of $2.50 wheat.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman from South Carolina has stated that the time should be divided equally. I stated yesterday and I state now that the time that I control shall be divided between the two views.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN moves to concur in Senate amendment No. 44 with an amendment as follows: Page 99, line 10, strike out all of the Senate amendment No. 44 and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That section 14 of the act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production and conserving of the supply and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel, approved August 10, 1917,' be amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 14. That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat and that it is essential that the producers of wheat, produced within the United States, shall have the benefits of the guaranty provided for in this section, he is authorized, from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit. The President shall thereupon fix such guaranteed price for each of the official grain standards for wheat as established under the United States grain standards act, approved August 11, 1916. The President shall from time to time establish and promulgate such regulations as he shall deem wise in connection with such guaranteed prices, and in particular governing conditions of delivery and payment, and differences in price for the several standard grades in the principal primary markets of the United States, adopting No. 1 northern spring or its equivalent at the principal interior primary markets as the basis. Thereupon, the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of wheat produced within the United States, that, upon compliance by him with the regulations prescribed, he shall receive for any wheat produced in reliance upon this guaranty within the period, not exceeding 18 months, prescribed in the notice, a price not less than the guaranteed price therefor as fixed pursuant to this section. In such regulations the President shall prescribe the terms and conditions upon which any such producer shall be entitled to the benefits of such guaranty. When the President finds that the importation into the United States of any wheat produced outside of the United States materially enhances or is likely materially to enhance the liabilities of the United States under guaranties or prices therefor made pursuant to this section, and ascertains what rate of duty, added to the then existing rate of duty on wheat and to the value of wheat at the time of importation, would be sufficient to bring the price thereof at which imported up to the price fixed therefor pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this section, he shall proclaim such facts, and thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon wheat when imported, in addition to the then existing rate of duty the rate of duty so ascertained; but in no case shall any such rate of duty be fixed at an amount which will effect a reduction of the rate of duty upon wheat under any then existing tariff law of the United States. For the purpose of making any guaranteed price effective under this section, or whenever he deems it essential in order to protect the Government of the United States against material enhancement of its liabilities arising out of any guaranty under this section, the President is authorized also, in his discretion, to purchase any wheat for which a guaranteed price shall be fixed under this section, and to hold, transport, or store it, or to sell, dispose of, and deliver the same to any citizen of the United States or to any Government engaged in war with any country with which the Government of the United States is or may be at war or to use the same as supplies for any department or agency of the Government of the United States. Any moneys received by the United States from or in connection with the sale or disposal of wheat under this section may, in the discretion of the President, be used as a revolving fund for further carrying out the purposes of this section. Any balance of such moneys not used as part of such revolving fund shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided further, That the guaranteed prices for the several standard grades of wheat for the crop of 1918 shall be based upon No. 2 northern spring, or its equivalent, at not less than $2.50 per bushel at the principal interior primary markets, and this guaranty of prices shall not be dependent upon the action of the President, but is hereby made absolute and shall be binding until May 1, 1919.'"

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. Is it proper at this time to offer an amendment by way of substitute, to concur in Senate amendment No. 44, with an amendment to take the place of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. While the point of order is pending, the Chair would think not.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that during the debate, according to the understanding had yesterday, gentlemen can send up their amendments and discuss them during the four hours of general debate; otherwise, under the rules, we would have no discussion specifically of any amendment.

Mr. COX. Then I desire to offer as a substitute the following for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer also an amendment to concur in Senate amendment 44, in addition to the first amendment that I offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first Morgan amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORGAN:

Mr. MORGAN moves to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] by striking out in the proviso thereof the words "two dollars and fifty cents" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two dollars and sixty-five cents."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from South Carolina on the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that all this proceeding is irregular. Either the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has the floor or the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has the floor, and in order to offer an amendment a gentleman must be recognized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood yesterday that it was the understanding of Members, as expressed by the gentleman from South Carolina, that we would have four hours of general debate upon the amendment and all amendments thereto, and that amendments could be offered at any time during those four hours and be considered as pending.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the gentleman offering the amendment must be first recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma to offer his amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But he must get time.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, how can the Chair recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma when the gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Iowa control the time? It is not in control of the Chair at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina, as the Chair understood, yesterday made it plain to the House, and it was so agreed, that Members could send up their amendments to the Clerk's desk and have all amendments pending, if desired, and that then the discussion would be upon those amendments.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair is in error about that. The statement I made was that amendments should be offered in the time yielded to the gentleman who offered the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That to be taken out of the time of general debate?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield now 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. When would be a proper time to offer the amendment?

Mr. GARNER. Whenever the gentleman gets the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. According to the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina, when the time is yielded to the gentleman from Indiana; and time will be yielded, according to the gentleman's statement.

Mr. COX. That would be the time to offer the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman would get the time from the gentleman from South Carolina or the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. At the close of yesterday's discussion it is in the RECORD that the gentleman from South Carolina stated in response to an inquiry from myself that the time should be divided equally between those who were opposed to the amendment and those who were in favor of it. I want to know whether any designation has been yet made of those gentlemen who are in favor of a higher price for wheat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina has agreed to yield one hour to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LESHER], a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Then, those who propose to offer amendments to raise the price shall get their time from the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to ask if, after the expiration of the four hours of general debate, an amendment can then be offered without debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would think so.

Mr. MORGAN. It seems to me that the suggestion made by the Speaker would be fairer; that is, to let all these amendments be submitted and then have them discussed during the four hours.

Mr. LEVER. I would have no objection to such an arrangement as that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Suppose the gentleman make that in the form of a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all amendments and substitutes and everything else touching this proposition may be sent up and read now and be considered pending.

Mr. LONGWORTH. For information?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; have them pending.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that any Member may have the privilege of sending up an amendment to the desk at this time or at any time during general debate and have it read for information. Is there objection?

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas objects. The Chair would inquire whether the gentleman from South Carolina desires to use his time now?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has yielded to the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan was yielded 10 minutes by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the amendment as read at the desk is long, but the points involved are few. Except as to the proviso at the very end of my amendment, it follows exactly and reenacts section 14 of the food-control act. The Senate amendment, as you know, would provide a guaranteed price for the 1918 crop of wheat of not less than $2.50 a bushel, based on grade No. 2 of northern spring wheat, and provides also that said price shall be paid to the producer of the wheat at the local railroad station or at the local elevator where delivered. My amendment approves the action of the Senate as to the price of $2.50, it approves the grade of No. 2 spring northern as the standard, but it does not approve the amendment of the Senate that would require the price to be paid at the railroad station or at the local elevator where the wheat may be delivered by the producer. My amendment would require the price to be paid, as the law now provides, at the "principal interior primary markets," of which there are 25.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. SINNOTT. Can the gentleman state what are the principal interior markets?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I learn by inquiry at the Department of Agriculture that the principal interior primary markets, as fixed by the President and promulgated by the Food Administration, partly for the purpose of carrying out this provision in the law, partly for some of the other activities of the administration, and in the administration of the grain-standards act, are 25 in number. They are New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Newport News, Charleston, Savannah, New Orleans, Galveston, Fort Worth, Oklahoma City, Wichita, Omaha, St. Louis, Kansas City, Chicago, Minneapolis, Duluth, Salt Lake City, Great Falls, Pocatello, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. [Applause.] I shall not discuss at length——

Mr. LITTLE. Did the gentleman include Kansas City?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I did. I shall not discuss at length the need, as I see the need, for increasing the price of wheat to $2.50. My time is very limited and I shall leave that phase of the subject to others, saying only at this time, as I have often expressed myself, that the increase ought to be made. As to the change of the law requiring the payment of price to be made on No. 2 instead of No. 1, I will say briefly that No. 1 is ideal wheat. It is the very top, and so high that very very few reach it. Very little wheat, comparatively speaking, reaches that grade. The real wheat, the high-grade wheat, generally produced is No. 2. There is no reason or justice in refusing to make No. 2 the standard by which the grain of the farmers of the country should be measured. If No. 1 should continue to be the standard, it means that at the very beginning of the transaction, almost invariably, 3 cents a bushel will be deducted from the price to be paid to the farmers for their wheat and 3 cents a bushel more will be deducted for every lower grade as we go down the scale, because, as I have said, a very large part of the wheat is No. 2, or a lower grade; very, very little is No. 1. As I stated, my amendment would provide also that the price to be paid is at the principal interior primary markets instead of at each and every railroad station and at every local elevator. I should like very much if a workable law could be passed to require the Government to pay this price wherever it would be most convenient and be most profitable to the farmer, but after a great deal of thought and after getting, I believe, a great deal of information from others who are much better posted than I am, I fear it is not a workable proposition to require the Government to buy wheat and pay this price wherever the farmer may happen to stop with his wagon; and besides, after learning the sentiment of the House, as I have been able, I am satisfied that the Senate amendment as to places of payment can not be adopted here, so I am offering and am asking the very best I think the House will give the farmers. My amendment would require the payment of this price, $2.50, at the principal interior primary markets, just as the law now requires the amount of $2.20 to be paid.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. MORGAN. I would like the gentleman to tell the House what difference there would be in the actual price which the farmer would receive under his amendment and the Senate amendment?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not know just what difference it would make but it would establish a different price in several thousand different places in this country and make necessary an arrangement about rates and freights and prices almost interminable and, I am told, practically impossible of even a reasonable solution. I abandon the Senate provision as to places of purchase and payment reluctantly and only because it seems necessary for me to do so. The law, if it be amended as I now propose, providing 25 places of purchase and payment, will be a great improvement over the present law and will I am sure be very advantageous to farmers who produce wheat.

Mr. MORGAN. Would not the gentleman's amendment make a change of about 15 cents in the price of a bushel of wheat?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. At some places more and at some places less, depending on the place of sale and delivery of wheat by a farmer and the distance to the nearest primary market.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. For a question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does not the gentleman think that the word "interior" should be stricken out, when it includes the seaboard also, and have it at the principal primary points? It will answer the same purpose and does away with a seeming discrepancy.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. My idea is to amend the present law and deviate from the present law just as little as possible; and I may say to the gentleman from Washington that the administration in fixing the principal interior primary markets has fixed a number of places that are on the seacoast, like New York, Baltimore, Newport News, Charleston, Savannah, Galveston, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Seattle on the Sound.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That was the reason I suggested the word "interior" to be stricken out, and it would answer the same purpose.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. "Interior" evidently does not mean the interior of our country, but I admit I do not know what meaning it has in this connection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then why not strike it out?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Now, I would like very much if we could incorporate in this law a requirement that this price should be paid at every one of these 25 places, but if we say "principal interior primary markets" it can reasonably be expected, I think, that all, or a large number of the 25 places, will be used and made available as markets at which our wheat farmers may deliver their wheat and receive their money. It is fair to assume that the word "interior" has a meaning and is properly a part of the term "principal interior primary markets" as it appears in the law and as it is used by the department. And I may say that if I were permitted to write the law as I should like and to enforce it as I should like I should even go further, and I should write the law and enforce it so that this price would be paid at each place in the country at which a licensed inspector under the grain standard act is located, because at each such place there is now a Government inspector to represent the Government interests. He is an expert in grading wheat and he has all the machinery and apparatus necessary for the process of grading. But so much work would be involved, so much difficulty in figuring out the differentials, and it would cause so much confusion to the Government, to farmers, and all concerned that it is doubtful if it would be wise at this time to extend these places beyond the 25 that I have named. And as I have said, there is the difficulty of getting amendments through at this time.

Now, one unfortunate, and, as I believe, improper, action of the Food Administration in dealing with this law is that it interprets the word "markets" now in the law as singular, whereas the law provides the prices to be paid "at the principal interior markets," and the administration has selected only one—Chicago. I think if this is called to their attention and if it is possible or reasonable for them to work it out differently, more of the markets will be selected and the price will be paid at more of the markets than at Chicago.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to know if your committee had any hearings on the question that if the price of wheat is increased, the minimum price from $2.20 to $2.50, what price would be made extra on a barrel of flour? Is there any evidence of that kind; and if not, what is the gentleman's idea about it?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The committee had no hearings at all on this amendment as it was adopted by the Senate nor was there discussion in the conference, because the chairman, Mr. LEVER, had promised the House to bring the amendment back for separate action.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. LESHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Cox moves to concur in Senate amendment 44 with the following amendment, to wit: In lines 7 and 8 strike out the following language: "local elevator or the local railway market" and insert in lieu thereof "principal interior primary markets"; and on line 22 strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one." Strike out all of lines 24 and 25 and insert in lieu thereof "principal interior primary markets."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask if that motion is offered as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN]?

Mr. COX. It is offered to perfect the text of Senate amendment 44. It is immaterial to me how it is voted upon. I stated from the floor a while ago that when I got the floor I would offer it as a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, but I am rather of the opinion that it ought to be offered as an amendment to perfect the text of Senate amendment 44.

Mr. LEVER. My recollection of the rule is that he could only offer this amendment at this time in the nature of a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. I am not sure that I am right about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is right about that under the rules of the House, unless the understanding is that the will of the House changes that. Did the Chair understand that it was the will of the House that a gentleman could offer an amendment at any time he could get the time?

Mr. LEVER. If that is the impression, then I want to reserve all my parliamentary rights. Let amendments be offered, but I do not think we will make any progress here if we have a dozen amendments concurring and a dozen substitutes concurring with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood from gentlemen a moment ago that gentlemen had the right to propose their amendments and have them read here in the time which they secured from the gentleman from South Carolina himself or from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LESHER].

Mr. LEVER And read only for information?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; for information. Then the gentleman reserves his rights when it comes up.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I can not vote for Senate amendment 44 as it now stands in the bill. I do not understand how anyone can vote for it in the language in which it reaches us.

Amendment 44 provides that the price of wheat shall be fixed at the local elevator or railway market. I do not know how many local elevators there are in the United States, nor do I know how many local railway markets there are, but suffice it to say that there are many, many thousands of them. It looks to me that the language in Senate amendment 44, if it should be adopted, would work a very serious handicap against its administration, because they would have to have different prices for wheat, in all human probability, within a radius of 10, 15, or 20 miles.

The amendment which I offered, or will offer at the proper time, strikes out that language and inserts "principal interior markets." The same language as carried in the bill of last August, and is the language carried in the President's order of February 23, fixing the price of this year's wheat crop, the Senate amendment 44 fixes the base as "No. 2 northern."

My amendment proposes to strike out "No. 2 northern" and insert "No. 1 northern spring wheat," which would make, as I am informed, a difference of about 4 cents a bushel to the average wheat growers of the United States. My amendment leaves the discretionary power in the hands of the President to fix the price of wheat not to exceed $2.50 a bushel.

Now, I recognize that it is a very serious matter to undertake to interfere very much with the discretion of the President in fixing the price of wheat, but I want to call the attention of the House to this fact, and especially to call the attention of the President and the people who will administer this law to this fundamental fact, that you can not compel a farmer to grow wheat—a thing impossible to do.

I undertake to say that probably 50 per cent of the land in this country on which you grow wheat will grow corn. Now, the farmer is a scientific man to-day, as much as any other fellow, and when he comes to the conclusion that he can make more money by growing corn or rye or barley or timothy, he is going to stop growing wheat and is going to raise these other commodities. That is human nature. You can not get away from it. I recognize that we must look after the millions of consumers of wheat in this country as well as the millions of consumers abroad. But I want to say to you, in all candor and sincerity, beware lest you wake up next winter or a year from next winter, when you would be not only willing but anxious to pay $2.50 a bushel for wheat. There is nothing to-day that I know of that stimulates production like price.

In my judgment something ought to be done to take care of the farmers, or at least to make them realize that they are being considered here in the way of just and equitable legislation. My amendment, if agreed to, would in all probability raise the price of wheat to the producer about 30 cents a bushel, depending upon the distance of his farm from the primary markets. It would raise the price of wheat in the principal primary markets, as fixed by the order of the President, about 30 cents a bushel. That would raise the price of flour to the people living in the cities and abroad about $1.20 and not more than $1.30 a barrel—a mere bagatelle. We know that the wheat crop is short to-day in the United States, and if you will give the farmer some inducement, like the small inducement which I have offered in my amendment, in my opinion, it will be enough to stimulate wheat production, and you will start every rusty plow to breaking wheat ground in every section of the country where they break ground for wheat in the early summer—June, July, or August. I am not troubling myself about the vote on any of these amendments at all. I am not the least embarrassed by voting on this measure one way or the other. We are told right and left by the administration that we must have bread, that we must have wheat, that all the entire war business is bottomed upon the production of wheat.

Now, I am afraid that if you let it go out to the country that the farmers are not being considered in this bill at all, that they have been shown no consideration in the way of the increased price of wheat, that instead of an increased production this year you will find it greatly decreased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX. May I have three minutes more?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before the gentleman uses his three minutes the Chair would like to call his attention to the fact that, as the Chair understands it, gentlemen were to offer their proposed amendments in their own time, and that those amendments were then to be considered as pending, to be voted on when the four hours are exhausted.

Mr. COX. Then I ask to have my amendment read and have it pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have to do it in his three minutes.

Mr. COX. I will do that, Mr. Speaker. Another thing ought to be taken into consideration here, that the cost of producing wheat is different now from what it was when the price of wheat was fixed last year. The farmer's fertilizer that he bought two years ago for $20 a ton is to-day costing him $45 a ton. The wheat drills that he bought a year ago for $50 are to-day costing him $85 and $90 apiece. The price of farm labor has actually gone up on the wheat farms in this country from $25 a month to $50 a month. Yes; it has gone up to $60 a month in many instances.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I can not do it. I have not the time. It has got to the point where they can scarcely get a man to work upon the farms in this country at all. It is going to be a question of getting wheat sowed and harvested, and unless you give the farmer some consideration along this line, by giving him some little increase, mark my words and keep them well in mind, instead of having an increased production of wheat this fall you are going to have a decreased production.

To win this war we must have soldiers, food, and cannon. We can get the soldiers with but little trouble. We can manufacture of cannon; but the growing of food to maintain the Army is quite a different proposition. I am of the opinion that the administration does not comprehend or realize the extreme shortage of labor on the farms. For the past 20 years or more there has been a mighty movement from the farm to the city. This is reflected by the abnormal growth and increase in city population, with a corresponding reduction in urban population.

Between 1900 and 1910 cities increased their population 34 per cent. During the same decade urban population increased but 11 per cent. Immediately following the outbreak of the European war hundreds of thousands of bright, active young men living in the country left the farms, went to the cities, sought work and labor in large munition factories and plants, where wages were abnormally high as compared to wages in the country. Already, with a depleted country population, the European war constantly draining the boys from the country, to-day there is a frightful, if not a dangerous, condition existing in the country as to farm labor.

Farmers are exerting their utmost to overcome this shortage by and through machinery, especially machinery that will do the work of three and four men.

We must not only raise food for our armies but must practically raise the food for the armies of England, France, and Italy. Practically the entire man power of these nations is either on the firing line, in the trenches, or in munition plants, leaving but the women and children to run and cultivate the farms. We must feed our own civilian population. They, too, must have bread. I am interested in having bread; as cheap bread as possible, but bread. I know of no way to get bread except by raising and growing wheat. I know of no way to raise and grow wheat except to induce the farmers to do it. I know of no way to induce the farmer to raise and grow wheat except give him a reasonable, fair profit upon his work and labor and investment he has in the enterprise. A small increase per bushel to the farmer will stimulate production as nothing else will. A small increase in price to the producer will be the means of growing more wheat than all the arguments and all the literature and all the appeals combined that you can make to the farmer. If the price of his wheat be increased a little, he will double his energy, work longer hours, crowd faster than he will if no inducement be held out for him in the way of increased price for wheat.

The war must be won at any cost and at all hazards, and as food will play as much importance in the winning of the war as will soldier boys in the trenches, I am afraid that we are going to make a serious if not a fatal mistake if we fail to recognize the wise, just, and never-failing law of compensation. Compensate the farmer for his extra work and labor and he will respond by increased acreage and increased wheat supply for next year.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COX: I move to concur in Senate amendment No. 44 with the following amendments, to wit: Page 100, in lines 7 and 8, strike out the following language: "Local elevator or the local railway market," and insert in lieu thereof "principal interior primary markets"; in line 22 strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one"; strike out all of lines 24 and 25 and insert in lieu thereof "principal interior primary markets."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. For the purpose of having the record correct, this amendment when it is voted upon will be considered as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, will it not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is understood that all points of order are reserved on these amendments, and when they come to be voted on questions of this kind can be raised.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, a little less than a year ago we had before this body the new question of fixing prices on the products of the farm. At that time I was thoroughly convinced that we were about to embark on a dangerous proposition. I undertook to point out to the House the difficulties, as I saw them, and I did my best to avoid entering on such a new and dangerous field. At that time representatives from the wheat belt of the Nation brought before the Committee on Agriculture a bill, and advocated its adoption, by which the Government would take over the matter of fixing prices on the products that they grew. I combated that idea with all the power that I had and tried to point out the difficulties in which they would find themselves. The prophecies that I then made to the farmers who appeared before that committee have been demonstrated to be facts at this very hour.

We began on a wrong career when Congress undertook to commit itself to the question of fixing prices on the products of the farm. Once fixed, they are fixed for a year; they are unyielding, they can not give; they rule, they control, and wherever it has been attempted to fix the prices of agricultural products in the experience of other nations they have found the same results as we have found in entering on that field. These results proved wholly unsatisfactory and the system had to be abandoned.

When the price was fixed at $2 a bushel on wheat it was thought to be a high price, but conditions change. The coarser grains ran up in value until at this hour they are worth more than the finer grain wheat, and yet you have an unyielding price statute. The error has been made, and the point I want to make in the five minutes that I have is that we ought to back down from the proposition of undertaking to fix the price of agricultural products by statutory enactment. We made a grave blunder, and that blunder has risen up to confront us now, and it will continue to rise up as the months and years go by. Patchwork legislation will not cure the blunder. Repeal of the price-fixing statute is the sole remedy.

Gentlemen, it does not take any more printer's ink to print $4 a bushel for wheat than it does to print $2 a bushel for wheat. Human nature is the same the world over, and whenever a man thinks that he is getting the worst of the price he is going to agitate, and he has a right to agitate. In my judgment, if Congress would abandon this price-fixing business as to agricultural products, the farmer would be satisfied to get into the boat with the other people of the land and take the price the law of supply and demand justified him in receiving and would do his full duty in this war emergency, and the world would be fed.

Now, it is a simple proposition that the House is asked to vote on at this time. It is a question whether $2.20 shall be the price this year or $2.50 shall be the price this year. That is all there is before us, and each man of his own conscience must decide how he is going to vote on the proposition. But you have not solved the question, whether you raise it to $2.50 or leave it at $2.20, because there is going to be dissatisfaction. The wheat men are held by an iron-bound statute, whereas the coarser grain is left to go to the world unrestricted; and if you raise the price of wheat to $2.50 per bushel, the coarser grains will immediately soar in price, as they are unrestricted by law, and the wheat grower's price would still be out of line.

My judgment is that the only remedy which can be pursued is to do away with the price-fixing proposition. It is called a guaranty, but that is a misnomer. You can not fool the farmers any longer about the minimum guaranty. I told you less than a year ago that there was no such thing as a minimum price guaranteed with a maximum that could go sky high. It is written in the law. How do you control it by Federal administration? Under the license system, where the administration holds an elevator to the figures fixed and takes away the license if they violate the regulation. [Applause.] Should any millman or elevator concern pay more than the price fixed the Food Administrator at once cancels the license and puts the offending individual out of business. This is the course that has been pursued and will continue to be pursued, and thus your guaranteed minimum price becomes the absolute and sole price for which a wheat producer may dispose of his products.

In this state of facts let us not hold out false hopes to the wheat farmer, but say to him candidly that whatever the price named in this bill, whether $2.20 or $2.50 per bushel, that will be the only price the farmer may ever hope to obtain while this legislation remains on our statutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] 10 minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I have two amendments at the desk, which I offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MORGAN moves that the House concur in the Senate amendment numbered 44.

Second amendment: Mr. MORGAN moves to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] by striking out in the proviso thereof the words "two dollars and a half" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two dollars and sixty-five."

Mr. MORGAN. It is well, at the outset, that we get in our minds the proposition before the House. Some weeks ago the House passed the regular Agricultural appropriation bill. It went to the Senate for action. The Senate placed on the bill some 44 amendments. A conference committee from each of the two Houses was appointed to consider the various amendments submitted by the Senate. The House conferees have reported back to the House an agreement upon all the amendments except Senate amendment numbered 44. This amendment relates to the price of wheat, and is an amendment to section 14 of the food-control act which was approved and became a law the 10th day of August, 1917. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], has moved to concur in the report of the House conferees and to further disagree with Senate amendment numbered 44. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] has moved that the House concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

In order to understand the force of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] it should be noted that Senate amendment numbered 44, sometimes called the "Gore amendment," amends section 14 of the food-control act in three important particulars: First, the guaranteed price for the 1918 wheat crop is changed from not less than $2 to not less than $2.50 a bushel; second, the grade of wheat is changed from No. 1 northern spring to No. 2 northern spring; and, third, the price fixed applies to the price paid to the farmer at the local market instead of the price paid at the principal interior primary markets. The only change made by the McLaughlin amendment to Senate amendment numbered 44 is that it fixes a price of $2.50 a bushel for wheat at the principal interior primary market instead of establishing that price for the wheat producer at the local market. In other words, under the McLaughlin amendment the farmer would not receive $2.50 a bushel for his wheat, because from this amount would have to be deducted the cost of transportation from the local market to the principal interior primary market to which the wheat would be transported.

Mr. Speaker, I have two amendments pending. The first is my motion to concur in the Senate amendment No. 44, known as the Gore amendment. I have also offered an amendment to the McLaughlin amendment which strikes out the figures $2.50 a bushel and inserts in lieu thereof the figures $2.65 a bushel. Under the parliamentary situation, when we have finished the debate the vote will be taken upon the McLaughlin amendment before the vote will be taken on my motion to concur in the Senate amendment No. 44. Under the Senate amendment No. 44, the price paid to the farmer at his local market would not be less than $2.50 a bushel for his wheat. The McLaughlin amendment, if adopted, would reduce this price, perhaps, 15 cents a bushel. My amendment would therefore amend the McLaughlin amendment by adding 15 cents a bushel and making the price $2.65. If my amendment to the McLaughlin amendment were adopted, the price the farmer would receive for his wheat would be substantially $2.50 a bushel, as is provided in the Senate amendment No. 44. If, therefore, the principal interior primary markets are to be substituted for the local markets, the price should be increased from $2.50 to $2.65, in order that the farmer may actually receive $2.50 a bushel for his wheat.

These amendments bring before the House the whole question involved in Government price fixing of wheat. It will be helpful if we shall fix in our minds a few brief facts or propositions. Among these, I wish to call attention to the following:

1. The food-control act did not by any specific language fix the price of wheat.

2. The food-control act did not by any specific language authorize the President, the Food Administrator, or any other Government official to fix the price of wheat.

3. The guaranteed minimum price of wheat established in section 14 of the food-control act did not apply to the wheat crop of 1917.

4. Section 14 of the food-control act provided that the producers of wheat in 1918 should receive not less than $2 per bushel therefor at the principal interior primary markets, based upon No. 1 northern spring or its equivalent.

5. The provisions of section 14 of the food-control act had two chief objects in view. These were as follows:

First. To stimulate the production of wheat; and Second. To protect the wheat producers against loss in case the war should unexpectedly close or something else should happen to bring the price of wheat down below the actual cost of production.

6. Section 5 of the food-control act gave the President the power to license the importation, manufacture, storage, mining, or distribution of necessaries, and necessaries included wheat.

7. Section 10 of the food-control act authorized the President to requisition foods, feeds, fuels, and other supplies necessary to the support of the Army and the maintenance of the Navy.

8. Finally, the food-control act authorized the President to purchase and sell for cash five articles, namely, wheat, flour, meal, beans, and potatoes.

Now, I have given careful thought to the question. My conclusion is that when the Government assumed a monopoly in the wheat business it should have adopted the price which had prevailed prior to the passage of the food-control act. The action of the Government was a war measure. But, in assuming the control of private property under the emergency of war, the Government respects the property rights of its citizens. Here, I think, was where the Food Administrator made the great mistake. Now, upon just what provision of the law the Food Administrator relies for the authority to fix the price of wheat for the 1917 crop I am not informed. Certainly the provisions of section 14 of the food-control act applied only to the 1918 crop. Certainly the law establishes no specific price. It simply declared the farmers should not receive less than $2 per bushel. It in no way and by no language limited the price to $2 per bushel.

The law plainly shows that Congress, while guaranteeing that the farmer should receive not less than $2 per bushel, intended that he would be entitled to receive any amount above this which the market price would offer. But whatever the law provided, the Food Administrator proceeded to fix the price of the 1917 wheat crop at $2.20 per bushel at the principal interior primary markets. Under this action of the Food Administration the farmers in my State received for the 1917 wheat from $1.75 to $1.90 per bushel for their wheat. This was from 75 cents to $1 less than the price they had been receiving for their wheat prior to the time the Government assumed a monopoly in the wheat market. The protest which the wheat farmers made does not indicate any lack of loyalty or patriotism, or any disposition to hinder or embarrass the Government in its prosecution of the war. The wheat farmers are as loyal and patriotic and as devoted to their country as any other class of citizens. They have done their part; they are now doing their part, and will continue to do their part until victory comes.

They are not asking Congress for special favors. They are not seeking to escape any burden which rightfully belongs to them. They are not trying to evade any duty, responsibility, or obligation of citizenship. Above all, they do not desire to embarrass the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy in the successful prosecution of the war. They are ready, willing, and anxious to do their part in the winning of the war. They come to Congress as intelligent, loyal, patriotic American citizens. They ask from the National Government nothing but fair treatment. They seek simple justice. They ask only for their rights, under the Constitution, under the laws of the United States. In the spirit of supreme devotion to the flag they submit their cause to the Congress of the United States. The wheat farmers believe they have a just cause of complaint. They have been singled out and segregated from all other kinds of farmers, and from practically all other classes of producers.

What are some of the undisputed facts which demonstrate the correctness of my assertions? During the month of July, 1917, just prior to the passage of the food-control act, wheat was selling around $3 per bushel at the chief wheat markets of the United States.

The farmers at the local markets were getting from $2.75 to $2.90 per bushel. These were the market prices upon a market controlled entirely by the law of supply and demand. The farmers were in no combination to control the price. They had no voice in making these prices. They were selling to the millers and grain dealers in the usual and customary way. When the food-control bill passed, August 10, 1917, the wheat producers had in their bins or in the fields about 500,000,000 bushels of wheat. At $3 per bushel this wheat was worth $1,500,000,000. This wheat was the property of the wheat farmers of the United States. It was property, just as much so as their houses and lands were property. It was property, as much so as were the goods of the merchant property. This wheat was property, as much so as bonds or stocks were property.

At the market prices then prevailing this property was worth one and a half billions of dollars. Here the Federal Government steps in. It assumes a monopoly in the wheat business. It took charge of all the machinery, instrumentalities, and agencies through which wheat could be purchased, sold, stored, manufactured, or distributed. The Government established a price for the 1917 wheat crop. The price fixed was $2.20 per bushel at the principal interior primary markets. Under this Government price the wheat farmers received from $1.75 to $1.90 per bushel for their 1917 wheat crop. The Government, in round numbers, reduced the price of wheat from 75 cents to $1 per bushel. In effect, the Government requisitioned the property of the wheat farmers by compelling them to sell their property at approximately two-thirds of its market value. By this process the wheat farmers lost from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 on the 1917 wheat crop.

IS WHEAT TOO HIGH?

It is asserted that wheat was too high; that the Government had to bring the price of wheat down in order to provide cheap bread for the nonfarming population. Cheap bread for the poor touches a responsive chord in the breast of every man. But let me remind you that the obligation to provide cheap bread for the poor is an obligation resting upon all alike. The wheat farmers alone should not have been taxed to provide cheap living for the needy masses in our great centers of population. You should not levy tribute upon a few million wheat farmers to meet an obligation resting upon the entire Nation. Why not call upon the corn farmers and the cotton farmers and the live-stock farmers to do their share? Why not call upon the merchants and bankers and manufacturers and the middlemen generally to do their part? Why not call upon the multimillionaires to do their part? This would have been more in harmony with the principles of fair play, right, and justice.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; for a question.

Mr. FARR. The gentleman speaks about the farmers of the United States. What percentage of the farmers of the United States grow wheat?

Mr. MORGAN. I can not state accurately. We will say 10 per cent; and there is the point. Why should you tax 10 per cent of the people for the benefit of 90 per cent of them? Why should you ask the few wheat farmers to sell their chief product under the market price for the benefit of all the population of the United States?

CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS.

The fifth amendment to the Constitution provides that:

> No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

Our forefathers placed these provisions in the Constitution to safeguard the rights of the individual citizen against the action of local, State, or National Governments. These provisions were placed in the Constitution to protect the individual from Congress or the Executive power. Private property can not be taken without due process of law. Neither the President nor Congress, under the plain provisions of the Constitution, can take private property for public use without just compensation. The Constitution is the supreme law of the land, and the National Congress and the Chief Executive of the Nation are subject to its provisions.

Life and liberty are, indeed, dearer and more sacred than property; still our forefathers linked the three together. So a man's property is protected by the same provisions in the Constitution that protect his life and liberty. There was no provision made for the farmers to test their rights in the courts of the land. They were given no opportunity to prove what was just compensation for their wheat. The Government proceeded to fix a price, and the wheat farmers had to accept that price.

WHAT IS JUST COMPENSATION?

What is just compensation for private property taken for public use? The answer to this question is not within the realm of doubt, dispute, or controversy. It has been universally held that just compensation means full compensation. It means that when private property is taken for public use, the owner must be placed in as good financial condition as he would have been had the property not been taken. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided over and over again that when private property is taken for public use, the compensation to the owner must be ascertained by determining what was the market value of the property at the time of the taking. Whatever the emergency may have been, I have reached the conclusion that the wheat producers of 1917 were entitled to receive for their property the value thereof according to the market price at the time the Government assumed control. When the Government assumed a monopoly of the wheat market it placed itself in a position where, in good conscience, it was bound to compensate the wheat producers of 1917 for the loss they sustained based upon the difference between the market price of wheat and the Government price established through the Food Administration.

COMPENSATION TO WHEAT PRODUCERS.

Having reached this conclusion, I have introduced a bill, H. R. 10788, appropriating $300,000,000 for losses sustained by the wheat producers of 1917. I believe that the Government is justly indebted to the wheat producers of 1917 for the difference between the market price of wheat prior to the enactment of the food-control act and the price which the farmers were required to accept under the Government monopoly.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman is familiar with the wheat proposition in Oklahoma. Will he state to me what he believes to be the average cost of production for a bushel of wheat in the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. MORGAN. That will depend upon many circumstances, but I can not take time now to go fully into the question of what it costs in Oklahoma or elsewhere to produce wheat.

Mr. SNYDER. I wish the gentleman would, because I think it is very important.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, it is not a question of what it costs to produce wheat. Certainly it is not now as profitable to produce wheat as it is to produce corn and cotton. The wheat farmers are not making the profits that are being made by merchants, manufacturers, and bankers.

Mr. SNYDER. It seems important to me.

Mr. MORGAN. The price of wheat, according to the law of supply and demand in the open market, was about $3 a bushel. The farmers had something like 500,000,000 bushels of wheat on hand. That wheat was worth something like $1,500,000,000, but the wheat farmers received only about $1,000,000,000 for it.

WHY NOT CONTROL PRICES OF OTHER PRODUCTS?

If the Government had controlled the prices of other farm products, the wheat farmers would not have had the same reason to complain, but the wheat farmers were singled out, and they alone suffered from the price-fixing policy of the Government. The Government should have regulated the prices of farm products other than wheat, such as corn, cotton, rye, oats, barley, and live stock, and, second, it should have controlled the prices of the things which the farmer would have to buy, such as farm implements of all kinds, fertilizers, clothing, and things generally which the wheat farmers buy, and including also the price of labor. In other words, it seems unjust to the wheat farmers to fix a price below the market price for his chief product when he must pay excessively high prices for the things which he must buy and for the things which enter into the cost of producing that wheat.

President Wilson, in his message to Congress delivered before the joint assembly December 4, 1917 (see House Document No. 468), fully recognized all for which the wheat farmers contend. He said:

> The law of supply and demand, I am sorry to say, has been replaced by the law of unrestrained selfishness. While we have eliminated profiteering in several branches of industry, it still runs impudently rampant in others. The farmers, for example, complain, with a great deal of justice, that, while the regulation of food prices restricts their income, no restraints are placed upon the prices of most of the things they must themselves purchase, and similar iniquities obtain on all sides.

The President speaks in behalf of farmers generally. His language, however, applies to the wheat farmers as it does to no others, because there has been no limit to the price of cotton, to the price of corn, oats, rye, barley, or live stock. It is not, therefore, the farmers generally that have so much right to complain but the wheat farmers in particular. Their product alone, through governmental interference, has been kept below the price which the law of supply had established. The burden of the price fixing has thus fallen upon the wheat farmers in a way that it has not upon any other class of our citizens.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has quoted the President in his message as to the discrimination practiced against the farmer. Has not the President sought to control that or eliminate that discrimination by fixing the price of wheat at $2.20?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not here to criticize or find fault with the President. I have given the President my loyal support. So far as he acted, I have no doubt he acted as he thought for the best. It is not in the spirit of faultfinding that I speak. But if a mistake has been made, the President will be willing to correct it. The President has no more loyal supporters than the wheat farmers.

PUBLIC POLICY DEMANDS HIGHER PRICE FOR WHEAT.

The price of wheat should be raised to at least $2.50 a bushel as a matter of sound public policy. This may be based upon two general propositions. These are as follows:

First. The price of wheat should be raised to at least $2.50 a bushel as a means to conserve the supply of wheat.

Second. The price of wheat should be raised to at least $2.50 a bushel as a means of stimulating the production of wheat.

What are some of the facts? Wheat to-day is the cheapest article of food on the market. It is cheaper than corn, cheaper than rye and oats and barley. Here is a proposition that is self-evident. You do not conserve the supply of an article by making it cheap. By making wheat cheap, cheaper than any of the substitutes for wheat, the Government has encouraged increased consumption of wheat. Consumers naturally buy more wheat when wheat is cheaper than corn and oats and rye and barley. As a result of the low price of wheat, farmers have been compelled to feed wheat to stock in place of corn and other feedstuff. The farmers have been severely criticized for this; but still the Government has at least been in part to blame, which has made it more profitable to feed wheat than it was to sell wheat at the Government price. The Government's policy has therefore not only not encouraged the conservation of wheat but has encouraged its consumption in an unusual and unnatural way.

In view of the extraordinary demand for wheat, and in view of the importance of wheat to enable ourselves and our allies to win the war, no one will dispute the fact that it should be the policy of our Government to stimulate the production of wheat to the very highest degree. It is well enough to conserve the supply, it is well enough to observe wheatless days, and wheatless weeks, and wheatless months, if necessary, when such a course will help us to win the war.

Every patriotic citizen is ready to help along this line, but if we can increase our production of wheat sufficiently there will be no need of stinting ourselves. Now, what is the most effective way to stimulate the production of wheat? Certainly you can not and will not stimulate the production of wheat when you fix the price of wheat so low that it is more profitable to the farmers to produce cotton and corn and oats and rye and barley than it is to produce wheat. So our Government price fixing of wheat has neither promoted the conservation of wheat or stimulated its production.

Mr. Speaker, in closing my remarks I wish again to assert that the wheat farmers and the people who reside in the wheat section of the United States are loyal, patriotic, self-sacrificing citizens. They have met fully every requirement made upon them. They have furnished their full quota of men for our Army and Navy, and these men will rank among the very best and bravest of our soldiers and sailors. They have subscribed their full share to the liberty loan bond issues. They have responded liberally to every call of the Red Cross and the Young Men's Christian Association and every other activity connected with the vigorous and successful prosecution of the war. They are ready to make any sacrifice that may be necessary to win this mighty war in which we are now participating. They are loyal to the President, the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy. They are loyal to the boys in the trenches and to all our soldiers and sailors wherever they may be fighting our battles. To these brave boys who are making the supreme sacrifice they desire to render every aid, assistance, and support within their power. So it is in the spirit of service, in the spirit of supreme devotion to the country and its flag that the wheat farmers are acting. Whatever action Congress may take, the wheat farmers and the people in the great wheat sections of the country will continue to remain American citizens of the highest type and character.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. My amendment is to amend the McLaughlin amendment. I think the vote should be taken on that first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct. The first vote is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I believe a point of order was made on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, that it was beyond the power of the House to increase the price.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That point was reserved. Does the gentleman make that point?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I make that point.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to be heard on that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. KREIDER. Let us have that amendment read again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. MORGAN moves to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] by striking out in the proviso thereof the figures "$2.50" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$2.65."

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair state that a vote "yea" means a vote to concur in the Senate amendment with this amendment, and that a vote "nay" is a vote not to concur with the amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment will answer "yea" as their names are called, and those opposed will answer "nay." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 180, answered "present" 3, not voting 120.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma to concur in Senate amendment No. 44.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORGAN) there were 98 ayes and 167 noes.

So the motion was lost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a further conference.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the House having voted to nonconcur, is not that tantamount to a disagreement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is right.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that a further conference be asked for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia; Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, Mr. HAUGEN, and Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, in the first instance I deny the statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] that the Government took from the farmer what he had without price. They paid him an enormous price for what they took. We have 10,000,000 more people living in cities in the United States than we have on the farms, and these men, women, and children earn their living in the industrial activities of the United States, and it is they who will be called upon to pay this additional cost of wheat in $18 a barrel flour. It will be an outrage to impose this new burden upon the industrial workers of America by fixing the price of wheat at $2.50 a bushel, and there ought to be too many men in this House who have sense enough and patriotism enough to prevent the enactment of any such iniquity. We ought to have some consideration for those who toil where there is no sunlight. The men who live on the farms can get their living no matter what the price of wheat is. The men who work in the shops can not. "Oh," but you say, "we are in war, and we are commandeering everything, and we must commandeer the labor and the sacrifice of these men who work in the factories, but while we are doing that we must pamper the farmer, and give him that to which he is not entitled." You say that it costs more money to raise wheat than it did before the war. The labor of one man will raise in the ordinary wheat territory 1,600 bushels of wheat. It takes about five months to raise a crop of wheat—all spring wheat crops for this year are in the ground. This increased price will not add one bushel to the wheat crop of 1918. What justification can there be for increasing the price of wheat if it will not increase the quantity? Those who favor this increased price say the farmer pays his men $10 a month more than he used to pay. Ten dollars a month for five months would be $50 additional for raising 1,600 bushels of wheat, while the increased price of wheat as proposed would be about 1,500 per cent over and above the increased cost of labor, a large interest rate on the outlay.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The argument in favor of the artificial increase of the price of wheat seems to me to be based upon the proposition that wheat will go up to that extent and all other cereals will remain at their present level. Does the gentleman believe that?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course not; the price of all other cereals will go up in keeping with the price of wheat. You give no opportunity whatever to the man who toils in the shop to increase his income, but you demand——

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I can not yield. But you demand from him every sacrifice that is possible for the Government to lay upon him. These men in the shops go to the war, they fight the battles for America, and they are entitled to an equal show, and they ought to have it, and we men who speak for them on the floor of this House are going to demand equal rights for them. The people who work in industrial establishments are entitled to equal justice; people in every line of endeavor are entitled to the same consideration—not more, not less. Many here have been in the habit of catering to the farmer to get the farmer's vote. The farmer does not need to be pampered; he is able to take care of himself; he is qualified and patriotic; he knows how to make a living, and he needs no help from you and me; he is better off than any of us. The farmer to-day is better off than any other citizen. Why load this additional burden upon the remaining citizens of the country in order to add to the already great wealth which the farmer possesses as the result of present prices for farm materials? Oh, but, you say, we do not regulate the price of the things he has to buy. We regulate them as much as we regulate anything else. The men in the shops, other than those in zones where war materials are being made, are idle or only working part time. Why should we load them down with new burdens while we heap new favors upon a class already highly favored?

The war calls for sacrifice on the part of all. No one should be allowed to profiteer. All should join in the movement to win the war at any sacrifice. This House should not be instrumental in aiding any element of our citizenship to increase their own wealth at the expense of others. I hope the proposal to fix the price of wheat at $2.50 per bushel will fail.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY].

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to represent quite a large agricultural community, as well as a manufacturing community. I am opposed to increasing the price of wheat at this time. I am also opposed to price fixing. I believe that a large number of working people are entitled to some consideration in this proposition. I tried a few moments ago to get from the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] his understanding of what it costs to produce a bushel of wheat in the State of Oklahoma. I have been told by good authority that it would not cost to exceed $1 per bushel to raise wheat out in Oklahoma. If that is a fact, while we want the wheat farmer to make a proper profit, he is certainly getting a greater per cent of increased profits since the war started than any class of men on earth, except, possibly, the United States Steel Trust. Well, we are glad he is getting this profit; but when he does that, he is putting an additional burden upon farmers in other sections of the country.

In my section we are largely a dairy country and an increase in the price of wheat makes an increase in the price of the by-product known as bran, which increases the price of milk. Milk has gone up in the markets of the State of New York and throughout the country more than double in the past year, so that I understand to-day in the city of New York the price of milk is from 12 to 15 cents, and many of the babies of the country are going without the required amount of milk. Now we must cover in this question the whole country, and while I believe the farmers of the West are just as patriotic as they are in any other part of the country, it seems to me that if they are getting a fair profit for their product they ought to be just as patriotic at $2.25 as they would be at $2.50 for their wheat. And it is my further belief that since we have started in the price-fixing business if we act now on the demands of the farmers and raise the price that it will be only a short time before they will be back for another raise, and we might as well stop first as last. I just want to call attention in the little time which is left me to this order of the Food Controller making it necessary for people to buy an equal number of pounds of substitutes for wheat. When I was home a few days ago a lady constituent of mine called my attention to a grocery bill which she had just received. She had purchased a 24½-pound sack of flour. In order to get that sack of flour she had to buy $5.40 worth of substitutes, including $1.65 for the flour. Now, it seems to me that is a very great injustice and some notice ought to be taken of it. It is all right enough, perhaps, to have to buy those substitutes, but the grocerymen of the country should be provided with substitutes so that a person having to purchase flour could make a selection of substitutes. Well, that is impossible to do. But this lady had to buy a certain amount of puffed wheat, a certain amount of puffed corn, so many pounds of rice, so many pounds of corn meal, because she could not get the things she wanted to buy.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE rose.

Mr. SNYDER. I can not yield; I have but five minutes. Now I want to suggest that the administration should take the bull by the horns on this proposition and ration the country on wheat. Let each individual have whatever amount of wheat can be spared to him; then he ought to be permitted to buy the balance of the foodstuffs he likes for his upkeep. [Applause.]

I think this is a very important matter. Demands for higher wages are being made all over the United States, due to the additional cost of living, brought about by just such orders as this one that I have spoken of, and unless something is done to correct it I do not know where we are going, but we are on our way. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LESHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARNER). The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to agree with all my friend from Illinois said regarding the condition of labor in this country, and I think all that he did say with reference to the increase in the price of wheat being a burden on labor is absolutely true, but I do not agree with all he said with reference to the increased price of wheat, because he did not go far enough and admit the advance in the price of the things that enter into the production of wheat, the prices of which have not been fixed, and by reason of that fact it has naturally caused the producers of wheat to be at a greater expense in its production than would have been otherwise.

I am compelled to vote for this increase in the price of wheat, not because I feel that it is the proper method to solve the troublesome question of profiteering; nor am I voting for it because the wheat producers throughout my section of the country as a whole are demanding it; nor because I feel that it is just and right to all the people of the Nation and our allies, and our brave defenders at the front, who are making the real sacrifice.

Then, why am I voting for it? For one reason, and that alone; because the price of other grains and commodities has not also been fixed. I have grave doubts that increasing the price of wheat will by any means relieve the situation; I know it will not stop profiteering. In my judgment, prices of substitutes and nonessentials will increase in the same ratio as the advancement of the price of wheat.

I introduced House joint resolution 268 on the 22d day of March for no other purpose than to make it possible to equalize the burdens of this war as far as possible on all alike, producers as well as consumers of the necessaries to maintain the civil population of this country as well as that of our allies, and also our Army. I want to say at the beginning that I introduced this proposed amendment to the present law in absolute good faith. I never was more sincere in my life. I can not help but feel that something of this nature must be done, and that before long.

The President said in his address to Congress on December 5, 1917:

> The farmer, for example, complains, with a great deal of justice, that while regulation of food products restricts their incomes, no restraints are placed upon the prices of most of the things they themselves must purchase, and similar iniquities obtain on all sides.

I have heard considerable about the question of the loyalty of the farmer; that is to say, his lack of enthusiasm over this war. It may be, sir, that he has grumbled somewhat at the regulation of the price of wheat fixed by the Food Commission. I have reference to the wheat producer. But, notwithstanding this fact, he is just as patriotic as any American citizen, and is just as ready to make his sacrifice as any other American citizen; but he does feel, and rightfully so, that he should not as a wheat producer be the only producer of the necessaries called upon by the Government to make a sacrifice and others permitted to go on and on profiteering, not alone at his expense but at the expense of the great consuming class of which he is a large part.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the average price of wheat for 10 years prior to the outbreak of the European war was 92.6 cents in the United States. The price now is $2.20. Does the gentleman think that is very much of a sacrifice that the wheat grower has been called upon to make, to produce wheat at $2.20 a bushel as compared with the average price of 92.6 before the war?

Mr. AYRES. Yes, sir; I do, when you take into consideration the price of other products, including your corn, that is raised in Iowa. Is it not a fact that the average price of corn for 10 years prior to the war was very small, as compared with what it is now?

Mr. GOOD. Last year we had an almost complete failure of the corn crop—in some places 80 per cent moisture. In the gentleman's State the man who rents the farm is paying the same rent now that he did before the war, and he is the man who is buying the twine and employing the labor.

Mr. AYRES. Why not fix the price of twine? Would the gentleman be willing to fix the price of corn raised in his State?

Mr. GOOD. I am in favor of fixing the prices of all commodities.

Mr. AYRES. So am I. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. I am opposed to fixing the price of steel products and commodities of that kind, but I do not see how the gentleman from Kansas can favor profiteering in wheat.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. While prices of wheat have advanced 90 per cent, the price of the things that the wheat grower has to buy have advanced more than 90 per cent. Is it not a further fact that last year the average farmer of both the gentleman's State and my State lost money on his wheat crop?

Mr. AYRES. Yes. There is no doubt about it.

The farmer has patiently waited since early last fall for others to feel the heavy hand of authority already provided for in the bill of August 10, which I am seeking to amend, and which provides ample power and authority to regulate and control other necessities in the line of food and feeds. He, as a wheat producer, has not only patiently waited, but has patriotically waited for this equalization of the burdens, and has seen others grow rich by profiteering on the product of his labor, instead of the great consuming class reaping the benefits of his sacrifice. He has had to buy the very product of his own wheat, to feed his family, at but a small reduction in price, compared with what the price of wheat was reduced. He has purchased the by-products of that wheat to feed his stock, at an abnormal price, comparatively speaking, because it was not regulated, but permitted to soar high, endeavoring to catch up with other food and feedstuffs which are not regulated.

This, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, is like irritating an old sore and expecting no complaint. I want to say there has been but little complaint from the wheat producer of this country—I will say in my section of the country—about the price of wheat being fixed. Although they did not relish the idea of having their profits reduced over one-fourth, yet they have complained and are complaining about being singled out while all others go to the limit!

They say, and justly so, regulate the commodities we have to purchase which enter into the production of our wheat, so all can be treated on an equality, and we will be satisfied. Is there anything unreasonable about that? He has been promised this, and, I repeat, he has been patiently waiting, and as one of the representatives of a wheat-producing country, I feel it my duty, as best I can in justice to his claim, to insist on this equalization. I am for the power by this act of August 10 conferred and for further power and regulations, and insist that it be used or else abandon the whole proposition of regulating prices.

Nothing short of one or the other of these propositions will satisfy the great producing wheat industries of this Nation, and the Food Administration, whoever or whatever it may be, had just as well realize this, and the sooner the better. I am not an alarmist, or, at least, I do not want to be, but feel it my duty to call attention as best I can to conditions as they exist under the present law and its execution.

One of the strong arguments in favor of the price fixing of wheat was the fluctuation in this commodity on the boards of trade in the Nation. When the price was fixed this, of necessity, was stopped, but now, strange to relate, the speculator who had been dabbling in wheat as well as the speculator who had been speculating in corn turned his attention to corn and oats, and there have been times on the boards of trade that there has been a fluctuation in the price of corn of 10 cents on a single day. And it is a lamentable fact to-day, with the demand for corn as food and the absolute necessities of our people who, by patriotically denying themselves the essential wheat not only as prescribed by law but as a patriotic duty as well, that the great supplies of corn are not in the hands of the producer but in the hands of the speculator, and the same will apply as for that matter to other cereals.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I asked the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] a few moments ago if he could tell us about what the average cost of producing a bushel of wheat was in the State of Oklahoma. Can the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES] answer that question?

Mr. AYRES. I could not give the exact figures, and I would not want to undertake it unless I could. The gentleman from Oklahoma might be able to give that information.

Mr. SNYDER. I have been told by some men who produce wheat in Oklahoma that it can be produced at about $1 per bushel.

Mr. AYRES. I do not think so, considering the price of everything that enters into the production of wheat.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman has referred several times to the cost of producing wheat in Oklahoma. I have seen several statements by persons who have studied the subject very thoroughly, and they claim that it will cost absolutely more than $2 per bushel to produce wheat in Oklahoma on the average because of the fact that about every other year you produce nothing.

Mr. AYRES. That is as far as I can yield. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen, whether it be patriotic or not to make the statement I am now making, I will leave it to others to judge. I want to say it is too much, altogether too much, of a strain to put upon the loyalty and patriotism of the farmer, or, rather, the wheat producer of this country, for the Government to arbitrarily lay the strong hand upon this industry, single it out, and permit other industries to go the limit—yes; beyond the limits of profiteering. I have received a number of letters from wheat growers of my district which show the patriotic, unselfish spirit of these men. I might cite many and also many sets of resolutions to show this fact, but I will only incorporate one in my remarks, which was received a few days ago, which reads as follows:

CALDWELL, KANS., March 25, 1918.

W. A. AYRES, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Speaking as a farmer, who farms with a plow and not with theory (I have 250 acres of wheat), I would suggest that you use all of your energies to push through your bill for price fixing on the commodities named therein.

As a farmer, I care not a "red" for the amendment tacked onto the Agriculture appropriation bill by Senator GORE and others unless it fixes some of the other prices.

I donated my 60 cents per bushel when the price was fixed at $2 on some 3,000 bushels of wheat, and felt good because I thought some poor "devil" who was fighting to keep the wolf from the door would get the benefit of it.

The sacrifice was vain. Somewhere between me and the consumer it (the 60 cents) was lost.

Strength to your arm.

F. M. SNOWDEN, American.

Except for the purpose of being patriotic and desirous of doing his bit in the winning of the war, it is not an inducement for him to raise wheat, when its purchasing power is being diminished by reason of the fact that the prices of all other commodities which he has to purchase are permitted to increase by leaps and bounds. The wheat grower should not be penalized, because, as it has been said, his commodity is the most essential of all for winning the war. The very fact it is the most essential is all the more reason why everything should be done to encourage and not to discourage the production of it.

THE PRESENT LAW AND ITS EXECUTION.

The present law and its execution certainly tends to discourage, and, I fear in many localities where winter wheat will not be a full crop or stand by reason of the cold, dry winter, will be destroyed entirely by the raiser, and crops of some other kind planted instead, such as corn and other cereals, which are not limited in price, but are allowed to go the limit, the same as most all other necessities, such as cotton, wool, leather, and wearing apparel of all kind.

Under the present law and its administration I have not heard of any institution preparing foodstuffs going into the hands of a receiver. I noticed a few days ago that Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co. showed a surplus equal to $58.91 a share on the 2,000,000 of second preferred stock as against $27.98 a year ago. And why not? When wheat was $1 a bushel, crackers retailed at 5 cents per pound; when wheat was or is selling at $2 per bushel, crackers were retailing at 20 cents per pound. You can see while the increase in wheat has been 100 per cent, the increase in crackers has been 400 per cent, and this is only one of the many, many other illustrations I might give.

Let me say further, I have not heard of any milling institutions going broke by reason of the agreement made between the millers and the Food Administration. I am not familiar enough with the milling business to know whether the millers are making the profits as claimed or not. I have many reports from what I consider reliable source, which convince me that they have not suffered at all. I could produce some very interesting figures under the arrangements made by the Food Administration and the millers throughout the country, showing the immense profits made by the millers, but I do not care to take the time of the House, nor incumber the RECORD with columns of figures showing in detail just what it costs per barrel at the regulated or fixed price of wheat and at the same time show what the flour and the by-products are sold for; the best proof that the miller is fairly well taken care of is the fact that foodstuffs derived from wheat have not been reduced in proportion to that of wheat and the further fact that the mills over the country, to a large extent, are adding to their capacity, or building new mills and also seem to be able to declare reasonably fair dividends, in addition to paying immense salaries to presidents, vice presidents, and managers and other officers, all of which is denied by the millers. I would suggest that a thorough investigation be made and ascertain the facts, as no one should be wrongfully accused nor unfairly treated.

When the local Food Administration calls upon the people to be patriotic and save the wheat by eating substitutes for flour, these substitutes begin immediately to soar like an aeroplane until it is altogether out of the question for a consumer unless he has an income from an oil well or a mine, or a large stockholder in some of the profiteering establishments of this country which have not been regulated, to buy such a luxury as corn meal and some of the other substitutes. It might be that they could be regulated so as to be in reach of a man who has a limited income. It has not been done, notwithstanding the fact it seems to me the same power and authority exists to do so as to regulate wheat and flour. If it does not exist, then it is the duty of Congress to give that power and authority, and that is what I am attempting to do in the proposed amendment.

I received a letter from a railroad employee the other day, in which he said:

Before the war I received $55 per month. I could then buy a sack of flour for $1.15 to $1.25 and meat from 6 to 20 cents per pound, and I am now receiving $10 more per month, making $65 per month. I am paying $2.70 per sack for flour, 20 to 60 cents per pound for meat, and not only this, but the Food Administration says when you buy 50 pounds of flour you must also buy 50 pounds of substitutes for flour, which, at the present prices, unregulated, costs about $5—that is, I have to buy $7.70 worth of foodstuffs.

I received a letter from another railroader in another part of my district, which reads:

I want to submit to you some figures showing what it costs to buy a sack of flour:

48 pounds of flour	$2.70
2 packages of oat meal, weighting 3 pounds 6 ounces, at 30 cents a package	.60
1 package of cornstarch, 12 ounces	.10
1 sack of pancake flour, 4 pounds	.45
3 pounds of rice at 11 cents	.33
1 package of tapioca, 1 pound	.15
33 pounds of rice flour, at 10 cents per pound	3.30
	7.63

Two sacks of flour would have cost $5.40. Can you blame the people much for kicking when they have to pay such an awful price for substitutes that make inferior eatables?

I think the Food Commission has power to regulate these substitutes; they say they have not. Then, let us give the power so there can be no reason, so far as lack of authority is concerned, to deal with all classes of profiteers.

PRICES OF OTHER NECESSITIES.

I repeat, the wheat producer's main complaint is that other commodities have not been regulated. He does not understand that if you can fix the price of his product—and that is a good thing to do—why it is that the same authority can not say and does not say to the manufacturer of farm machinery, "You shall not be permitted to increase the price of your machinery to the farmer from 80 per cent to 125 per cent."

You gentlemen, no doubt, or at least most of you, have received letters and resolutions showing the astonishing increase in farm machinery. For instance, a gang plow weighing 700 pounds, which sold to the farmer for from $53 to $55 in 1916, is selling now for from $100 to $105. My information is that all farm implements are advanced just about as the item I have mentioned. Another item, for instance, a 7-foot wheat binder. In 1916 the retailer paid $120; now he pays $203, and no doubt it will be much higher this season. The 12-foot binder in 1915 cost the retailer $210. The same machine in 1918 costs $395, an increase of $185, or about 90 to 95 per cent. Take the small tractor plow, which is used very extensively by the wheat raisers of the Middle West and, I presume, elsewhere. I am informed that in 1915 the retailer bought this plow for $80, while to-day the manufacturers of this plow have put a price on it of $186, and the Lord only knows where it is going to. I might go on and mention many other implements, but do not think it necessary to take further time. Some experts will say farm machinery has not advanced any more than farm products. This is not a fact; but suppose it is, will such regulation make necessities any cheaper for the consumer? He should be taken into consideration, as well as the other fellow. So far as the consumer is concerned, there are two items in which he is especially interested—food and wearing apparel. Of course, it is not necessary to go into detail and discuss any further the doubling and trebling of prices in the ordinary foodstuffs, because the average housewife can tell all about it; but what about wearing apparel?

Just a few items, made from cotton—and let me say in all fairness to the cotton producer, the enormous increase in wearing apparel is not by any means due to the cotton grower, as I will presently endeavor to show. But, first, I want to call attention to a few items. Take, for instance, cotton blankets. In 1916 they cost the retailer here in Washington $1.20. He sold them for about $1.75; in 1917 he sold them for about $2.50. This year they cost him $3.10, and he sells them for about $4.50.

Sheetings, which sold at retail here in Washington in 1916 for about 50 cents per yard, now sell, by reason of the increase, at 90 cents per yard.

Unbleached muslin, which sold here by the retailer in 1916 at 6 cents per yard, to-day is being sold for about 22½ cents per yard.

Cotton dress goods, such as "Lancaster" and "Amoskeag," which sold here by the retailer in 1916 at 9 cents per yard, to-day sells for 25 cents per yard.

Bates seersucker ginghams, which sold here in 1916 by the retailer at 12½ cents per yard, to-day sells for about 25 cents to 27 cents per yard. In many of these items the price has more than doubled and trebled.

I could call attention and give figures on various kinds of cotton underwear, of all grades, which are astounding when you compare them with prices two years ago. The ordinary work shirt, which sold a year ago for 50 cents, now sells for $1 to $1.25. The common blue overall, or jumper, which sold for 90 cents in all stores, now sells for $2.25. It would be so ridiculous to say that the increase in blue overalls is caused by the increase in price of cotton and labor that they do not attempt it. It is just a plain case of filching, because they can and are allowed to do it; and, as for that matter, the same is true of practically every other item I have mentioned.

Just think of common old calico—the old stand-by of the poor woman—increasing from 5 cents per yard to 25 cents per yard. How long, gentlemen, do you suppose the patient American laborer is going to stand such an outrage? I want to say that he, like the wheat producer, is willing to do his patriotic duty and make all the sacrifices necessary to win the war for a world democracy, but he, like the wheat producer, is beginning to ask the question: "Is it necessary for us to be filched and deliberately robbed of a decent living to satisfy the greed of a lot of profiteers?" And let me say these profiteers are not confined to any particular class of individuals. They may be found in many places, and in many instances they include the retailer as well as the manufacturer, jobber, and others. There is just one place for any and all of them, it matters not what class they belong to, and that is the penitentiary. There is absolutely no justifiable reason for this abnormal increase. It is not on account of the scarcity of the raw material—cotton—nor, as for that matter, because of the abnormal increase in the price of cotton. I believe one of the best reasons that can be given is set forth in the following letter received from Hon. W. B. Yeary, assistant in the Bureau of Markets, Department of Agriculture, State of Texas. This ought to be very interesting to you Texas Members, and as for that matter all Members from the cotton section:

THE STATE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Austin, Tex., February 28, 1918.

Hon. W. A. AYRES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Attention to your bill fixing prices on necessities is called by the inclosed clipping from the San Antonio Express.

From what I get from this clipping, I agree with you. There are "higher-ups" than the farmer that need attention. Let me call your attention to a condition that exists with cotton. Take, for instance, 1912, when the average price of cotton to the farmer was 12 cents per pound. The price the spinner charged the retail merchant for 8-ounce duck was 9 cents per yard. You realize a yard of 8-ounce duck has half a pound of cotton in it, or 6 cents' worth. Now, taking 6 from 9 leaves 3, the amount the spinner required for making and selling a yard of duck. Now, let us grant that the spinner's expenses in making and selling a yard of duck has doubled, and I doubt it. The average price the farmers received for the 1917 crop will not be more than 27 cents. On this basis a yard of 8-ounce duck would have 13½ cents' worth of cotton in it; then, by adding double the cost of making a yard of duck before the war, or 6 cents, it would make a yard worth 19½ cents, but the spinner is charging the retail merchant 30 cents for it. If the spinner should have to pay 48 cents for a pound of cotton, he would have 24 cents' worth of cotton in each yard. This, added to 6, makes 30 cents, the price charged for a yard of 8-ounce duck.

In other words, the spinner has advanced the price of duck to where he can pay 48 cents per pound for cotton and double his expense and profits before the war. The price of cotton now is 32 cents. Basing the spinner's profits on the present price of cotton he is, besides doubling his expense and profits, getting 16 cents per pound, or $80 per bale on every bale of cotton consumed.

The American spinners will consume at least 7,500,000 bales of this crop, which is an excess profit of $600,000,000. The consumers, which include the Government, are paying it. The lighter grades of cotton cloth furnish a larger profit than duck.

The cotton farmer, like the wheat and corn farmer, has never received cost of production, basing his wages on the average wages of day labor of the country, including the depreciation of their farms, implements, etc.

I am inclosing you also a clipping from the Progressive Farmer on the cost of producing cotton for 1917, which is 34 cents or more. We were willing to take from 30 to 35 cents for it, because even at 30 cents we would be getting nearer cost than in former years, but we do not like to see this profiteering by the spinner. If we sell at 30 or 35 cents we want to see the consumer get the cloth at a corresponding price.

As to price fixing of cotton, corn, and wheat, my greatest fear is that we have men in charge of affairs of this kind in Washington who had rather take a New York gambler's advice about the cost of production than all the farmers in the country.

We are preparing for this by having thousands of farmers keep a record of the work and expense of making the 1918 crop. When those reports are in we are ready for price fixing, and will welcome it by the proper authorities rather than leaving the pricing to future gamblers, which I believe must be abolished

Yours, very truly,

W. B. YEARY,
Assistant in Bureau of Markets.

Gentlemen, I have figures relative to woolen wearing apparel that, to my mind, are more astounding than those relating to cotton wearing apparel. I call attention to only a few items, such as woolen dress goods—what is known as 42-inch serges, sold in 1915 and 1916 for about $1 per yard. To-day the same is selling from $2.20 to $2.30 per yard, and woolen underwear is out of sight as to prices, as well as otherwise. Woolen suitings of all kinds and grades have much more than doubled within the past year or so. I am told by one of the best tailors of the city of Washington that uniform goods—that is, Army and Marine uniforms—suddenly jumped $3.62 to $5 and $5.50 per yard; and, strange as it may seem, it did not make any difference, either, the fact we have a great many patriotic $1 a year woolen-goods men, active members of the Council of National Defense. It went up just the same, and in spite of all they could or did do. Many reasons are assigned for this, principally the old argument—scarcity of wool and increase in wages. It will be admitted there has been some increases in wages, but nothing, comparatively speaking, with the increase in prices of the commodities made from wool; as to the scarcity of raw material, I am not ready to admit that fact by any means.

Statistics show that the raw production of wool in the United States for the past three years is:

	Pounds.
1915	285,726,000
1916	288,490,000
1917	285,573,000

The imports of all grades of wool for the past three years has been as follows:

	1915	1916	1917
	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.
Class I, clothing	222,017,420	403,121,585	278,842,548
Class II, combing	30,356,257	22,437,438	25,218,049
Class III, carpet	65,709,752	109,268,999	67,772,671
Total	318,083,429	534,828,022	371,833,268

The exports of wool in the grease for the past three years has been as follows:

	1915	1916	1917
	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.
Unmanufactured	8,158,300	4,418,915	2,148,359

Consumption for the past three years of wool in the grease has been as follows:

	Pounds.
1915	578,391,195
1916	817,095,537
1917	653,427,544

But I do not care to go into detail concerning these matters; yet it might be interesting to know that at the close of the year, December 31, 1917, it was reported that the stocks of wool held by 582 manufacturers, in round numbers, was 575,133,470 pounds, of which it is estimated the city of Boston alone held about 107,133,847 pounds. There is no scarcity, nor has there been a scarcity, of the raw material, nor is there such an increase of exports nor a failure of imports nor an overconsumption of wool to cause any alarm or to cause the abnormal increase in price of woolen wearing apparel. It is another case of a lack of regulation, and I might say a lack of patriotism, on the part of a few or many, as the case may be, who have it within their power to filch and profiteer in the absolute necessities. I am informed by one of the great wool producers of this country that he can not get the woolen mills to make him a price on his wool, but he must submit his offer to them through a go-between, who, without doubt, makes the first grab; then comes the remainder of the grabbers, all the way down the line, until finally, among them, they grab all the poor devil of a consumer has when he purchases the finished article.

HIDES, LEATHER, AND SHOES.

What has been said with reference to clothing can also be said of shoes. Again the same old stereotyped argument is used as to "scarcity of leather and the increases in wages." It is rather a difficult matter to get any positive figures on the production of leather, and there is some reason for this when you take into consideration the close corporation that controls the hide, leather, and shoe business of this country. When a packer, who produces the pelt or hide, sells that hide at a nice profit to a tannery, owned by himself, and again sells the tanned hide, at a nice profit, to a leather jobbing concern, owned by himself, and again sells the finished leather, at a nice profit, to a manufacturer of shoes, which is also owned by himself, and in some instances sells the manufactured product at a nice profit, you can understand to some extent, at least, why the ridiculous and unheard-of advance in prices of shoes.

Nor are these all the reasons, by any means, that can be assigned for the increase and outrageous prices of shoes. I was told by a manufacturer of shoes a few days ago that women's high-topped fancy shoes, which retail from $10 to $16, and sometimes more, cost about $4.75 to $5.25 to manufacture. That is to say, this included, as I remember it, the manufacturers' profit. Now, it is needless to say that somewhere between the manufacturer of the shoes and the actual consumer or wearer of them—there are some wood piles which contain Ethiopians, and it is up to somebody to locate them, and I, for one, want that somebody to have the power, good and plenty, to locate and deal with them, whoever they may be, whether they are jobbers, wholesalers, or if it be my own brother in the retail business—the sooner they are given steady employment, with board and clothing furnished, the sooner the defenseless and helpless purchasing public will be benefited.

It may be interesting to know that the statistics show that last year, 1917, there were slaughtered in the United States 2,000,000 more hide-producing animals, such as cattle, sheep, and goats, than in 1916. Never in the history of this Nation has there been such a large stock of packers' hides on hand. A preliminary report by the Federal Trade Commission shows that the quantity of hides stored by the five large Chicago packers, namely, Swift & Co., Armour & Co., Morris & Co., Wilson & Co., and Cudahy Packing Co., increased 45 per cent during 1916 and the first half of 1917. These concerns are the principal hide producers in the United States, and Swift & Co. and Armour & Co. are among the principal leather manufacturers. This report also discloses the fact that—

The imports of hides have increased. The attached chart shows that the total imports of hides into the United States increased from 342,000,000 pounds in 1912 to 612,000,000 pounds in 1916, an increase of four-fifths. In 1917, even with the scarcity of tonnage, the imports were about 380,000,000 pounds, or an increase of 70 per cent over 1912.

These great increases in imports have been principally from Argentina, Brazil, and Uruguay, where the large Chicago packers are very prominent factors in the hide business.

In speaking of excessive profits, the report shows that—

Financial reports secured from all the tanning companies of the country are now being compiled. The reports of a number of larger companies show that net profits in 1916 were in several instances two, three, four, or even five times as large as in 1915, and the 1915 net profits in turn showed increases of from 30 per cent to more than 100 per cent over those of 1914.

One striking instance is a company whose net profits were reported as follows:

1914	$644,390.90
1915	945,051.37
1916	3,576,544.27

These are only a few facts that can be produced to convince any reasonable man, it seems to me, that some steps should be taken, some power given, to deal with such institutions, and if need be empower and authorize the Government to take them over and protect the general public.

SHOULD STIMULATE AND PROTECT PRODUCERS.

There are a great many interests to take into consideration in framing such legislation as contemplated by this bill or proposed amendment. There is no question but all should be done that can be done to encourage and stimulate the production of all necessities, and as far as possible to protect the producers of those necessities, especially during this emergency. The lack of this protection is being most forcibly demonstrated at this time by the live-stock interests throughout the country. Both cattle and hog raisers have lost money, and as a result there is going to be a meat famine within the next year unless something is done and soon to remedy the mistake made. The Food Administration no doubt knows by this time that it is impossible for a hog raiser to stay in business by producing $13.50 or, as for that matter, $15.50 hogs and feed them on $1.85 to $2 corn and other feed even as high.

Nor will it be a paying proposition, as was first thought, to produce pork on the ratio of 13¾ to 1 or even 15 to 1. That, of course, might have been all right had they also fixed the price of both sides of the ratio, but it was not done, and by not paying any attention to corn it has continued to climb until the pork producer has found it more profitable to sell his pigs and even brood sows and also sell his corn, if he has it; if he has not any, then it is also more profitable to sell his stock hogs rather than buy expensive feed. So the result at the present time is that there is a surplus of pork, but a fearful shortage later on confronting the Nation, which means a calamity. It is a simple proposition to fix a price or a ratio for meat production, but it is absolutely necessary also to fix the price of feed. Any 12-year-old farm boy can solve the simple mathematical problem that you can not feed $1.85 and $2 a bushel corn to hogs, sell them for 15½ cents per pound, and stay out of the bankrupt court very long! I was told a few days ago by one of the best hog raisers in my section of the State that he took 100 head of 90-pound shoats, weighed them, so there could be no mistake, put a hundred pounds on them, which cost him 22 cents because of the high-priced feed, and sold them for 16 cents. It is needless to say he is not now dealing very extensively in raising hogs. I have within the past few days received information in my part of the State which indicates a decrease this year of about 30 per cent to 33 per cent of hogs from last year.

Last fall a call was sent out to the cattle producers of the Nation for an increased beef supply, and all over the Middle West the cattleman went out and purchased feeders. True, he paid a high price for them, as they were fat on grass, and they were forced to do this on account of the competition of the packer, who wanted them for cold storage, where not a pound would be added to their weights. The feed lots were filled, and nearly 300 pounds per head was added to their weight before they were sent back to the market, the only process by which increased tonnage of beef could be secured. After feeding them all winter on the highest-priced corn, cottonseed meal, and bran the West has ever known, and after the feeder had braved the storms of winter and performed the labors incident to the avocation, they were taken back to the market and sold for 2 cents per pound less than when they were purchased last fall; and, strange as it may seem, at the same dates of sales meat was higher to the consumer than it was when they were purchased prior to their entry into the feed lots.

At a cattlemen's convention, representing the largest association of any organized in any State, held in my own city, Wichita, Kans., the last days of February, the fact was developed that hundreds of thousands of dollars had been lost by the feeders who tried to perform this patriotic duty. It was hard for them to understand why this condition should exist. In 15 minutes' time over $15,000 was raised in cash to send a committee to Washington to lay the matter before the Food Administration. The committee has made their visit and left with the department hundreds of statements from reliable men showing the facts as I have stated. Does anyone suppose for a moment when the real necessity for meat will again stare us in the face at the close of the summer, that these feeders will respond when called upon to repeat the operation, especially so when they know that it was the profiteer who stood between their product and the consumer and received the benefits of their supreme efforts as patriotic citizens?

In this city at the present time is a committee called together representing the producers' interests of the Nation. Among that number is one of the largest stockmen not only in the United States, but the world as well. He produces the figures to show that he has lost the last year $72,000 producing and feeding sheep and cattle. This does not allow a cent of interest on his investment, where he has millions of dollars invested.

Gentleman, these conditions are bringing about a spirit of unrest. The producers of meat and bread in the Nation look today on the business world. They see those who toil not amassing fortunes, while they plainly realize that if these conditions are to continue, it is the bankrupt court for them and the sweeping away of the accumulation of their toil which has taken years of hardship to amass. The story of the cattleman—in fact, the meat producer—is the same wherever he be located. The story of the consumer, who to-day is purchasing meat at a higher price than was ever known in the history of the Nation, is a parallel to the story of the producers. So you can see, gentlemen, unless something is done, and that immediately, to not only encourage and stimulate the meat industry but to protect it as well, what the result will be.

Let me say, the live-stock producer is not whooping it up for higher prices. He is patriotic, but like the wheat producer he also says.

Regulate! Regulate! That's all. Don't let one line of necessities, such as food or feed, be regulated by law and the heavy hand of authority, and the other by the law of supply and demand. Let the same law, whatever it may be—the same authority—govern all.

That is fair and equitable to all, and nothing else will be. There is no such thing as a law of supply and demand at this time. That exists only in normal times; during abnormal times like the present, when all necessities are controlled by profiteers, the supply as well as the demand is whatever they dictate. This was most forcibly illustrated a few days ago when the various statesmen tumbled over each other to introduce bills to raise the price of wheat. It had a bullish effect on the Chicago market, especially after the solons at the other end of the Capitol passed that amendment to the Agriculture appropriation bill. The Chicago market, on the 22d of March, was bullish as to other cereals by reason of this fact, so by raising the price of this necessity it means going around in a circle, as all other necessities will reach the same level, as indicated by a telegram I receved yesterday from another railroader, as follows:

WICHITA, KANS., March 20, 1918.

Hon. W. A. AYRES,
House of Representatives, Washington D. C.:

Congratulations on your amended bill. It is the only solution of the economic problems facing the laboring classes to which most of us belong. If steps of this kind are not taken, a calamity in the prosecution of war activities awaits our Nation that will be a disgrace.

We do not want this to happen, but some action will have to be taken to prevent it. It is one thing to introduce bills to please a certain class of your constituents and make yourself popular with that class as appearing as the special champion of their cause, and it is another thing to undertake to legislate for the interests of all. There is bound to be conflicting interests, but it is the duty of a Representative to look first to the interests of his Nation as a whole and the greatest good to the greatest number at this time when the most trying period of the Nation's history is at hand. It seems that no man is justified in taking into consideration just what is best for his particular congressional district or his political future, but what is the best for his Nation as a whole. I repeat, I am compelled to vote for a higher guaranty price for wheat, because other products and necessities are not regulated. But it is, I must say, most emphatically not the correct solution of the difficulty nor the proper method of dealing with the subject.

TWO CLASSES OF CITIZENS TO BE CONSIDERED.

In conclusion, as my time is limited, let me say there are just two classes of American citizens to be considered in whatever is done. The first is the actual producer, and the other is the actual consumer. To fix the price and regulate one or two necessaries, or not to regulate and fix prices at all; either plan is in the interest of but one class—the profiteers. And I want to say further, with all due respect to the gentlemen who are clamoring for legislation for higher prices, it gives a great deal of encouragement to that class which needs no consideration whatever—the profiteers.

Mr. Speaker, the profiteers are willing to do anything and everything, will make most any kind of concessions, rather than see legislation enacted to empower the President to regulate all necessities, and they to-day are calling upon the wheat producer—the only one so far to be regulated—to bring all power and influence to bear to prevent legislation of this character. They have succeeded in getting gubernatorial candidates, senatorial candidates, and congressional candidates to fall to and proclaim by speech and editorials as their brave champions and avowed advocates. I have in my district four counties, which I believe produce as much wheat as any other four counties of the same size in the United States, and I am satisfied my wheat producers would be content with the guaranty price already fixed for the 1918 crop, with the distinct understanding that all other commodities and necessities be also regulated. This is fair and equitable, just and patriotic, and I feel that my constituency is made of that kind of American citizens, and I intend to act accordingly. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OVERMYER] five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. OVERMYER. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the Senate amendment to fix a price of $2.50 per bushel on the 1918 wheat crop, just as I should vote against it if the price fixed in it were $1.50 or $5, or any other price. I shall vote against it on principle, because I do not believe that the legislative branch of the Government should go into the price-fixing business. I can not conceive how the Congress of the United States, consisting of more than 500 men, representing sections of the country whose interests in the question are so antagonistic, can, by any sort of reasoning, reach a fair conclusion in the matter of price fixing, no matter how patriotic those 500 men may be, and assuming that any price fixing by any governmental agency is proper, which I am beginning very seriously to doubt.

It is estimated that to increase the price of wheat from $2.20, as fixed by the President, to $2.50, as proposed by the Senate amendment, will cost the consumers of this country and our allies the sum of $400,000,000. However, I am not prepared to argue that a price of $2.50 for wheat is too high when compared with the prices of other grains and prices of machinery and labor necessary to produce the crop, but I do insist that we have already vested in a governmental agency the power to determine what is a fair and reasonable price for the wheat crop, and I believe that agency better qualified and less likely to be moved by local considerations in fixing the price.

As a member of the Committee on Agriculture of this House I took a more or less active part in framing the food-control legislation which passed the House last summer, and I made a speech on the floor in favor of the bill, but nowhere in that speech will you find that I advocated any price fixing by Congress. I still want to be consistent and stand by the policy adopted by our committee in that legislation. That policy was that it was entirely proper and necessary to vest in some governmental agency the power, at least, to fix prices on commandeered articles, and perhaps such other commodities as the Government might have to buy. We thought it best, however, to vest that price-fixing authority, such as was given in the bill, in the President of the United States and not in Congress, and I am sure that practically all the members of that committee understood at the time that we were granting only authority to fix a minimum guaranteed price and not a maximum price.

Mr. FESS. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. OVERMYER. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. FESS. Am I mistaken in supposing that we fixed the price of wheat on the crop of last year?

Mr. OVERMYER. We did in conference, but not in the House originally. The Agricultural Committee of the House proceeded on the theory that if there was any price fixing to be done by any governmental agency it should be done by the President, and we granted him that power to fix a minimum guaranteed price on certain commodities. No maximum prices were contemplated, and it was not the intention of the Agricultural Committee to grant the power to fix maximum prices, and no such power was given. But so far as wheat is concerned, the result has been the fixing of a maximum price, because with a minimum price fixed and the Government the only buyer, the minimum price becomes the maximum price, for there is no competition in open market to force the price up.

When that legislation reached the Senate, as gentlemen will remember, some gentlemen of that body apparently became alarmed over the talk in certain quarters of $1.40 and $1.50 wheat, and they sought to prevent any such thing by inserting in the bill a price of $2. Quite recently, and while the present amendment was pending in the Senate, the President, exercising the authority conferred upon him by the food-control legislation, advanced the price of this year's wheat crop to a guaranteed minimum of $2.20. This price, so far as my knowledge goes, is satisfactory to the farmers of Ohio, for I have had but one letter asking me to vote for the $2.50 amendment. But I am not pretending to say that Ohio is a wheat-raising section as compared with some of the other States of the Union, and I have kept my mind open on this proposition, as I want to be fair with all sections of the country.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OVERMYER. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Was not the minimum price fixed for the sole purpose of stimulating production?

Mr. OVERMYER. Of course, that is the theory under which our committee acted in adopting any sort of price-fixing legislation. I take it that there is no excuse for vesting authority in any governmental agency to fix prices except to stimulate production.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERMYER. Yes; I will yield to my colleague from Nebraska.

Mr. REAVIS. I entirely agree with the gentleman, but when the price fixed on wheat makes wheat the least profitable crop, would it not be a good idea to raise the price of wheat?

Mr. OVERMYER. That is the serious part of this matter; and I will say to the gentleman in all frankness that while I have intended and do now intend to vote against this amendment, it has worried me more than my vote on the war resolution or on prohibition or on the suffrage proposition. [Laughter.]

The prices to which the coarser grains have advanced are such that it would probably be more profitable for farmers to raise them than to raise wheat, and if this question had come before us a month or two ago I might have voted differently from what my vote will be to-day.

Mr. AYRES. Is it not a fact that by not fixing the price of other cereals a great many acres that otherwise would be planted to wheat will now be planted to other cereals?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERMYER. Will the gentleman in control of the time yield me five minutes more?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OVERMYER. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas, as I stated a while ago, that that is one of the reasons why I shall vote against the Senate amendment, because I believe it is too late now to influence the wheat acreage of this country for this year by any legislation.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERMYER. I fear gentlemen are taking advantage of my generosity and are making their speeches in my time, but I will yield once more.

Mr. REAVIS. In the hearings before the Agricultural Committee the statement was repeatedly made by practical farmers that wheat was the cheapest feed that a farmer could now feed to his stock.

Mr. OVERMYER. Yes; that was stated.

Mr. REAVIS. And that one-half of the wheat was being so fed to farm animals.

Mr. OVERMYER. Yes; there is evidence that this is being done.

Mr. REAVIS. If you increase the price of wheat so as to make it more profitable to sell it than to feed it, will not that result in a greater available supply of wheat?

Mr. OVERMYER. I will say to the gentleman that we may be forced to fix prices on other grains, because we have gone into the price-fixing business on wheat. We are now confronted with a condition which may require additional legislation to remedy, brought about by a program upon which Congress should not have embarked in the first place by fixing a price on wheat in the food legislation instead of leaving the question with the President and the Food Administration, where the House originally placed it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERMYER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman has just said that in his opinion it will not affect the acreage of wheat for this year to fix the price.

Mr. OVERMYER. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman have any idea that this war is going to be over this year?

Mr. OVERMYER. No; I fear not, unhappily.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does it not follow that we must get ready to furnish wheat for next year?

Mr. OVERMYER. Yes; but we can not fix the price now for next year. We are undertaking to fix the price for this year, and I am sure it is too late to fix any price that will result in increased acreage of wheat for this year.

The food-control legislation of last summer was pioneer legislation of its kind in this country. All the nations engaged in the war have been forced to adopt legislation of this character, and public sentiment in this country demanded that the situation be taken in hand by the Government here. We all remember how the competitive buying of wheat and flour by the representatives of the allied Governments in the markets of this country a year ago forced wheat to unheard-of prices, giving it a fictitious value, which resulted in no benefit of consequence to the farmers, because the most of them had disposed of their wheat before this competitive bidding began. If the Food Administration had accomplished nothing else it would have justified its existence, and the legislation under which it is acting, by the elimination of this competitive and speculative buying and by creating a purchasing agent for all the allied Governments. But the Food Administration has accomplished other great things under the legislation referred to.

By cooperative arrangements, by the elimination of speculation and waste, the licensing of manufacturers, the punishment of hoarders, and proper distribution of food supplies, tremendous good has been accomplished in a general way. And high as prices now are, with conditions in general bad enough regarding food, yet every person who knows anything must know that conditions would be infinitely worse if we had no such legislation and no action under it.

I am sure not many men in Congress shared the erroneous impression entertained by the public that the food-control legislation was enacted to bring about a radical lowering of food prices, either wholesale or retail. No such results could be hoped for by anyone conversant with conditions. All prices naturally and inevitably have a tendency to higher levels in war time. All our prices had already reached high levels before we got into the war, and, as a matter of fact, conditions in this country regarding food prices might be just as bad by this time if we were not in the war, and might even be worse, because we would then have passed no food-control legislation, and speculation, waste, and hoarding would be going on unrestricted.

Leaving out the question of currency and inflation of money and all other theories we may assume this as an incontrovertible fact: Prices will continue to rise as long as the war continues, because war tends to lessen the supply of goods and services. That is clear and absolutely true. Another thing that is clear and equally true is that the simplest way to correct this condition is to increase the supply of goods and services by greater exertion and to decrease the demand by not buying the things you do not absolutely have to have and which you can very well get along without.

But our people do not like to do this. It is a simple remedy, but an unpopular one. It is much more popular to say, "Let the Government handle the situation," and the Government seems ready and willing in all cases to try, even when such governmental effort has the ill effect of relieving the individual from the spur to greater effort and greater economy which high prices would otherwise enforce upon him.

If the Government were to engage in a comprehensive scheme of price fixing, sufficient to bring all prices to a general lower level, under present war conditions, it would be embarking on a program which no Government has yet undertaken. To balance such a program and make it equitable it would have to include the fixing of wages and producers' prices for all sorts of agricultural and even manufactured products; for if consumers' prices are to be arbitrarily fixed, the elements that make the prices, including labor, must be arbitrarily fixed as well. A program so comprehensive would be assailed by a thousand difficulties.

What the United States Food Administration has been seeking to do and has done under the food-control legislation is the regulation of the world's food supply so that America and her allies in the war may be fed at as reasonable prices as it is possible to obtain. Reasonable prices are not necessarily low prices. They are the best that can be obtained under all conditions of the situation. And whatever may be said about the Food Administration operating under authority we have granted them, no one is heard to complain that our armies here and in France and Italy are not being well fed, and that is almighty important. [Applause.] Nothing else matters much at this moment. If they are fed they will hold out until we can get more men and airships and cannon and ammunition to them. What if our civil population is called upon to forego and sacrifice and practice self-denial, so long as our armies and allied armies are fed? And they are being fed or you would hear of it, I assure you.

I know that there are some just criticisms made of the Food Administration. I realize that perhaps men have been called in to assist in the administration of that law who probably know very little about the duties devolving upon them. I realize, for example, that they called in a young millionaire to assist in selecting farm tractors for our allies, who does not know any more about a farm tractor than a donkey knows about church music. [Laughter.] I realize that they called in a man to assist in the fuel end of it, who knows about as much about fuel and the production and transportation of fuel as I know about the divorce laws of South Dakota. [Laughter.] But these are matters of small consequence when compared to the tremendous big things that have been accomplished by keeping our armies well fed, securing a proper distribution of food supplies in this country and abroad, and eliminating speculation and waste.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Who fixed the price of wheat?

Mr. OVERMYER. The President; but it was fixed originally by the Senate. The other body of Congress was the one that started price fixing, so far as Congress is concerned. Congress ought never to have gone into that business under any circumstances, or we should go all the way and fix prices on everything—a program I am not yet ready to support. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in order that we may judge of the reasonableness of the demand for the higher price of wheat it is well to recall the circumstances of the enactment of the food-control law. The Senate, as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OVERMYER], first inserted the $2 guaranty of the 1918 crop with a view and purpose of encouraging production. At that time the prospects of peace were in many minds very bright, and in case of a cessation of hostilities in this world war it was anticipated that the price of wheat would go down, and therefore they should give a certain guaranty to the producers. That was the object of that. The law contained another provision authorizing the Government to buy and sell wheat, store it, and go into the wheat business, and to do that at a reasonable price. That was in section 11.

There was another provision in section 14 which authorized the Government to also guarantee the prices for future crops. These three provisions are in the law. The President, after appointing an advisory committee on the 31st day of August, 1917, determined that $2.20 for No. 1 at Chicago was the basic price at which he was going to purchase all the wheat in the country for this Government and the allies. That automatically determined the price of the wheat that then existed. At that time the winter wheat was all harvested; the spring wheat was all harvested but was not brought to market.

The spring wheat sold prior to that time had received in the neighborhood of $3 a bushel. The position between the neutrals and the allies was such at that time that it brought up the price of wheat to what was thought to be an unreasonable level.

The farmers of the United States are patriotic, as was demonstrated by the fact that when the President fixed the price at $2.20 for the then existing crop, which was 80 per cent spring wheat on hand, they accepted it without complaint. [Applause.] They said we want to cooperate with all the people of the United States to fight this war, and we are willing to sacrifice from the market price of our wheat and there was no objection against the action of fixing the price of wheat at $2.20. [Applause.]

That was the attitude of the farmers then. Why? Because in that same food law there was a provision that said you should fix the prices further. It was the honest belief on the part of the farmer that they were not to be the only victims of price fixing, but that it was to go all along. That law says that the prices shall be fixed on all the farmer uses. The farmer expected that the price fixing would not be confined to the things he had to sell to the world. The law expressly mentioned fertilizers and machinery. Things went along smoothly, so far as spring wheat was concerned, but on the 1st day of September following the Government put into effect a new standard of grain. We had a standard that had been worked out by learned gentlemen in the Department of Agriculture after consulting whom? The grain trade. They never consulted the farmers or the producers; they were formed in the interests of the buyer. That produced dissatisfaction more than anything I have known in the far Northwest, because every man takes some pride in his wheat crop and does the best he can. Now it is degraded. Here is 60-pound wheat to a bushel.

I have been in the wheat business 40 years, and it is graded on some imaginary reason that has no substantial basis, because you take it and compare No. 1 wheat, and it makes just as good flour and has as much in it as the other, so far as the production of food is concerned. There is only a slight difference. It is an excuse to penalize the farmer who sells the wheat from 10 to 15 cents a bushel. As I say, it produced dissatisfaction and reduced the price of wheat, because the price fixed is dependent upon the grade of the wheat.

As the result a demand sprang up for a higher guaranteed price. Bills were introduced in both Houses of Congress. It was discovered by the Food Administration that this great Department of Agriculture had overestimated the wheat crop 75,000,000 bushels, and suddenly we were put on rations and required to buy fifty-fifty substitutes. You remember that; it was not very long ago. The result was that the grains out of which the substitutes were produced advanced in price so as to leave wheat in the background.

Well, that is not the way to encourage the production of wheat. The farmers requested an increase in petitions to Congress. While that was under discussion in Congress the Government fixed the price of the 1918 crop by proclamation at $2.20, the same as they were then paying. Why? Some claim that the Food Administration was doing it to get ahead of Congress, but the law expressed it that the only reason for fixing a guaranteed price in the future was to encourage wheat production. The farmers were very much surprised. They were then required to sell their wheat at about 25 per cent less than a free market would have paid them, judging by the price of other grains, and here comes the Government and says, "We will encourage you to produce more wheat by promising that we will pay you for next year's crop the same price that we are now paying for wheat." That is a funny kind of encouragement.

The farmer would naturally say, "Yes, my Government, you love me all right; you say you love me; you say I produce the staff of life—the wheat, the bread—and you like me for that, and then you promise to encourage me, but you have an awful queer way of showing your love for me, you have a queer way of encouraging me by promising to pay me less in the future than my product is worth." He might well have exclaimed with the poet—

> Perhaps it was right to dissemble your love;
> But—why did you kick me downstairs?

That is the way he might have answered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us who is the author of that?

Mr. STEENERSON. J. P. Kemble, who lived about a hundred years ago. It is found in a play called "The Panel."

That is the kind of encouragement they gave the farmer.

Mr. REED. A constituent of mine living in a village in West Virginia says that he is paying now $3 a bushel——

Mr. STEENERSON. I want to point out to you the reason for having a higher price in 1918 than in 1917. It costs more to raise the crop of 1918. The price of gasoline, the price of motors, the price of fertilizer, the price of labor have all risen. An editorial in a farm paper which I received this morning shows that the average price in farm labor has increased 22 per cent. Many men have been called to the military service and many have left for the industrial centers by reason of the high wages. That being the case, the wages demanded by labor are 300 and 400 per cent higher than the farmer had to pay in 1916.

Another thing, wheat is a very risky crop. In 1916 the North Dakota spring wheat crop promised 160,000,000 bushels, and during the summer, in a few days, the black rust came along and destroyed that crop almost wholly, so that the harvest was 39,000,000 bushels instead of 160,000,000. That is an element in the cost of raising wheat. As pointed out by Prof. Warren, of Cornell University, who testified before the Senate committee recently, the risk is so great that it justifies an expectation of fluctuation of more than 25 per cent. In 1917 he says that the farmers planted 14,000,000 acres more than they harvested. What became of that crop? It was either plowed under or left idle, and planted to new crops in the wheat area. If you put the price too low here, lower than the market justifies, you discourage production. I will insert here the testimony of Prof. Warren:

The CHAIRMAN. You mean grain lies at the foundation of meat?

Mr. WARREN. Largely; and if we have a poor grain crop we have poor crops in general and poor hay and pastures in general, so that almost the whole thing is poor, except that we have our reserve supplies of meat and grain from previous crops, the animals, of course, always being a reserve food supply.

Take a single one of these grains—wheat—in the United States for the 10 years. From 1910 to 1914 we averaged planting, according to the figures which I have worked out from the Government reports, 53,000,000 acres. On the average we harvested 49,000,000, and on the average we raised 728,000,000 bushels for the five years' average. In 1915 we planted 61,000,000 acres, harvested 60,000,000. We had a good year; planted heavily, and it being a good year, very little of it failed, so we harvested a large crop. The acreage the farmers planted might have been expected to yield, according to the previous experience, 838,000,000 bushels, but it did yield 1,026,000,000. In other words, the farmers' plantings, based on an expectation of 838,000,000 bushels, produced 1,026,000,000.

In 1916 they planted 57,000,000 acres. Based on past experience, they ought to have got 738,000,000 bushels; they did get 640,000,000.

For the year just past they planted 60,000,000 acres and harvested 46,000,000. So far as the farmers knew, they planted for 824,000,000 bushels of wheat for the last year; they got 651,000,000, or more than 20 per cent less; that is, we may plant for a billion bushels of wheat and get less than 800,000,000; we may plant for 800,000,000 and get a billion. This shows the margin of fluctuation, due to the weather.

Another factor in the situation at present is that the reserves are very low.

It is said here by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who is an eminent authority on farming, that this will not encourage production. That statement was reiterated by the gentleman from Ohio. It may not increase the acreage sown, because seeding is pretty nearly over, though not quite, in my district; but it will increase the supply of wheat—and why? Because it will discourage the use of wheat for stock food. They will not use it for stock food if it is more profitable to sell it and use corn for that purpose. I will here insert an extract from the testimony of Dr. Taylor, of the University of Pennsylvania:

Dr. TAYLOR. They have experimented with everything, and the maximum in Germany to the consumer has always been a failure, unless the Government possessed large stocks of commodities with which they clubbed the market; and when they did that, then they became the largest buyers, and that had the effect of putting the small buyer at a disadvantage. They never tried minimum prices properly adjusted to stimulate production. They made the attempt to keep the cost of living to the consumer, as regards the staples, down to a plane that proved to be impossible; in other words, too low. They attempted to keep the price of bread, for instance, practically to a peace-time price; and the price of bread has been 78 pfennigs for the weekly loaf, which is less than 5 cents per loaf, through the entire period of the war. The quality of this bread has been reduced at different times by the addition of varying amounts of potatoes. At the present time it is a mixed-flour bread; but the present bread of Germany, made from mixed flour, without the addition of potatoes, is much cheaper than the bread in most of the surrounding countries, as I have said, less than 5 cents a pound on the standard valuation of bread. In order to do this they practically had not only to wipe out all of the intermediary profit but they had to hold the price of grain to a point that the producer found unprofitable which tempted him to divert the grains in other directions.

The CHAIRMAN. Could you tell us what that price was?

Dr. TAYLOR. I have them here. Converted into our measure of bushels, the price for the last year was, for wheat, $1.77 a bushel; for oats, $1.05 a bushel; for barley, $1.61 a bushel; and for rye, $1.37 a bushel. Oats were essential for the horses of the army. For barley the price was held high, partly through the influence of the brewer and partly for considerations that were apparently political.

The German agricultural classes regarded these prices, high as they are, as below the extraordinary costs of production in war time, and they have never equaled a normal crop in any one of them or an average of the normal crop. Of course, fertilizers were scarce, labor was very scarce, and all of the conditions were difficult, but the financial impulse was lacking.

They took from the farmer all his oats and half his barley; they took from him, theoretically, or could take from him all his wheat and rye, except certain portions left with him for his own family. But the relative prices tempted the farmer to sell barley as such and to feed the wheat and rye to his live stock. The farmer was requisitioned for half his barley and the other half of his barley left to him to do with as he pleased. He sold it and then turned around and fed wheat and rye to his stock instead of barley. The Government has each year discovered a difference of 1,000,000 or more tons of rye and wheat between the crop estimate and what they finally got. In theory they confiscated those grains; in practice they could not. They did not have anyone to send to the farmer for the grain; they did not have the wagons to bring the grain from the farm. They have no large elevator systems in Germany and had no places to store the grain. All they could do was confiscate on paper. They took so much and said, "We will get the rest of it in units of so much per month," and then at the end of the seventh or tenth month the man who came to get the month's unit found that the farmer had fed it to his live stock. What was to be done with the farmer? They could not fine or imprison him; he could not be penalized. They were helpless before the farmer. In other words, having failed to stimulate production by adequate encouragement, and having held the price of bread low, they defeated their own object in both directions, produced dissatisfaction with the producer, established little satisfaction with the consumer, and lost a large amount of human food that was diverted to the feeding of animals.

The CHAIRMAN. That very thing often characterizes oppressive measures of that sort.

Dr. TAYLOR. In other words, their management of the grain situation was, in their own terms, a "fiasco," except that it did guarantee to the consumer a maximum price for bread.

Then they made a fundamental mistake, and the curious fact is that the management of their food situation from the beginning to the end is a story of mistakes and inefficiency. The efficiency of Germany went into the production of munitions, into the army and transportation, and not into her agriculture. The normal bread ration in Germany was 40 per cent of her diet. It was about 365 grams of flour per day.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you reduce that to our terms?

Dr. TAYLOR. I should say 14 ounces. They decided that so much was not necessary; that it was too high a bread ration, despite protests of nutrition experts, so they cut it arbitrarily down to about two-thirds rations, about 9 ounces. If a people, whose diet is being temporarily restricted by crop conditions or by repressive measures, have in that diet the normal amount of bread to which they are accustomed, you can take out the sugar or the meat or other things; you can decrease and substitute to a very large degree without altering the psychology of the consuming class; but the moment you place the consuming class upon a definite and obviously insufficient bread ration you have shattered the entire structure of diet, and you can do nothing with them in any other direction. That is why it is so extremely important at present that our situation and that of our allies be so handled that we and they have as near as possible a normal bread ration, because when you have that you can "tinker" with the rest of the diet, if you will pardon the expression, to a large extent. If you have not a normal bread ration, then you can do little repressing.

The Germans made the fundamental mistake in the beginning, despite the counsel of all their expert advisers, their scientists, and nutritionists. They fixed the bread ration at a low price, which fixed wheat at a correspondingly low figure, and the result was that it was so low the farmer would not produce. They did not secure increased production, and were thus not even able to offer the people the normal bread ration. Then when the blockade was tightened scarcity became worse; they had their people already on a two-thirds' bread ration and then had to begin to cut off fats, meats, and sugar. That has been the source of their difficulties, all traceable to the initial failure to set a price for products that really repaid and stimulated the producer; and, secondly, the attempt to keep a fundamental commodity in war to a practically peace-time basis, which is obviously impossible.

Another thing. Take it in the winter-wheat regions. I am told that there are hundreds of thousands of acres that have been winter killed, so that it will not produce more than 3 or 4 or 5 bushels to the acre. If the price is as fixed now, it may not be profitable to harvest a crop as light as that and it would be more profitable to plow it up and sow it to corn. If we fix the price at $2.50, it will increase the supply in that direction. I say that this claim for a higher guaranteed price of wheat is justified because of the changed circumstances, the higher cost of production, and it is justified because labor is more scarce and because the risk is greater, and the wheat can not be produced at the same price that it was produced a year ago; and that must be taken into account. What was a fair price a year ago will not be a fair price this year.

To illustrate how this plan throws an unjust burden upon a few farmers who happen to raise wheat instead of other crops, I call attention to the following statistics:

WHEAT PRICES.

Wheat exports for the seven months ending in March, 1918, including flour reduced to bushels, are estimated at 75,000,000 bushels, of which 60,000,000 went to the allies and the remaining 15,000,000 bushels to neutrals.

Comparing the fixed price of wheat with other grains, the price of wheat was approximately 25 per cent, or 75 cents per bushel, below what it would have been in a free and open market. The wheat growers therefore were required to contribute about $56,000,000 to furnish a cheap loaf in the foreign countries, $45,000,000 of which was contributed to the allies and $11,000,000 to neutrals. But, in addition to this, they contributed at least 150,000,000 bushels to feed the domestic population, upon which the loss by controlled prices would be $112,500,000, making a grand total of $168,000,000 that the wheat growers of the United States have contributed toward furnishing cheap bread. To place such a burden upon a limited class of people who are engaged in producing the principal article of food is economically and morally wrong. If it is a duty to furnish cheaper bread than the market affords, that duty rests upon the Nation and not upon a limited few. Again, this price control, being limited to one item, has utterly failed of its object and we have not furnished the cheaper bread that was intended.

RETAIL BREAD PRICES.

	Cents.
Wheat bread:
12-ounce loaf—9.32 cents per lb	7
1-pound loaf	10
3-pound loaf	25
Graham and whole-wheat breads:
1-pound loaf	10
Rye bread:
1-pound loaf	10
3-pound loaf	30

The only people who have been furnished cheaper bread by reason of Government interference with wheat prices are the populations of the allies, for there the governments have actually sold the wheat or flour to the bakers on condition that the bread should be furnished at a certain low price prescribed. Of the 15,000,000 bushels exported to neutrals the United States had no control over the price at which the wheat or flour should be sold. It was exported by consent of the War Trade Board, it is true, but it was distributed through the regular channels of trade, and hence we find that American flour in Haiti sold for $16.15 per barrel, wholesale; in Cuba for $15.68 per barrel; in Mexico for $14 per barrel; and at retail at higher prices still, so that the American farmer, instead of benefiting the ultimate consumer, was simply enriching the middleman.

The cost of raising wheat has nearly trebled in the past three years. Labor, which formerly could be obtained for $25 to $30 per month, now demands $90 per month. Binder twine, which formerly cost 7 cents a pound, now costs 21 to 27 cents. This reminds me of the remarkable difference in the treatment of the farmers of the United States by their Government, and the farmers of Yucatan by theirs. The Yucatan Government took over monopoly of export of binder-twine hemp and raised the price to the farmers of the United States 400 per cent; but the Government of the United States cut down the price of its farmers' wheat by 25 per cent, part of which in the shape of flour was exported to Yucatan to pay for the twine. Our Government forcibly reduced the price of our export grain, and the Yucatan Government, by monopoly methods, increased the price of the farm products they export.

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN THE FARMER GOES TO MILL?

Formerly, the farmer would take his grain to the mill and give one-eighth for the miller's toll, and he would get back the balance in flour and feed, making a charge of 14 per cent for the milling. Now, he takes 60 pounds of wheat, which he must sell for 3½ cents per pound, or $2 a bushel. He buys back 45 pounds in the shape of flour at 7 cents a pound, or $3.15, and 15 pounds in the shape of feed, at 2 cents a pound, making 30 cents, a total of $3.45. He brings in 56 pounds of corn, which he sells at 3 cents a pound, or $1.68 per bushel. He purchases back 36 pounds of meal, at 10 cents a pound, or $3.60, and 20 pounds of feed, at 2 cents, making 40 cents more. He brings in 32 pounds of oats and sells it for 3 cents a pound, or 96 cents, out of which he gets 16 pounds of oatmeal, at 12 cents a pound, or $1.92, and 16 pounds of feed, at 2 cents a pound, or 32 cents, making a total of $2.24. He brings 48 pounds of barley, which he sells at 3½ cents a pound, or $1.68 a bushel, and he purchases back 33 pounds of meal, at 7½ cents a pound, or $2.47, and 15 pounds of feed, at 2 cents a pound, or 30 cents, a total of $2.77. He sells his grain for $5.32 and buys back flour and meal made from it at $12.46. He formerly paid 14 per cent toll; he now pays 74 per cent, an increase of more than 400 per cent.

The explanation of this abnormal rise in the middleman's charge is found, first, in the abnormal profits of the miller, which, according to recent investigations, are more than 100 per cent of what they were before the Food Administration took hold. Next is the abnormal profits of the jobbers and retailers, which have likewise increased in the same proportion. The next reason is that persons can not buy flour or feed at wholesale, but are compelled to buy in small quantities at retail, and the farmer must therefore pay for the containers. The farmers of Minnesota must pay for cotton sacks or bags covering the small packages of flour and meal which he is compelled to buy as substitutes. The price of cotton has increased nearly 400 per cent. I insert a list of these prices:

WHOLESALE PRICES OF COTTON FLOUR BAGS.		Cents.
12-pound bags	each	7
24½-pound bags	do	12
49-pound bags	do	20½
98-pound bags	do	28½

It will be observed that if you should buy the smallest packages it would cost at the rate of $1.12 per barrel of flour simply for the coverings.

WHO FEEDS YOU, PROFITEERS OR FARMERS?

The President says:

"The farmer, for example, complains, with a great deal of justice, that while regulation of food products restricts their incomes, no restraints are placed upon the prices of most of the things they themselves must purchase, and similar iniquities obtain on all sides."—(Message to Congress on Dec. 5, 1917.)

THE FARMERS AGREE WITH THE PRESIDENT.

Authentic figures prove that 345 12-ounce loaves are made from one barrel of flour, at 6 cents per loaf	$20.70
Of this the farmer receives	7.44
Somebody else receives	13.26

If the price of wheat is raised to $2.50 per bushel and the millers are still allowed their excess profits, it will not add one-half cent to a loaf of bread. With excess profits of the miller eliminated, bread will sell for one-quarter cent less per loaf.

The average consumption per capita for the United States is one barrel a year. Two-dollar-and-fifty-cent wheat will add $1.35 to each consumer in one year. If the Government will take the $1.94 excess profits of the millers each consumer will save 59 cents a year.

This saving will encourage production, so that the consumer will not have to buy the high-priced substitutes.

In his message of December 5 President Wilson said, "The law of supply and demand, I regret to say, has been replaced by the law of unrestrained selfishness." Doesn't the profiteering of the millers show what the President states? He further says, "While we have eliminated profiteering in several branches of industry, it still runs impudently rampant in others."

NATIONAL WHEAT GROWERS' LEAGUE,
JOHN A. SIMPSON, Secretary.

WHAT HAPPENS TO THE FARMER WHEN HE GOES TO MARKET?

In the first place, the farmer can not sell his own grain. He must employ a member of the grain exchange on commission. Before the Food Administration took hold the commission on wheat was 1 cent a bushel, and on coarse grains half a cent, but this was immediately increased to 1 per cent, or 2 cents per bushel, for wheat and a little over, making an increase of 120 per cent in the expense of selling. Then he was confronted with the new system of Federal inspection and grades, which was so stringent that the bulk of his wheat was graded down to No. 3, No. 4, No. 5, and sample grade. This meant a difference of 3 cents for No. 2, 6 cents for No. 3, and 10 cents for No. 4. The price was fixed by grade and not by value of the wheat. Before Government interference unjust inspection was universally corrected by competition, for when wheat was graded too low it was sold on sample for what it was worth, sometimes at the highest price. But this is not all. Spring wheat is liable to have foreign material in it, either separable or inseparable. The separable material is called dockage and consists mostly of oats, barley, flax, pigeon-grass seed, and other weed seeds. Most of these seeds are valuable for feed, and a great many cars were received with $40 or $50 and even $100 worth of foreign material, but under fixed prices for wheat this foreign material had to be given away to the purchaser. Inseparable foreign material had the effect of degrading the wheat. Four and one-half per cent of rye, worth $3 per bushel, would run No. 1 wheat down to No. 4, although for milling purposes its value was not affected. The grades imposed were so unjust that it created general dissatisfaction throughout the spring-wheat regions. Here are extracts from a petition presented to the President:

The application of these grades to spring wheat in particular has been and is injurious to the grain producers of the Northwest, and has caused a loss to the farmers aggregating many millions of dollars, and at the same time has shaken the confidence of the producers in the good faith and justice of the Government, and has created a feeling that the producers' interests have not been sufficiently considered in promulgating the grades.

Dissatisfaction with the present standards has been manifested by many meetings of protest which have been held throughout the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota, and has resulted in the selection of a committee of officers and representative men from these States to appear in Washington for the purpose of seeking the necessary relief.

This petition was presented to the President personally, and was signed by the governors of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota, and other State officers, the entire delegations in Congress, members of the Minnesota Public Safety Commission, and others. The signatures are as follows: O. P. B. Jacobson, B. R. Comormner, S. J. Cradall, R. J. Hornsdale, E. H. Rehnke, J. J. Murphy, William D. Scral, N. J. Mosley, Peter Norbeck, C. J. Lee, C. H. March, Sydney Anderson, C. R. Davis, N. Ferguson, Harold Knutson, C. H. Dillon, Ernest Lundeen, A. J. Volstead, Thomas Sterling, Knute Nelson, P. J. McCumber, Frank B. Kendrick, Harry L. Gandy, Thomas Johnson, Grant S. Yumans, P. D. Norton, Carl S. Van Dyke, John Lind, H. Steenerson, E. E. Elsworth, J. M. Baer, C. E. Londquist, George M. Young, A. J. Monny, J. A. A. Burnquist. So far our appeal for relief has been in vain. The Secretary of Agriculture kicked the farmer not downstairs, but clear down cellar.

One farmer wrote to me of his experience as follows:

I sold 600 bushels of durum wheat. It was No. 1 of the very best, but I was docked 8 per cent because it contained 5 per cent of barley and 3 per cent of weed seeds, mostly mustard and pigeon grass, and it really had value for feed. The barley was worth $1.15 a bushel, making a total value in the 600 bushels of $42, for which I got nothing. It was donated to the buyer. In Minneapolis they got from $50 to $100 worth of screenings in every car. The millers are making more money than they ever did. It is a sure thing for the middleman all along the line.

My correspondent, who had No. 1 wheat, weighing 60 pounds to the bushel, reports that, even when he shipped to Minneapolis in carload lots, it netted him only $1.96 a bushel, and he had been compelled to donate the valuable dockage besides. The farm price of spring wheat in the Northwest by these methods was reduced at least 10 cents per bushel, involving a loss of more than $15,000,000, for which the Department of Agriculture and the Food Administration are directly to blame. Now, if this $15,000,000 had gone to reduce the price of bread to the consumer the farmer would have been perfectly satisfied and contented, but it never reached him at all. The miller in figuring the cost of his flour has almost invariably used the basic price of $2.17 or $2.20. Before the wheat had reached the mill it had passed through the hands of elevator companies which were either independent or subsidiaries of the mills, so that the profits referred to did not go directly to the mill—and did not tend to reduce the price of bread.

If the people only had been willing to eat wheat, and the farmer had been equipped with facilities to deliver it to each consumer, then reduced farm prices would have reached the ultimate consumer, but, unfortunately, when the wheat left the farmer it was only started on a long journey to its final destination on the table of the bread eater. On this journey there are many middlemen, each one of whom seems to have been able to double, treble, and quadruple his profits, so that the benefit of the reduced price which was paid to the farmer has entirely disappeared, and we find that while the farmer receives less than 3 cents for the wheat used in a 16-ounce loaf of bread, the consumer has to pay from 9 to 10 cents for it, a price high enough to justify $3 wheat.

In some quarters Congress has been criticized for making the law. All that Congress did, however, by the enactment of the grain-standards act was to confer upon the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to fix grain standards. Congress had the right to assume that in the administration of this law the Secretary of Agriculture would have regard for the interests of the farmer as well as the grain trade. But the results appear to be, at least in the opinion of the farmers, this, that the Federal grain standards and grades as put in force operated against the interest of the grain producer, and in favor of the purchaser, the miller, the elevator buyer, and the middleman. The fault is not in the terms of the law, but in the administration of it, which rests wholly with the executive and administrative branches of the Government. I do not want to impugn the good intentions of the Department of Agriculture, but whatever their intentions were the fact remains the system of standards and grades promulgated and put in force by them appear to be satisfactory to the millers, the elevators, and the middlemen, and the grain trade in general, but unsatisfactory to the farmers and producers. The underlying thought of the Department of Agriculture seems to have been that by the enforcement of sufficient penalties to compel the farmer to improve the quality of his grain and to prevent mixture of different varieties of the same kind of grain. In his annual report for 1916 the Secretary of Agriculture says, with reference to the standards then in course of preparation:

Public hearings were held in four of the large grain-marketing and exporting centers and in Washington. The suggestions received by letter and at the hearings were fully considered in drafting the final form of the rules and regulations which were promulgated.

Mr. Brand, the chief of this bureau, before the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, on January 9, stated:

We make it a practice not to put any of these standards into effect without first having extended conferences with the trade, in order that it may have a full voice in the final enactment and in order that where mistakes occur in any of our standards they may be pointed out, so that the standards may be as good as possible.

For some reason or other the department officials have up to this time proceeded on the theory that the grain grower—the farmer—does not know his own best interest. Whether he likes it or not, these grain standards must be satisfactory to the grain trade, and especially to the exporter who seeks to establish a reputation either for a special kind of grain or a special kind of food product. Take, for instance, in the matter of the moisture test, where wheat is to be ground into flour. We are told that flour ordinarily contains 13½ per cent of moisture, which is the same as is required for No. 1 northern spring wheat. However, if No. 1 is to contain that percentage, in order to be ground the miller has to dampen it until it reach 15 or 16 per cent moisture, and then he again reduces the moisture in the flour to 13½ per cent in order to keep it in the best condition. Where the moisture is below 15 per cent it is practically impossible to tell the exact percentage without a test. A country elevator, even if equipped with the instruments for making the test, would require half an hour to an hour for every test. At many of these elevators hundreds of loads per day arrive, and it would be absolutely impossible to have an instrumental test made of each load. In order to play safe, therefore, the buyer must reduce the grade on the contention that it contains more moisture than the rule allows. The Minnesota inspection, which has been giving satisfactory service to the people of that State for many years, established 15 per cent as the maximum moisture to be allowed. Where wheat contains more than 15 per cent of moisture it can be detected by an experienced person without an actual chemical test.

Then, as to the mixture of different varieties of wheat, to penalize the farmer, as is indicated, for a small admixture of other varieties of wheat is not only unjust but useless. The country elevator is not equipped with sufficient bins to keep more than four or five kinds of wheat separated, and where the same grade of wheat is of a different variety it is necessary in almost all instances to put it in the same bin. The elevator equipment at the points to which the farmers bring their wheat is not sufficient to keep these varieties, classes, and subclasses of the same grade from being mixed. The object and purpose is said to be to establish a reputation for a particular variety of wheat, so that the manufacturer who desires it to mix with another kind of wheat or other material, or for some particular food product, may be able to get what he wants; but in nine cases out of ten wheat is necessarily mixed before it arrives at the terminals, and the penalty inflicted on the farmer does not follow the wheat to the terminal, but the profit by reason of the lower prices inures to the middleman.

The farther the wheat gets away from the farmers' hands, the more apt it is to be mixed. The value, therefore, of any particular locality's wheat is determined by its mixing value for milling purposes. A comparatively small proportion of the wheat ground into flour escapes the art of the mixer. Consequently the demand for a law which would prevent the mixing of grain would seem to be based on the assumption that the producer still has an interest in it after it has entered the channels of trade. Such appears, however, not to be the case, and any such law passed, presumably in the interest of the producer, would probably only add to the expense of distribution and throw the burden ultimately upon the consumer. (Report of Industrial Commission (1902), vol. 19, p. 182.)

Mr. H. N. Owen, publisher of Farm Stock and Home, a leading agricultural paper, testifying before the House Committee on Agriculture, referring to the grades, and Mr. Brand, Chief of Bureau of Markets, said:

Mr. OWEN. I want to say something here, not in the spirit of criticism but just the way it strikes me, and that is that Mr. Brand, while he may be all right, he got himself in very bad last December in Minneapolis and Fargo. Whether it is so or not, he gave the impression that these are the grades, and we would have to take them whether we want them or not. That is the impression he gave to the farmers. It was an unfortunate impression, both for him and the department.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., April 18, 1918.

HON. H. STEENERSON,
Washington, D. C.:

The executive committee of the National Grange, in session at Syracuse, N. Y., unanimously indorse the Gore amendment fixing the price of the 1918 wheat crop at $2.50 per bushel, and urge support of the measure. We feel that everyone opposing this is working against the best interests of our country.

N. CADY, Secretary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. I insert in the RECORD the report of the Federal Trade Commission on milling and flour jobbing—just made public to-day. It explains the high cost of living all right, and shows that the farmer is not to blame. It shows that the profits of the millers last year increased from 11 cents to 52 cents per barrel. Jobbers in carload lots increased their profits from 22 cents in 1914 to 55 cents per barrel in 1917, and small jobbers' profits increased from 52 cents in 1914 to 86 cents per barrel in 1917. Millers operating profits increased 175 per cent and their investment profits increased more than 100 per cent. Read this report, and you will know why bread is high.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION FOOD INVESTIGATION.

REPORT ON FLOUR MILLING AND FLOUR JOBBING.

The Federal Trade Commission presents herewith a report of findings in its investigation of wheat-flour milling and wheat-flour jobbing, the principal subjects covered being:

Costs and profits of millers and distributors of wheat flour for the last five years.

Marketing conditions and practices of millers and distributors of wheat flour.

The report does not cover conditions and practices in the retail-flour trade.

The commission finds that the net profits made by millers increased from 11 cents per barrel in the crop year 1912–13 to 52 cents per barrel in the crop year 1916–17. The commission also finds that the gross profits of car lot distributors increased from 22 cents per barrel in the calendar year 1914 to 55 cents per barrel in the first half of the calendar year 1917, and the gross profits of small-lot jobbers increased from 52 cents per barrel for the calendar year 1914 to 86 cents per barrel in the first half of the calendar year 1917.

This investigation constitutes a part of a general food investigation made by the commission pursuant to the direction of the President of the United States, contained in a letter dated February 12, 1917, which reads in part as follows:

"* * * Therefore, I direct the commission, within the scope of its powers, to investigate and report the facts relating to the production, ownership, manufacture, storage, and distribution of foodstuffs and the products or by-products arising from or in connection with their preparation and manufacture; * * *."

The funds appropriated by the Congress to carry on the food investigations became available on July 1, 1917. On April 5, 1917, the United States declared war against Germany and war legislation extending the activities of the Department of Agriculture with respect to the production and distribution of food and establishing the United States Food Administration with extensive powers over the principal foodstuffs produced in the United States, was immediately taken under consideration by the Congress, and was enacted into law in August.

Under these circumstances the commission deemed it advisable to conduct an investigation of the production and distribution of wheat flour, which is one of the most essential articles of food and one most vitally affected by war conditions, and to conduct this investigation along lines that appeared to be most serviceable in carrying out the policies of regulation contemplated in the above-mentioned legislation.

The results of the commission's investigation have been communicated to the United States Food Administration from time to time in a spirit of cooperation, and this report in particular has had the careful consideration of the various officials who have to do with this subject.

PRINCIPAL FINDINGS OF FACTS.

The investigation of flour milling and flour jobbing shows the following facts:

1. There are some 7,000 merchant wheat-flour mills in the United States, which during the last three years have produced on the average about 118,000,000 barrels of flour annually, but which have an aggregate capacity sufficient to produce approximately double this quantity. This output of flour has required the grinding of about 550,000,000 bushels of wheat per year.

2. The simple process of milling and comparatively small cost of milling equipment have resulted in the building of a large number of small mills throughout the country. In certain favorably located centers, however, there has been a natural development of flour mills of large capacity, which have some advantages over the small mills in the economy of production, but some disadvantages in the cost of distribution. In recent years, the mills of large capacity have increased in number while those of small capacity have decreased.

3. At least one-half of the total domestic output of flour in the United States is marketed at points commercially distant from the place of manufacture. Several of the larger mills have established branch houses for the distribution of their product and sell from 30 to 60 per cent of their output in this way, the remainder going to jobbers and wholesale grocers. The smaller mills, on the other hand, distribute most of their output, exclusive of local sales, through brokers and jobbers, and make very small use of the branch-house method.

4. The average cost of production per barrel of flour for mills covered by the investigation increased in the fiscal or crop year 1916–17 over the preceding year, due mainly to the increased cost of wheat, while operating profits per barrel as shown by their records increased nearly 175 per cent and their rate of profit on investment increased more than 100 per cent. The increase in profits was due in part to the enhanced value of unsold stocks carried over from the preceding year, which were disposed of on a rising market, and also to speculative profits on feed, the prices of which increased greatly during the year.

5. During the fiscal year 1912–13, which the available information indicates was a fairly normal year, the average net profit of mills covered by the investigation was 11 cents per barrel, which yielded nearly 10 per cent on the investment. During the fiscal year 1913–14, for which the closing inventories were affected by European conditions, the average net profit was 16 cents per barrel, which yielded 13 per cent on the investment. Under present regulations, millers are allowed a maximum net profit of 25 cents per barrel on their sales of flour, and also 50 cents a ton on their sales of feed, which is equivalent to about 1.7 cents per barrel of flour additional. The commission is informed that this maximum profit was based upon the needs of small mills, it being expected that competition among larger millers would reduce their profits below the maximum.

6. The expenses of flour distributors or middlemen covered by the investigation increased somewhat in the first half of 1917 over the preceding year, while their gross and net profits showed a very large increase. The average net profit per barrel of several large car-lot jobbers increased more than 125 per cent and the average rate of profit on investment nearly doubled. The average net profit per barrel of various small-lot jobbers and the average rate of profit on their investment showed a similar increase.

7. The average gross profit of car-lot distributors in 1914 was 22 cents per barrel and in 1915, 21.5 cents per barrel. The average gross profit of small-lot jobbers was 52 cents in 1914 and 51 cents in 1915. These were fairly normal years for flour jobbers. Under present regulations the maximum gross profit of car-lot distributors is fixed at 25 cents and of small-lot jobbers at from 50 to 75 cents per barrel.

8. Prior to 1914 competition in the milling industry was keen, but since the outbreak of the European war it has been restricted somewhat by the abnormal conditions that have resulted. Certain competitive practices, such as the operation of controlled companies without identifying them, forward selling, and guaranteeing customers against a decline in prices, etc., have been voluntarily discontinued or prevented by the present regulations. Association activities in some instances appear to have affected competition locally.

9. The price of flour to the public has been affected by two factors (a) the governmental fixation of the price of wheat, with the consequent elimination of speculation, and (b) the regulation of flour millers' profits by the Food Administration. The present regulation of flour millers' profits at a fixed margin above cost, however, has the inherent weakness of not encouraging efficiency in production and of affording to unpatriotic millers temptation to dishonesty in cost accounting, difficult to detect or prevent except by individual and detailed audits. While the actual profit which millers will make during the present crop year can not be finally determined until the end of the 12-month period, it appears from the information at hand that the regulations have reduced the profits of most mills below those made during the year 1916–17. This added to the larger reduction secured by the fixation of the price of wheat, which is part of the regulatory plan, has reduced the prices of flour to the consumer several dollars a barrel. In addition, the wheat and milling regulations have kept flour prices fairly stable in spite of an increasing shortage, due to the heavy shipments abroad. The regulations as a whole, therefore, have accomplished substantial results.

10. The regulations of flour jobbers' profits are free from the weaknesses inherent in the regulations for the millers, since they fix only the gross profits that may be made, leaving the jobber free to earn what he can by efficient operation. The gross-profit margins allowed the jobbers are also more nearly in line with their average margin under normal conditions than is the 25 cents per barrel allowed the millers, which, as is stated elsewhere in this report, is a maximum, but taken in connection with the less than normal volume of output is regarded by many millers as "allowable."

11. Consideration is now being given by the United States Food Administration to the improvement of the present regulation of millers' profits in the light of experience thus far gained. It is the opinion of the commission that maximum prices of flour might be established, which would cover the cost of wheat and all manufacturing, selling, and general expenses, and in addition would give the miller a reasonable profit. The standardization of flour by the Food Administration renders the plan of fixing flour prices much easier of accomplishment than was possible before the varied character of the output of different mills was eliminated. Maximum prices established for different sections of the country would, of course, recognize differences in the cost of wheat and also in the other costs of large and small mills. This, or some similar plan, would make it profitable for millers to operate efficiently and keep costs down.

12. The United States Food Administration has created an enforcement division, whose duty it is to prevent profiteering and infractions of the rules, and this division is already accomplishing positive results. The Federal Trade Commission is cooperating with this division in checking up the accounts of flour millers, and will make public in future reports the results of its investigations.

WHEAT-FLOUR MILLS.

According to census figures, there were in 1914 about 7,000 merchant mills grinding wheat flours. Figures obtained from the United States Food Administration and other sources indicate that 100 mills probably produce 40 per cent of the total output of wheat flour; 200 mills, 60 per cent; and 1,000 mills, 80 per cent, while the remaining 6,000 or more merchant mills only produce about 20 per cent of the total.

A classification of 1,171 of the largest mills, according to capacity, showed the following:

Daily capacity.	Number of mills.
5,000 to 10,000 barrels	21
1,000 to 5,000 barrels	121
500 to 1,000 barrels	156

The manufacture of flour is a comparatively simple operation, and even in the largest mills the equipment is neither complicated nor expensive compared with the value of the product. The labor required in flour milling is also much less than in most other industries. This has made possible the construction and operation of small mills, which, except in New England and a few Southern States, still supply a considerable part of the local demand.

The total capacity of all merchant flour mills in the country is far in excess of what is needed to handle the wheat available for grinding, and except during the crop-moving season few mills are able to run at capacity. Notwithstanding this fact, new mills continue to be built each year. This excess of capacity has been facilitated by the small investment required, and is partly due to great local variations in grain production.

While merchant flour mills are found in almost every State in the United States, there has been a natural development of the industry and of large scale production in centers favorably located with respect to the principal wheat-producing regions. Minneapolis in the Northwest, Kansas City in the Southwest, and Buffalo on the Great Lakes are the largest of such milling centers. While the number of mills producing less than 100,000 barrels annually has declined noticeably since 1899, the number of mills producing more than this quantity has increased from 135 to 218, or more than 60 per cent.

There has been some concentration of the ownership of flour mills, but for the most part the industry is still characterized by a large number of relatively small concerns each operating a single mill.

PRODUCTION OF WHEAT FLOUR.

Census reports for 1914 show that 545,728,431 bushels of wheat were ground during that year. From this wheat 116,403,770 barrels of flour worth $543,839,568 were made. This represented a yield of about 1 barrel of flour and about 86 pounds of feed for each 4.7 bushels of wheat ground. The yield of flour varies somewhat from year to year and from mill to mill, depending upon the quality of wheat ground, the character of the equipment used, etc. During the 1917 crop year, for instance, some mills obtained a barrel of flour from about 4.5 bushels of wheat.

While complete figures for the domestic production of flour are not available for the years subsequent to 1914 the output is estimated to have ranged from 105,000,000 to 125,000,000 barrels with about 118,000,000 barrels as a yearly average. Of this quantity from 11,000,000 to 16,000,000 barrels have been exported annually. Imports of flour have been practically negligible, averaging only about 150,000 barrels a year.

DISTRIBUTION OF WHEAT FLOUR.

A considerable proportion of the flour milled in the United States is consumed at or near the place of production, but at least a half of the total output is sold in more distant domestic markets or exported. More than 75 per cent of the flour entering the competitive markets is produced by mills located in or near the three largest milling centers—Minneapolis, Kansas City, and Buffalo.

Many of the large flour mills maintain branch houses in the important distributing centers of the country for the marketing of their output to the grocery and bakery trade, but a considerable proportion of the domestic output of flour not sold at or near the place of production is distributed through the agency of middlemen, of which there are several classes, such as mill agents, brokers, and jobbers. The broker and mill agent usually sell flour in car lots on a commission basis, while the jobber buys flour for resale, and in most cases maintains a warehouse from which he delivers flour to his customers in small lots. There are a few large jobbers, however, who sell in car lots and do not maintain warehouses. The principal customers of the former type of jobber are the small bakers who buy on credit. The car-lot jobbers sell to larger domestic or export buyers, usually for cash.

COST AND PROFIT OF MILLING.

The commission obtained the costs and profits of some 75 milling companies operating 130 mills for the five fiscal years, 1912–13 to 1916–17. In most cases the fiscal year is the crop year ending in June, July, or August. A few companies, however, use the calendar year. In such cases the 1917 figures are for the first six months of the year only. The mills covered by the investigation include most of the larger and some of the smaller companies having a daily capacity of not less than 200 barrels. These mills are located in each of the important milling districts of the country, and together produce about 40 per cent of the total domestic output of wheat flour.

Great difficulty was experienced in obtaining accurate figures because of the unsatisfactory manner in which many companies kept their records. Even for the larger concerns it was often impossible to secure complete data, and this was generally true of the small companies investigated. In fact, very few millers were found who kept their records in a manner to show the actual and complete cost of making and selling their production of flour. Proper revisions of cost to correct these deficiencies were made, however, in the costs of production as determined by the commission.

The following tabulation shows in summary form the average results of operations of the mills covered by the investigation for the last five fiscal or crop years:

[1] This is the net cost of flour produced, taking into account the difference between the opening and closing flour inventories and also including gains or losses on unfilled orders.

[2] The investment per barrel of flour as revised is the average investment for the year after deducting all outside investments where shown and also good will trade marks, brands, etc., but including the value of rented plants.

The total cost of flour and feed includes the cost of wheat, operating expenses, cost of containers for flour and feed, general expenses, and selling expenses. From the total cost is deducted the value of the feed or offal, which is a by-product of flour milling, to determine the net cost of flour.

In the case of many mills the value of the feed produced could not be ascertained except by going back to the invoices, since these mills failed to keep a separate record of the quantities sold or of the proceeds of flour and feed sales. In such cases the commission has used the average value of feed of mills in the same territory whose records were kept in a manner to show this amount separately.

The practice of millers with respect to depreciation was found to vary greatly. Some did not treat it as a cost item, but were accustomed to charge off an arbitrary amount at the end of the year, others did not charge any, while still others were charging off too much. Since the practice of companies regarding depreciation varied so greatly, the commission has included in its costs a uniform charge of 3 cents a barrel. This is based on a rate of 2½ per cent on a fair investment in buildings and a rate of 5 per cent on a fair investment in equipment. This provides an adequate allowance for this cost factor and was the best method available under the circumstances.

The cost of flour, as shown in the table, does not include the items income tax, excess-profits tax, and interest on borrowed funds, but before arriving at the net operating profit interest on borrowed funds other than bonds has been deducted from "profit."

The investment per barrel of flour as revised by the commission is the average investment for the year after deducting all outside investments where shown, and also good will, trade-marks, brands, etc., but including the value of rented plants. The brands of most companies, of course, have a value, some being very valuable, but as it is difficult to capitalize these values, and as most mills do not include them in their investment, the commission found it advisable to eliminate them altogether.

The above summary table and the supplementary detailed tables given in Exhibits A and B show, among other things, the following:

The cost of wheat used constitutes most of the total cost of milling and selling flour.

The net cost of flour, obtained by deducting the value of the feed from the total cost, is practically equal to the cost of the wheat used, since the value of the feed or offal under normal conditions equals roughly the sum of all expenses of milling and selling except the cost of wheat. In the fiscal year 1916–17 the net cost of flour was less than the cost of the wheat, owing to the high prices obtained for feed. The recent regulations of the Food Administration reducing feed prices should tend to restore the usual relation.

The costs for the fiscal years 1914–15 and 1915–16 were considerably above those for the two preceding years, while the cost for 1916–17 showed a large increase over the preceding year, due principally to the greatly increased price paid for wheat. The slight variation in the number of mills included in the different years does not materially affect the comparison, since only the smaller mills are missing in particular years, and the aggregate production of the mills included is large.

During the fiscal years 1912–13 to 1915–16 from 85 to 90 per cent of the total output of the mills covered by the investigation was made and sold at a cost, exclusive of wheat and sacks, ranging from 30 to 60 cents per barrel, while during the year 1916–17 only about 48 per cent was produced within these limits of cost. In that year 85 per cent of the output was produced at a cost ranging from 40 to 80 cents per barrel.

The average margin of profit per barrel for the first four fiscal years covered by the investigation was very remunerative, but in 1916–17 this margin of profit showed a tremendous increase, due in part to exceptionally favorable speculative opportunities afforded by the rapid rise in wheat, flour, and feed prices. Stocks of wheat not hedged and of flour and feed not sold, as well as supplies of sacks and other materials, showed a large increase in value.

It is the general practice of millers to inventory their stocks according to market value. The effect of writing up the inventories of wheat, sacks, etc., as prices rose was to decrease the average costs of these items per barrel of flour, and the effect of writing up the flour inventories in this manner was to decrease the cost of sales. Both operations resulted in a corresponding increase of profits for a given year by including profits that would have been shown in the results of the following years' operations had the inventories been based on actual cost. It is probable that the profit derived from the sale of stocks of flour on hand at the beginning of the fiscal year 1916–17 represented about a fourth of the total profit made during that year as shown by the books of the companies. A considerable profit was also derived from the sale of feed at a higher price than was used in determining the price of flour, especially that sold ahead. In making a price on flour sales it is customary for the miller to base the deduction for feed on average values. Hence, in a rapidly rising market, such as occurred in 1917, the difference between the amount actually obtained for the feed when it was made and sold and such average values represented additional profits.

The commission has undertaken to ascertain what the profits of millers would have been if they had inventoried their wheat and their flour at the average cost instead of at the market price. For this purpose the records of 42 companies operating 93 mills have been analyzed, revised, and averaged. These companies include the principal concerns east of the Rocky Mountains, their combined output ranging from 38,000,000 to 44,000,000 barrels per year. The results are as follows:

Year.	Net sales.	Cost of sales.	Profit per barrel.	Profit per barrel less interest.[1]	Rate of net profit on investment.	Rate of profit on net sales.
					Per cent.	Per cent.
1912–13	$4.24	$4.09	$0.15	$0.12	10.6	2.4

1916–17	8.55	7.98	.57	.52	37.6	5.4

[1] Except bond interest.

The profits per barrel and rates of profit on investment and on net sales shown in the foregoing revised tabulation represent the profits realized on the operations for each year. It is interesting to compare these results with the profits shown by the books of millers given in the summary table, which include profits or losses accruing through change in the market value of flour and wheat held in stock. The method of inventorying at the market price showed its greatest effect in distorting the actual results of operations in the two years 1913–14 and 1915–16. At the close of the former year prices rose rapidly coincident with the outbreak of the European war. Consequently the closing inventories of wheat and flour made at the market price were considerably above the opening inventories, and the difference tended to reduce costs and increase profits. Instead of making on the average of 19 cents a barrel profit, as shown in the first summary table, the millers actually made only 12 cents a barrel in that year.

A similar condition existed in the year 1915–16. The exports of wheat to Europe were not as heavy as anticipated, while the production and sales of flour in the United States were very greatly increased over the year before. This caused the millers to sell their output at about the normal margin of profit and to carry over heavy stocks. Before the close of the year, however, the certainty of a short crop throughout the world caused a sharp rise in prices, and the writing up of inventories gave the millers a book profit of 22 cents instead of about 11 cents, which they actually earned during the year.

If we assume that the rate of profit on the sales of feed was the same as the rate on sales of flour, the margin of profit from this source would have amounted to the following:

Per barrel of flour:	Cents.
1912–13	2
1913–14	1½
1914–15	2½
1915–16	1½
1916–17	6

These figures indicate the increase in feed profits in 1916–17.

COSTS AND PROFITS OF FLOUR JOBBERS.

The commission obtained the costs and profits of five important car-lot jobbers and some 30 of the most important small-lot jobbers for the calendar years 1914 to 1916, inclusive, and for the first half of 1917. Less complete figures were also obtained for the year 1913. These jobbers were located in the principal distributing centers east of the Mississippi River. A summary of the results brought out by the investigation is shown in the tabulation below. More detailed figures are given in Exhibit C, where for convenience the jobbers are grouped according to size and the average results for each group are computed.

The gross profit per barrel of flour jobbers represents the difference between the selling price and the purchase price of flour handled. The expenses of flour jobbers consist of general office and selling expenses, bad debts, and for the small-lot jobbers, who maintain warehouses, cartage and storage in addition. No salaries of proprietors, partners, or officers are included in the expenses, since such salaries are not generally shown by the books.

The net profit per barrel of flour is obtained by deducting the expenses of doing business from the gross profit.

The summary table and the supplementary table given in Exhibit C show the following facts:

The gross profit, expenses, and net profit per barrel of flour of both classes of jobbers showed little change in 1914 and in 1915, but in 1916 and especially in the first half of 1917 there was a noticeable increase. The variation in the number of jobbers included in the average for each year does not materially affect the comparison except possibly in the case of the amount of investment per barrel for car-lot jobbers.

The average gross profit per barrel of car-lot jobbers increased from 28 cents in 1916 to 54.5 cents in the first half of 1917, while expenses, exclusive of salaries, only increased from 10 cents to 13.5 cents. Net profits per barrel therefore showed an increase from 18 cents to 41 cents, and the rate of profit on investment showed an increase from 31.5 per cent to 60.7 per cent.

The average gross profit per barrel of small-lot jobbers increased from 59 cents in 1916 to 86.3 cents in the first half of 1917, while the expenses exclusive of salaries increased only from 37.6 cents to 38.8 cents. Net profits per barrel of small-lot jobbers increased from 21 cents to 47.5 cents, and the rate of profit on investment increased from 26.2 per cent to 51.9 per cent.

MARKETING CONDITIONS AND PRACTICES.

The large number of flour mills in the country, absence of much concentration of ownership and overcapacity have always made competition keen in the flour-milling industry, but since the outbreak of the European war in 1914 competition has been increasingly reduced by the abnormal conditions which have developed. The foreign demand for both wheat and flour has greatly increased, so that, on the one hand, the millers have obtained a smaller proportion of the domestic supply of wheat for grinding, and on the other hand, have had a broader market for their output of flour.

The commission's investigation disclosed that competitive conditions in the industry had developed some marketing practices on the part of millers which were open to criticism but none that were particularly vicious. Such practices as did exist have been largely done away with for the duration of the war by the regulations of the United States Food Administration.

The Washburn-Crosby Co., the largest flour miller in the United States, was found to have been operating several controlled companies without identifying them, but voluntarily discontinued this practice after the investigation was begun, and is now marking all of its brands with the name "Washburn-Crosby." The operation of unidentified subsidiaries gives the controlling company an unfair advantage over its competitors in the distribution of its products and if allowed to continue is likely to spread from one company to another until a whole industry may become demoralized. (See report of the Federal Trade Commission on the Fertilizer Industry, Aug. 19, 1916.)

One of the worst evils of the flour business is the multiplication of brands, many of which are not identified by the name of any concern. Heavily advertised brands usually bear the name of the manufacturer or the distributor, but there are a large number of brands sold that bear no name to which responsibility for poor quality can be attached. It is on such brands that price cutting is apt to be most objectionable.

The pure-food law requires the correct weight to be put on the sack but does not require the name of the manufacturer or distributor. It would undoubtedly make for much better marketing conditions in the industry if such identification of all flour sold were required.

The worst practice found among distributors was that of contracting ahead for as large a quantity of flour as the mills would sell with the intention of calling for deliveries if the price went up but of repudiating their obligations if the price went down. This practice was almost entirely confined to more or less irresponsible concerns attracted into the business by the prospects of large profits. It has been effectually prevented for the duration of the war by the regulations of the Food Administration which forbids mills to sell flour more than 30 days ahead of actual delivery.

The flour-milling industry is characterized by a large number of trade associations, such as the Millers' National Federation, the Southeastern Millers' Association of Nashville, the Millers' Exchange of Kansas City, the Ohio Millers' State Association, Indiana Millers' Association, etc. Some of these associations publish daily price lists for flour based upon reports made by their members. It is probable that these price lists tend to modify competitive conditions in the selling of flour at least within the region covered by an association. This matter is now under investigation by the commission.

PROGRESS OF REGULATIONS.

The large profits made by flour millers and flour jobbers in the first half of 1917 emphasized the necessity for governmental control of the situation during the period of the war. Although only eight months have elapsed since the food-control bill became a law and the United States Food Administration was organized much has already been accomplished for the protection of the public. The guaranteed price of wheat for the 1917 and 1918 crops has been fixed and the distribution of wheat placed under the supervision of the Food Administration Grain Corporation, organized in August, 1917. The prices and profits of flour millers have been regulated through the agency of the milling division of the United States Food Administration, also organized in August, 1917.

The plan of regulation adopted provides, briefly, that each miller must have a Federal license to operate. Failure to comply with the regulations of the Food Administration makes the miller liable to have his license revoked. The different grades of wheat available for grinding are distributed pro rata among the millers by the Grain Corporation on the basis of the quantity ground during the years 1914, 1915, and 1916. Many of the millers have entered into a voluntary agreement not to pay more than the Government price for their wheat.

The maximum profits of flour millers have been fixed at 25 cents a barrel on flour and 50 cents a ton on feed, which is equivalent to about 1.7 cents per barrel on flour. The millers are required to file reports each month with the Food Administration showing their costs and profits.

The number of pounds of wheat that can be used in producing a barrel of flour has been fixed, and the miller is not allowed to separate the flour into high and low grades. Consequently, millers who have spent considerable sums in advertising special brands are no longer able to supply these brands to the trade. The maximum price of bran in ton lots at the mill door has been fixed at 35 per cent of the cost of a ton of wheat. Other feeds must be sold at fixed differentials above the price of bran.

All the important flour jobbers have been licensed and their profits regulated by the United States Food Administration, but in a somewhat different manner from those of the millers. The maximum gross profit of car-lot jobbers has been fixed at 25 cents a barrel and of small-lot jobbers at from 50 to 75 cents per barrel.

Before the above regulations became effective wheat prices had risen to about $3 a bushel, flour prices at the mill had risen in some instances above $16 a barrel, and bread prices had risen in some places to 10 cents for less than a 16-ounce loaf, with every indication of a continued rise in prices as a result of war-time conditions. Since the regulations have been effective wheat prices have been reduced to $2.20 per bushel for the best grade in the Chicago market, and wholesale flour prices to from $10 to $11 a barrel at the mill for most mills. Bread prices were reduced as low as 7 or 8 cents for a 16-ounce loaf in most of the larger cities, but have recently been quite generally increased, either by raising the price or reducing the size of the loaf.

While the regulation of millers' profits by the United States Food Administration has accomplished much for the protection of the public, the present system has certain defects which suggest the advisability of modification.

The plan of allowing each miller to make his own prices of flour on the basis of cost plus a maximum profit of 25 cents a barrel makes it possible for him to pass on to the public any increase in cost due to mismanagement or inefficiency or any padding of costs due to misunderstanding or dishonesty.

The monthly reports of costs and profits which the millers make to the United States Food Administration were intended to furnish a check on their operations and also to serve as a practical basis for the enforcement of the regulations and the detection of major violations. These reports, however, would be of more value if they were supplemented by a comprehensive plan of audit, for the only certain method of ascertaining whether millers are conforming to the regulations would be a continuous audit by a competent force of accountants.

The present regulations of flour millers' profits also appear to have given them a larger profit than they were accustomed to make under normal conditions, which, on the average, was not over 12 cents to 15 cents a barrel. The commission's investigation of costs and profits for recent months indicates that 25 cents a barrel is being taken by many millers as a guaranteed net profit after paying all income and excess-profit taxes, although the 25 cents is interpreted by the Food Administration as a maximum, and although the Food Administration has ruled distinctly that income and excess-profit taxes are not to be included in costs. The enforcement division of the Food Administration is charged with securing future compliance with this ruling and with the regulations in general.

A margin of 25 cents a barrel net would give the larger millers, at least, an excessive profit, as compared with that normally made, if they produce the usual quantity of flour this year. Many millers, however, will not be able to reach a normal production. The uncertainties as to the probable production have made it necessary for millers to estimate what they should make during the period of full production in order to obtain the allowable profit on their entire year's operations, including some slack months. Some have been less conservative in their estimates than others, and it is quite probable that they will make more than the regulations provide. The commission is informed that a plan has been devised for penalizing such mills.

Under the present regulations there are about as many different prices for flour as there are mills, which makes it impossible for the buyer to know whether he is paying a fair price or not. Furthermore, a considerable variation in prices charged by different mills in the same locality naturally arouses the suspicion—sometimes unjustified—that the higher priced mill is profiteering.

The control of flour prices could be much simplified by grouping the mills according to regions, and also according to size, and fixing a maximum price for flour for each group, based upon the wheat cost, and sufficient to cover manufacturing, selling, and general expenses, and also a fair profit to the miller.

If the selling price of flour were thus fixed and made a matter of public knowledge, any attempt to secure an excess price could be much more easily detected than at present. Furthermore, the elaborate monthly cost and profit reports, which have proved burdensome, especially to the small miller, and are of doubtful utility as a means of securing compliance with the regulations, could be simplified or done away with entirely. By eliminating them the overhead expenses of the millers would be reduced to that extent.

Arrangements have been made for the appointment of a special committee headed by Dr. F. W. Taussig, chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, to investigate the regulations of flour millers and make recommendations for the improvement of these regulations before the beginning of the next crop year.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly hopeless for me to attempt a discussion of this very important measure in the time allotted. It is of such vital importance to the Nation and so far-reaching in its consequences that I can do little more than suggest the motives which inspire me to support the Senate amendment.

I trust that I may be given credit for speaking from a disinterested standpoint. I do not appear here as a special pleader, but, on the contrary, my purpose in addressing you is national in aspect and consequence as distinguished from local.

Wheat is not the principal crop in my district. Ordinarily it is raised there as a part of a crop rotation which time and experience have dictated as advisable. I have received but one request to support the Senate amendment, while, on the other hand, many farmers have written me requesting me to vote against it. My knowledge of the Nation's needs, however, and the voluminous testimony submitted to the committee leave me no choice but to urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, my observation of life's philosophy has convinced me that no true thing is ever out of harmony with the incidents, the facts, the laws of existence, and no false thing is ever congenial to those elements which go to make up the general order. If it should be related to-morrow that at this hour and in this Chamber I addressed myself to this conference report, such statement would be corroborated by every fact of life. If, on the other hand, it should be related to-morrow that at this hour I was elsewhere and engaged in some other activity, such statement would be corroborated by nothing and disputed by everything. It would be out of harmony with every fact and incident relating to me as the speaker and to you as the listener.

When the conference report on the food-control bill was before this House last August I stated that never in the progress of time had the operation of natural law disturbed the equilibrium, for the reason that natural laws are founded upon the eternal equities and constitute the verities of life. So true are they that the harmonies are always preserved and conflicts are impossible. I then stated that legislative price fixing contrary to the natural law of supply and demand would prove mischievous and disappointing. Unfortunately my fears have been justified.

Every farm product has been submitted to the operation of this natural law save wheat. Corn, oats, barley, rye, and other grains, in response to an abnormal demand and uncontrolled by legislation, have ascended to dizzy heights, so that to-day wheat is the most unprofitable crop the farmer can raise. An acre of barley returns to-day approximately twice the financial return that an acre of wheat does. Corn and oats at the present price are more profitable than wheat. Consequently our experiment in price fixing to stimulate production has resulted in a condition involving the absurdity of an attempt to increase production by reducing the profit to the producer. The Nation needs wheat as one of the vital essentials to the successful prosecution of the war. My sole interest is the production of wheat to meet the needs of the Nation. Taking into consideration the personal equation and having some regard for the inherent selfishness of man, I can not resist the conclusion that if other crops are more profitable to the producer than wheat, then crops other than wheat will be planted. The testimony before the committee shows conclusively that an imperial domain in this country will be planted in grains other than wheat if the price of wheat does not approximate the price of other cereals.

There is nothing personal in my view, because the first district of Nebraska has a greater wheat acreage than ever before, but the testimony before the committee shows a far different condition throughout the Nation.

I regret that I am so limited in time. Anyone who attempts to discuss this question in the time I have should have a guardian appointed.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman is making a good job of it.

Mr. REAVIS. Let me hurriedly take another view of it. At the present price of farm products wheat is the cheapest feed for live stock on the farm. This statement was repeatedly made to the committee and conclusively proved. The Breeders' Gazette, a recognized authority on farming, contained an article in its issue last week that two-thirds of the wheat consumed in America during the past two months was fed to live stock. This is not true with those farmers I represent, but that it is approximately correct in many localities is amply sustained by the hearings. So that the result of this false thing we call price fixing is not only to curtail production but to materially reduce the supply provided for human consumption. So long as live stock can be fattened on wheat more profitably than it can on corn, just so long will wheat be fed.

Gentlemen, there is nothing worth while now but the country. Whatever of individual sacrifice is essential to the Nation's welfare must be endured. I would not vote for $2.50 wheat if the sole end to be obtained were to increase the profit to the farmer. I am too sensitive to the needs and the hardships of the poor to do that. But we must in some measure repair the evil of the price fixing in the food-control bill by bringing the price of wheat nearer to the price which the operation of the law of supply and demand would fix if not interfered with, if we are to have sufficient wheat to meet national needs. We must adjust the price of wheat to the price of other grains if we are to stimulate production and conserve the supply for human consumption. For these reasons I shall vote to increase the price to $2.50 a bushel, though I should greatly prefer to repeal the price-fixing act and leave wheat where cotton and powder and steel and other war necessities are to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERMYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who has just preceded me stated that some farm paper has made the statement that two-thirds of the wheat that has been produced or is now in possession of the farmers was being fed to live stock. That paper, if it made that statement, is just simply mistaken as to the facts in reference to the matter. The Agricultural Department, in a recent statement, has furnished facts showing that statement to be absolutely incorrect. They have a survey and have reports from throughout the United States, and I assume the Government at this time is busying itself to find out exactly what the condition of the wheat supply is in the different sections of the country.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the gentleman will permit, I would suggest that the gentleman who preceded the gentleman from Mississippi has just left the room, and I think what the gentleman said was that it was the cheapest food upon the farm, but not that they were feeding it.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. He stated that this paper said the farmers were feeding it. The gentleman did not make the statement of his own knowledge. If he had I would have accepted it. He stated it only on the statement made in this farm paper.

Mr. STEENERSON. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the statement issued by the Department of Agriculture of the crop estimates, the last statement has not been printed, according to my recollection, shows a large amount, several million bushels——

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Wheat may have been fed in a limited amount in isolated localities, but taking the country generally throughout the United States the statement is not in accordance with the facts furnished by the Agricultural Department. The department has issued a statement very recently showing the facts to be very different from the above statement. The statement of the department was made in March. Now, gentlemen, this Senate amendment is the question which is pending before the House.

The amendment is to guarantee the price of the several standards of grain of the crop of 1918, based upon No. 2 northern spring wheat, at not less than $2.50 a bushel at the local elevator or the local railway station where such wheat is delivered from the farm where produced. Now, I submit to you that there is no machinery of this Government that can administer that amendment if it should be put in operation in the country to-day. You could not administer it, because it would be an impossibility to have somebody at every local elevator and every local railway station and at every place where there was a wagon load of wheat, and for that reason certainly the amendment ought not to be agreed to, but should be defeated by a decisive vote.

Now, then, the food-control bill put it in the power and discretion of the President of the United States to fix by proclamation the guaranteed minimum price of wheat. He has done that, knowing all the conditions that exist throughout the country, because he has every means for obtaining information. The whole power of the Government is being used in order to ascertain not only what the quantity of wheat is, not only what the crop of wheat in hand is, but, in addition to that, to know what the plantings are, what the acreage is, and what the reasonable prospect of production is. Then, when the President of the United States knows all these facts and has them all in his possession, it is not reasonable to believe that he would fix a price that would absolutely destroy all stimulation of the production of wheat, realizing not only the necessity of having it for our own people but for our allies across the seas, to be utilized for the prosecution of the war.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I have not the time. I am very fond personally of my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] and I would yield if I had the time; but I have not, and hence must decline.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Therefore it is absolutely inconceivable to me that the membership of this House would for one moment give credence to a proposition of that character. The President of the United States has his heart and soul absolutely bound up in the success of this war, as we all have. Every energy of our hearts and every fiber of our nature are bound up in bringing about victory and glory to the American flag. I say it is best to leave it in the hands of the President of the United States, because this law, which is upon the statute book to-day provides that from time to time, as the necessities of the case may require, he can fix the minimum price by proclamation and issue that proclamation to the country. [Applause.] When our boys are fighting and dying to save our country I would take my coat off my back and the shoes off my feet, if necessary, to help, and the President would, too, and therefore I beg you to trust him in this emergency, and if the facts require it he will do what is necessary. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Therefore it is better to leave it in his hands and in his discretion than to attempt to nail it down by law.

That is the trouble with this whole situation to-day. Before our committee the wheat growers from all over the country came pleading with us to fix the price of wheat. We sat there day after day and gave them a patient hearing. They asked that we fix the price of wheat. When we refused to do it in the bill that came from the House Committee on Agriculture they went to the Senate.

I presume there they renewed their agitation and their solicitations and their persuasive powers with the Senate and with the Senate committee, and the Senate of the United States was the body that fixed the price of $2. I was a member of the conference committee, and I know I was appealed to day after day by the membership of the House representing wheat districts and by these same people who had been before our committee, and asked to agree to fix the price of wheat—to agree to that amendment to fix it at $2. We did it, and now some of them complain after it is done.

When you say the farmers of this country will not produce wheat, I say it is not fair and to do so is to question their patriotism. There is no more patriotic citizenship in the United States than those who are producing the necessities on which we live and the products required to sustain ourselves and our allies across the seas in the struggle in which we are engaged. [Applause.] The farmers in my country are patriots, God bless them. Their sons are in the ranks. They want them fed. They want wheat raised. They will do without biscuits. They will eat corn bread. Yes, they will, if necessary, live on the "crumbs that fall from the Master's table" to win this war. He who doubts the farmers of America has lost faith in the strength of the Republic. "Your right hand may forget its cunning," but let me appeal to you to never forget the patriotism of the producers from the soil. They have never failed the Republic from the Revolution to this date, and they never will. [Applause.] They live close to nature. They see the flowers bloom, hear the birds sing, and admire all that is beautiful, and work for all that is useful, and their hearts are with the country in this awful struggle, and they will do their full duty. The President has fixed the minimum guaranteed price. Stand by him and reject all amendments, and you will serve our country and our allies. [Applause.]

Recently there was a conference of the agricultural advisory committee of the agricultural producers, consisting of 23 members from all parts of the United States, and they unanimously recommended against any change in the guaranteed price of wheat. They were disinterested, and acted only in the interest of the whole country. They had all the facts.

The Secretary of Agriculture is in accord with them. Will you turn down the President when he has acted, the Secretary of Agriculture who agrees with the President, and this advisory committee, who is only interested in the welfare of the country, and all wanting to win the war as sincerely as you and I and every other real patriotic American? I can not believe you will.

Here is an article in the Scientific American of April 6, showing the wheat situation in the world of wheat supply entitled "Wheat and Ships." Listen to it:

WHEAT AND SHIPS.

We may perhaps, safely assume that it is now understood why our allies must have wheat instead of something else or nothing at all. So much has been written under this head that it seems hardly unfair to conclude that those who can not see are those who will not see. The essential facts are as portrayed graphically in the map on another page of this issue. Let us, then, accept the statement that England, France, and Italy between them must import 450,000,000 bushels of wheat before the next harvest, and that of this total 100,000,000 bushels are coming from Canada. Where will the balance of 350,000,000 bushels be found?

Now, in addition to Canada and the United States, and excluding Russia for obvious reasons, the world's great wheat-growing centers are those of Australia, Argentina, and India. Australia had, last year, such a prodigious crop that she had to store much of it in the open pending the construction of temporary cover. Her surplus available for export is 150,000,000 bushels. At the same time Argentina has a surplus of 100,000,000 bushels; and India can spare an amount which, in the absence of authenticated figures, we can only assume to be up to the mark of 100,000,000 bushels necessary to complete the tale.

Here, then, in these three places we have all the wheat the allies need. But shipping conditions are such that it is not possible to get it thence to them. From Australia and India the only route now available is that via the Cape of Good Hope, the Suez alternative being ruled out by the fact that the Mediterranean is the zone of greatest danger and least protection from the U-boats. On this basis, it is 12,500 miles from the Australian ports to Liverpool and 12,000 miles from Bombay; while the trans-Atlantic passage from Buenos Ayres is one of 6,250 miles.

It is obvious enough that it will take more ships and more time to haul a given amount of wheat 12,000 miles or 6,000 miles than to carry the same cargo 3,000 miles, the average distance of the North Atlantic seaports from western European points. But until we submit the situation to careful analysis we can get no adequate idea of how serious the difference is.

It takes 48 pounds of wheat to make a cubic foot, and 1¾ cubic feet to make a bushel. Accordingly, at 60 pounds per bushel, there are 33⅓ bushels of the grain in a ton. The amounts mentioned above as available in Australia, in India, and in Argentina reduce, on this basis, the first to 4,500,000 tons, the other two each to 3,000,000 tons. Multiplying each of these figures by the corresponding mileage, we discover that to move to Europe the wheat surplus of Australia would employ 56,250,000,000 ton-miles of shipping; of India, 36,000,000,000 ton-miles; of Argentina, 18,750,000,000 ton-miles. As a net result we have that in meeting the wheat needs of our allies from these quarters we would be obliged to use up 111,000,000,000 ton-miles of shipping.

If, on the other hand, we convert 350,000,000 bushels of American wheat into 10,500,000 tons, and ship this amount over the 3,000-mile route from Boston and New York and Montreal, we shall come off with an expenditure of barely one-quarter as much shipping—31,500,000,000 ton-miles, to be exact.

Comment is hardly necessary. Even the latter figure involves 3,150,000 miles of steaming by 10,000-ton ships, or 6,250,000 miles of service by 5,000-ton vessels—and the latter figure comes much nearer the average for the available bottoms than does the former. This is in itself a serious enough drain upon our resources; to multiply it by four would be quite out of the question. It would be out of the question if there were involved no element of exposure to hostile attack. But there is such exposure; and it is almost superfluous to point out that the danger zone is vastly wider for vessels approaching England from the south than for those sailing into port from the west.

It is true that we have no wheat left for export, save what can be got by reducing our normal consumption. But we can, in this fashion, get wheat; and we can not, in this fashion, get ships. So there is but one answer; we must save the wheat and ship it over the shorter and safer route to our allies. In no other way can they be fed; for multiplication of our available shipping by four is not merely inconvenient—it is impossible.

This shows we must furnish the wheat. Our great and beloved President, full of patriotism, will do all that is necessary to stimulate production. He knows the facts. We can trust him. Leave it to him. If it is necessary to fix a higher price, he will do it. To vote against what he has already done is to doubt him. You can not, you will not doubt him. If you do not, you will vote against all amendments and let us go back to conference. I am for the President and my country—are you? [Great applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] to use some time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that Congress made a very grave mistake when it started out to fix the price of farm products. I believe that it has been a failure. Every effort to fix prices of any commodities in the hands of the producer has been a failure, and I believe if this amendment as passed by the Senate is adopted it will fail of its purpose.

I have no doubt that if we had not attempted to fix the price of wheat a year ago there would have been a much greater acreage of wheat sown for the coming crop than there has been. Congress can fix the price of wheat, but it can not fix the worth of wheat. The worth of wheat is fixed by a law that is higher and more inexorable than any law that we can put upon the statute books. The law of supply and demand is just as infallible and just as inexorable as the law of gravity, and the Congress can not change it.

Now, if in fixing the price of wheat we fix it too low—that is, if we fix it at less than the wheat is worth at the time it is marketed, and no human intelligence can foretell at this time what wheat will be worth when the coming crop is marketed—if we fix the price of wheat too low, wheat will disappear from the markets. When we fix the price of anything too low, that commodity is bound to disappear from the markets. If we fix the price of wheat too low, the farmers will raise corn and oats and rye. If we fix it too high, then one of two things will happen. Either there will be no purchasers, or, if the people do continue to buy and consume wheat, then they are compelled by our act to pay more than it is worth, we have made them the victims of legalized extortion.

This question of value is not determined altogether by the cost of production. It is a relative term, and if the farmers can make more profit in producing some other crop than wheat at the price we fix they will produce something else; they will not produce wheat.

Two dollars and a half a bushel may be a very high price for wheat or it may be a very low price. When corn is 50 cents a bushel and rye and barley are 60 to 75 cents a bushel, then $2.50 is a very high price. It is much more than it is worth. When rye and barley are worth $2.50, then that would be a very low price for wheat. Under those conditions the farmer will produce rye and barley because it can be produced more cheaply. They are more certain crops and the yield is larger. Wheat would disappear from the market. We can not tell now what these commodities will be worth at harvest time, and, not knowing, we ought not to pass legislation that is bound to do harm either to the producer or the consumer of wheat. The farmer is entitled to receive for his products just what they are worth, no more and no less, and that is all he is demanding. He is willing to take his chance on the natural law of production and consumption. That position is entirely fair both to him and to the consumer.

Now, under the power we gave the administration, they undertook to fix the price of bran to help out the dairymen of the country, who were paying, it seemed to everybody, exorbitant prices for bran for their dairy herds. They fixed it, as I remember, at $27 a ton. The average dairyman can not buy a ton of bran anywhere in the country at $27 a ton.

Mr. KNUTSON. Forty dollars.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. The price is $40 or $45. Wherever they go to buy they are told that the fixed price applies only to carload lots, and the average consumer of bran is paying from 30 to 50 per cent higher than the fixed price, and they are the people that were intended to be helped.

Now, I think if the law which we passed giving power to the administration to fix the price on certain commodities were administered along the line that it was intended to be administered by Congress, as I understood it would be administered and as everybody understood it would be administered, there would have been no attempt to fix the price of wheat or any other commodity in the hands of the producer.

The only time when the Government is justified in interfering with prices is when the price is monopolistic. There can be no monopoly prices of any commodity in the hands of the farmers. At no time can farmers fix a monopoly price on anything that they produce. The farmer never fixes the price of the commodity which he has to sell. The only time when the Government ought to interfere with the price of anything is when there is a monopoly. Now, it was thought by all of us, I believe, when we gave the administration the power to fix prices—at least it was so stated on the floor of this House, and Mr. Hoover said the same thing—that there was no intention to fix the price of wheat in the bins of the farmer. It was said that that should go to the market at what it was worth and what the market would pay for it, and that they would then undertake to regulate the price to the consumer by fixing the profit to the middleman. He is the man who may make monopolistic prices, and he is the man that we ought to seek to regulate. [Applause.]

I confidently believe the Food Administration would have proceeded along these lines if Congress had kept its hands off. If we had not fixed by legislation the minimum price of wheat at $2, the Food Administration would not have undertaken to interfere with the price which the farmer was to receive for his wheat. It would have permitted the wheat to flow from the farm to the elevator at just what it was worth, and it would have been more than $2. Then the administration would have said, under that law, to the middleman and the speculator that there shall be no monopoly; they would have said to these men, "You shall have a fair profit, and no more," and the flour would have flowed from the mill to the consumer at a less price than he has been paying. We should at least have given them a chance to accomplish the purpose of the law as we intended it. We made a mistake when we fixed the price then, and we ought to correct it now by defeating this Senate amendment.

Mr. LESHER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, in the few moments I shall engage your attention I shall make no selfish or groveling plea for the American farmer. He neither expects it, desires it, or deserves it.

I repeat, in the few moments I shall consume on this $2.50 wheat amendment I shall not indulge in high-sounding phrases, silly flattery, or any vote-getting overtures to the American farmer. Such conduct on the part of Members here will neither deceive nor benefit the farmer. Neither will it beget his lasting friendship. His service in this great war entitles him to better treatment than to be cajoled, flattered, and held up as a patriotic screen between the Members of Congress and the fall election.

COMPARATIVE CROP YIELD PER ACRE IN BUSHELS AND DOLLARS.

The average yield of wheat per acre throughout the United States is 14 bushels. The average price of wheat per bushel under the Hoover regulation on April 1, 1918, was a little less than $2. Hence, with an average yield per acre of 14 bushels and an average price of $2 per bushel the yield in dollars per acre to the wheat grower would be fourteen times $2, or $28 per acre.

The average yield of corn per acre throughout the United States is 26 bushels. The average price throughout the United States on April 1, 1918, was $1.54. Hence, an acre planted to corn will yield twenty-six times $1.54, or $40.04.

The average yield per acre of oats throughout the United States is 36 bushels. The average price per bushel on April 1 was 89 cents. Hence, an acre of land planted to oats will yield thirty-six times 89 cents, or $32.

The average yield per acre of cotton throughout the United States is 160 pounds of lint cotton. The average price per pound on April 1 was 31.8 cents per pound. Hence, an acre of land planted to cotton by the farmer will yield one hundred and sixty times 32 cents, or $51.20.

Thus it will be observed that land planted to wheat will yield $28 per acre; corn, $40.04 per acre; oats, $32 per acre; and cotton, $51.20 per acre.

It does not require a philosopher, it does not require a logician, it does not require a Congressman or the combined judgment of a Congress to know that under this condition of affairs the farmer will plant the crop that yields him the largest return in dollars and cents. Hence, the regulation of the price of wheat, which was intended to stimulate and increase the production of wheat, has, in fact, stifled it; instead of assuring a high price to the farmer it has made certain a low price; instead of securing a big crop it has made certain a small crop; instead of supplying the world with bread it is denying it to the world; instead of wheat maintaining a value which will retain it as human food it has reduced the value until it has become stock food; instead of doing good, as was intended, it has done harm, as was not intended.

Mr. AYRES. And it is not too late yet to plow up wheat fields where the average will be 8 or 10 bushels to the acre and to plant that ground in corn, and so destroy that much of the wheat crop.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true, too, perhaps. I hope, however, no farmer will do that. Every hope that I have is that the farmer will be brave, will be self-sacrificing—will not only do his share but more than his share. Those at the front have the hardest time of it; we behind in all walks of life have the easiest time; they offer all; we behind the line, in the very nature of things can only offer a little. Let us all do that ungrudgingly, uncomplainingly. Let us all do our part and not expect the American farmer to do it all.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it the gentleman's contention, then, that $2.50 is too little, and that we ought to fix the price at $3 or $4?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman can draw his own conclusion, and he does not embarrass me by asking that question. The figures, based on undisputed facts, will answer him more intelligently than I can, and more eloquently, as well.

Another thing, I have been told that it has been asserted hither and thither that even the farmers of America were not in favor of this increase. I do not know whether they are or not. The man who tries to quote anybody always does it at his own peril, but I have here a short letter from the president of the farmers' union. I do not know whether it represents them or not. He is their president and has been for a good many years. It is only a few lines, and I will read it:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 10, 1918.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FERRIS: The question has arisen as to the attitude of organized farmers on the Senate amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill, providing a price of $2.50 per bushel for 1918 wheat to the farmer. Personally I am in favor of the amendment, and know that more than 90 per cent of organized farmers are for it, regardless of location or what they raise.

Very respectfully,

C. S. BARRETT,
President Farmers' Union.

I repeat, I do not suppose Mr. Barrett either knows, or claims to know, all the wants of the farmer, but he does know a plain fact that everyone ought to know.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. And yet Mr. C. S. Barrett was on the committee that fixed the price of wheat at $2.50.

Mr. FERRIS. That is very true. It is also true that Mr. Barrett did not have his way on the committee.

Mr. LEVER. The report of the committee was absolutely unanimous.

Mr. FERRIS. We often have unanimous reports that represent the views of very few of the men who are coerced to agree to them.

Mr. BAER. They fixed their price at $2.20 on a promise that they would get bread for 5 cents a loaf, and they have not gotten it yet, and they never will get it. They were promised that, but they were deceived.

WELL-MEANING MEMBERS OF CONGRESS FROM CITY DISTRICTS AND NONWHEAT-GROWING SECTIONS PURSUE SHORT-SIGHTED POLICY IN OPPOSING $2.50 WHEAT.

Mr. FERRIS. Members of Congress from city districts and nonwheat-growing sections are to-day opposing $2.50 a bushel for wheat. They do it on the theory that they are serving the consumer. Their purpose is well meaning, but, in effect, they are unwittingly betraying the consumer. They are supporting and advocating a policy that will diminish the opportunity of the toilers of the country to secure wheat bread at any price. Their course here to-day is one that will cause the 20,000,000 toilers of the country to pay a high price for corn bread they do not want, and render impossible of securement wheat bread they do want, at any price. Such a course while well intended will prove disastrous to the toilers they seek to serve; a discrimination and an unfairness to the farmer they seek to curb; and so far as I can observe render no good service either to producer or consumer.

AMERICAN FARMERS NOT DISLOYAL.

It has been hinted here and elsewhere, doubtless through lack of knowledge, or perhaps through political exigency, that the American farmer is less patriotic than the rest. This charge will strike no terror to the honest, patriotic farmer who is producing each year more than he himself consumes. This slanderous untruth heaped upon him will neither deter him nor disturb him in his patriotism to the country, his attention to duty, his continued tilling of the soil, and his undivided efforts to earn a livelihood for his family on the farm. It will not cool his patriotism, it will not retard his industry; it will only prove the lack of knowledge and the unworthiness of the charge made.

The more I think on the subject, the more I study the awkward working and operation of the law, the more convinced I am that the fixing of prices by legislative bodies on one commodity while all other commodities go free and unrestrained is economically unsound, if not entirely indefensible.

TOLL OF THE WAR HEAVY FOR ALL TO BEAR—ALL SHOULD CONTRIBUTE TO ITS SUPPORT.

The toll of the war has been heavy to endure. The end may or may not be in sight. We have seen our brave boys sent to the front to make their last offering in the cause of liberty; we have seen the tears of the mothers of the land anxiously bidding their boys a last good-by. We have seen our property burdened and taken by taxes. We have seen occasional American citizens disloyal to their flag and their country. Still amidst it all, and even if it be ten times worse, the six and a half million farmers of the Republic will go forward uncomplainingly with upturned faces in an effort first to serve the world; second, in an effort to feed the world, and the bickerings of the day will neither deter them nor interrupt them in the steadfast course of patriotism and service they have mapped out. [Applause.]

May we not, therefore, in justice this day humbly ask the Members from the city districts and nonwheat-growing sections to pursue no short-sighted and unfair policy to the American farmer? May we not, therefore, in justice appeal for your help to remove a burden and a regulation that has proven discouraging, disconcerting, uneconomic, and unworkable for the American farmer? The Republic has been so good to all of us, let us all in turn be good to it. Let each one do his part, let each one make his sacrifice, let each one stand erect to duty the day that duty calls, but do not require any class of citizens to be singled out, regulated, and depressed, when to do so does not achieve the end sought.

The Nation wants wheat, the Nation must have wheat; the allies want wheat, the allies must have wheat. I will without quaver or hesitancy support any policy that will get wheat; I will without a tremor or a fear oppose any policy that will deny us wheat. Theories are good for debating societies. Practicability alone will stand the test of war. The Nation has a right to expect practicability of us. Nothing short of practicability will suffice, nothing else do our constituents ask or demand. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I also yield him five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the fixing of the minimum price of wheat at $2.50 is wrong. The argument of the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma shows the futility of the attempt to fix the minimum price of wheat at $2.50. If it is more profitable for the farmer to produce corn, if he can get $80 from an acre by producing corn, and with the increased minimum price he will get only $36 for wheat, it necessarily follows that we must increase his price somewhere near $80 to induce him to produce wheat. By his own figures the gentleman from Oklahoma showed that his argument is untenable. He can not get away from his own figures. The question addressed to him by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] was to the point. If the farmer of Oklahoma could get $80 by producing corn and $36 based on a minimum price of $2.50, you will have no wheat at all from Oklahoma.

The claim is made that these measures are socialistic. They are nothing of the kind. The trouble with legislation of this kind is that it is the socialism of the fool. That is what it is. You can not take from one class to give to another. You can not take off a burden from one group and impose it upon the rest of the community. To do so is certainly not socialistic.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. No; I do not want to get into a controversy with the gentleman on socialism; I have only enough time to abuse and not to do anything more. [Laughter.] If the gentleman will get me more time, I will be glad to take it up. You can not fix the minimum price for a product so essential as wheat and refuse to fix prices for other necessaries without doing injustice to the great masses of the people. You must do one of two things. You must either permit the National Government to regulate the prices of all articles essential to sustain life or abandon the attempt to control the price of one article only. You can not attempt to fix arbitrarily the price of one commodity and leave everything else to chance. Every effort to fix prices arbitrarily for a few articles only has failed throughout the world. There is not a country which has succeeded; not even Germany has succeeded, and there is no place where the power of the State rules the entire life of the individual as it does in Germany.

When the old Russian Government tried to fix the price of grain the peasants refused to sell, preferring to lose it altogether rather than sell at what they thought a low price as compared with the prevailing prices for the things they had to buy.

It is impossible in the present flux of things to fix either a minimum or a maximum price. When you talk about the evil of profiteering you amuse me. Society to-day is based on profiteering. It is all profiteering. Business is organized for profit. You want a business man, a man who has something to sell to the rest of the world, you want him not to be inspired by profit and to be guided by the common weal. You want him to acquire a collective soul. He has none. He has not been trained to develop it. You have been telling him to go out into the world and get the better of the world if he can. Competition is your highest law. Individual against individual, group against group, class against class, all against everybody, everybody against all—such is the law of competition. To stop competition in one article and leave it unchecked in everything else is poor wisdom, indeed. Carlyle epitomized the situation when he said that out of the sum total of individual rascalities you can not produce a collective nobility. [Laughter.] Everyone for himself, although the world is on fire and whole nations are threatened with destruction. That is business, is it not? It is the law of business that you people support, you Republicans and Democrats. Not even to-day, when all the accumulated treasures of civilization are menaced with extinction, can the petty, commercial soul of the average man rise to the necessity of the hour. What you are trying to do is just to bribe a small group of society at the expense of the rest of the community by offering a specially attractive price.

The Government should be the exclusive purchaser of every article and product of the farm. The Government should have the power to determine what is a reasonable price. There is no other solution for it. The people must for once learn to act collectively, to act as a unit, as a people, not as an aggregation of petty, self-seeking, greedy individuals trying to devour the rest of the community. If this war will not teach them that elementary principle of the ethics and economics of cooperation, what will? The Government should be the exclusive purchaser of everything that the farmer produces, and the Government should sell it to the people at a price which will be suitable to the purchasing power of the masses. There is no other way out.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LONDON. Very well.

Mr. SHERLEY. If, in the crucible of world war, with necessity forcing them, they are not able to rise above their selfish interests, how does the gentleman expect his socialistic state to exist in normal times, when the predicate of it is that you can get a collective unselfish conscience?

Mr. LONDON. If we would have men of the brilliancy of Mr. SHERLEY, of the ability of Mr. FERRIS, and of men of similar caliber take up seriously and earnestly the problem of industrial cooperation, if we could get them to see the moral and economic bankruptcy of the competitive system, we would not be up with our backs against the wall and with nothing but confusion in front of us. Then you would stop talking about the law of supply and demand as a natural law, an irresistible law, which can not be overcome. You would find that that law of supply and demand which you have been reading about in textbooks of economics of 30 years ago does not exist in fact.

There is no such thing as a natural, irresistible law of supply and demand, because every human act, every law, every incorporation of a new aggregation of capital, the action and interaction of new economic and social forces, modifies and changes the so-called law of supply and demand. There is no such natural law which is beyond the control of human agencies.

I do believe that we can out of this very fire, out of this very danger which faces the world, make a better humanity. Let us appeal to the better man, to his higher intelligence. If they do not respond, we must teach them to respond. We must teach them to subordinate their individual and selfish interests to the interest of the community. The truth is, that intelligent and enlightened selfishness must result in industrial cooperation and in coordination of effort. With the Government acting as the agent of the people, a way will be found to prevent exploitation in all branches of industry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me one minute more?

Mr. LEVER. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this amendment fixing a minimum price of $2.50. I think it is bad class legislation. It should be left to the Food Comptroller to regulate the price of those products which are essential to the life of the people, not only the price of food but of every other article.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman thinks it should be left to the Food Administrator to do this thing, would not that give him the power to legislate by administering against a class just as much as if we passed a law?

Mr. LONDON. He would be compelled to take the interests of the entire community into account, and not the wheat producers only.

Mr. BLACK. Any more than the Congress would be compelled to do that?

Mr. LONDON. I would have him regulate the price not only of wheat but of every article that goes into the fixing of the price of wheat.

Mr. KNUTSON. What difference does it make whether Congress fixes the price or the Food Regulator does?

Mr. LONDON. It just makes this difference, that you fix a minimum arbitrary price of $2.50, while the reasonable price to-morrow may be $2.20. That is the difference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERRIS. I have a two-word amendment, which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for one minute to offer his amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 100, line 22, after the word "eighteen" insert the words "and nineteen hundred and nineteen."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the amendment, and I desire to say to the gentleman from Iowa that we will conclude in one speech.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of the section the following: "Provided, That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any miller, wholesaler, jobber, or retailer or other person to sell or offer for sale any rye flour, barley meal, barley flour, oatmeal, corn meal, or corn flour at a higher price than the price asked by such miller, wholesaler, jobber, retailer, or other person for wheat flour. Any person violating this provision shall upon conviction be fined not less than $1,000 or imprisoned not to exceed one year."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, perhaps the most misunderstandable and exasperating thing that has occurred in this country during the whole administration of the Food Administration was the order promulgated some time ago requiring anyone who desired to purchase wheat flour to also at the same time purchase an equal amount of substitutes. Now, the fact of the matter is that the price of the substitutes is higher generally than the price of the flour, sometimes as high as $5 and $7 for 50 pounds when you can buy 50 pounds of wheat flour for $3.50 to $4. That has resulted in much dissatisfaction and, in my mind, injustice, and it grows out of the fact that we have undertaken to fix the price of wheat while we have not fixed the price of barley, rye, and corn. Therefore the millers in grinding corn, rye, and barley put their own prices upon the product, and when the consumers, the workmen of this country if you please, go to buy 50 pounds of wheat flour they are compelled to buy these substitutes at the same time and at a higher price. So the purpose of my amendment is to prevent that. It is to stop it and at least let the consumer have the substitutes for flour at the same price that he pays for the wheat flour, and in addition to that to encourage the growing of wheat rather than the growing of barley and rye and corn to be used as substitutes for flour.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCKENZIE. I will.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not believe if at this time in fixing the price for wheat at $2.50 a bushel and leaving the price of the coarser grains now as they are, will not that have the effect of at once jumping the price of those coarser grains?

Mr. MCKENZIE. There is no doubt about it. If we are going to permit the millers of this country to fix their price on these substitutes while at the same time you are arbitrarily fixing the price of wheat flour this condition which is intolerable is going to continue, and I hope that no man in this House will make a point of order against the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, it is contended by those who are in favor of the Senate amendment that its adoption will increase the price of wheat 50 cents a bushel to the farmer. It is also contended that this will accomplish two things: First, it will stimulate the production of wheat, and, second, that it will prevent farmers from feeding wheat to their live stock.

It is idle for anyone to stand here on the floor of this House during the latter part of the month of April and contend that anything we may do now will stimulate or increase the production of this year's wheat crop.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield just for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I have only five minutes and I can not yield.

But it is contended that our farmers are feeding their wheat in increased quantities to their live stock, and that to increase the price will prevent this practice and thereby save a great deal of wheat for human consumption. Because some irresponsible party made that statement before the Committee on Agriculture of the House does not prove the fact. I have before me the monthly report of the Department of Agriculture, which shows that during the month of March the Secretary of Agriculture sent out telegraphic requests for reports to ascertain the fact in this regard.

What are the facts as ascertained by him? Are our farmers feeding more wheat to their live stock now than formerly? No. According to this report they are feeding less wheat to their live stock than was formerly used for such purpose. This report shows, and I will append it to my remarks, that the farmers in Montana, where they are feeding a larger percentage of wheat to live stock than in any other State, are feeding only 7 per cent, and the farmers of Ohio are feeding but 2 per cent to live stock. But the interesting part of this report is that most of that fed is screenings and spoiled wheat, and a great deal of the wheat used in this way is fed to chickens and poultry. In Ohio 64 per cent of all the wheat fed to live stock is fed to the chickens and to poultry. And yet, on the strength of an unsupported and untrue rumor, gentlemen will stand here and contend that because of the low price wheat is being fed to live stock, and that this proposal to increase the price of wheat 50 cents a bushel will put a stop to this practice.

The answer is simple. The report of the Secretary of Agriculture conclusively disproves the statement, and even if it were true the increase in price would not stop the practice. Any practice of that kind should be summarily dealt with by the Food Administrator. He has power to limit the amount of wheat which a human being can consume, and will anybody contend here that he does not also have power to limit the amount of wheat which a farmer can use in feeding his live stock?

The increase in price of wheat will not, therefore, increase production, nor will it conserve that already produced. It will have one effect, and one effect only, and that is to increase the price of flour and of bread to the consumer. It takes practically five bushels of wheat to make a barrel of flour. You increase the price of wheat to the miller 50 cents a bushel, and you increase the wholesale price of flour to the consumer by at least $2.50 a barrel, to say nothing of a return on this increased cost.

Some of you may feel that you will hear from the wheat farmer in November if you do not support this amendment for an increase in the price of wheat. But my opinion is that more of you will hear from a consuming public that must buy flour and bread if you, without cause, arbitrarily raise the price of this prime necessary of life. When you come to explain to the consumer why you voted to increase the price of wheat to the farmer by 150 per cent over the average price of 10 years before the war, what will be your excuse? In normal times the average person consumes about a barrel of flour a year, and it is easy to compute how much the increase of 50 cents per bushel will mean to the average family, and it is also easily understood what the consumer's interest is in this legislation.

It is unquestionably true that the cost of production on our farms has been largely increased since the outbreak of the war. Everything which the farmer must buy has been increased in price, but I submit that the increased price of wheat which the farmer is guaranteed for his product is more than sufficient to cover the increased cost of the things he must buy.

In this connection it should be remembered that many of the wheat farmers—I was about to say a majority of them—are tenant farmers. They grow wheat by a system commonly called "on shares"; that is, the man who farms the land gets a part of the crop and the man who owns the land receives as his rent a part of the crop grown on the land. Everyone at all informed on this situation knows that our tenant farmers this year on wheat farms are farming on exactly the same basis that they farmed last year, so far as crop rent is concerned. The tenant furnishes all the labor, the machinery, and as a general rule all the binding twine, and so forth. He bears all of the expense and must pay all of this increased cost of production. But the landlord, who, as a general rule, bears none of this increased cost, comes in as a profiteer and receives an unfair and unjust profit during the war for the use of his land. If it is true that the cost of production to the wheat farmer is not fully provided for by the guaranteed price, then the tenant should force a modification of his lease and receive a larger share of the wheat which he raises.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The gentleman has had some personal experience, has he not? He raised some wheat himself?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I raised some wheat last year, and it was a very profitable undertaking, notwithstanding the fact that the hail took half of the crop, and for a time the indications were that the drought would take the rest. Notwithstanding these discouragements, my experience was that wheat farming was more profitable than raising corn.

Mr. Speaker, the guaranteed price for wheat to-day is $2.20 per bushel. Not content with that, the Senate amendment fixes it at $2.50 per bushel, and then provides that the Government must pay the freight from the local elevators to the various points of shipment, which amounts to about 20 cents per bushel.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I have only five minutes.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman state how many farmers of Iowa produce corn per year?

Mr. GOOD. I have not that information; and what is more, that is not a pertinent inquiry anyway. The average price for wheat for a 10-year period before the outbreak of the war was 96.2 cents per bushel. The Government has guaranteed a price of $2.20 per bushel, an increase of almost 150 per cent. And the effect of the Senate amendment for which we are called upon to vote would increase the price 30 cents per bushel and compel the Government to bear the expense of the freight allowances, averaging about 20 cents per bushel more, which would mean a guaranteed price at the primary markets of practically $2.70 per bushel for wheat.

Let us be fair in dealing with this amendment, not only to the man who raises wheat but to the man and the woman who buys wheat and bread. Do not be deceived. The man that does not raise wheat, the man who lives and supports his family by his day's labor, as well as the man who supports his family by his mental ability, is as much and as deeply interested in the cost of living as is the man who raises wheat.

The average wholesale price of spring patent flour at New York for five years before the outbreak of the European war was $5.22 per barrel. The wholesale price of flour in wood during the month of February this year was $12.30 per barrel. Adopt this amendment and the retail price of flour to your consumers and mine, who are just as much interested in what we do to-day as is the wheat farmer, will not be less than $15 or $16 per barrel. I represent almost wholly an agricultural community. I am interested in the prosperity of that community, and certainly would do nothing to retard the progress of the farmer or to deprive him of his legitimate profits. But I want to say to you that if we are to win this war we must commence to think of something besides profits. We must commence to think a little of sacrifices. [Applause.] This House opposed almost to a man the profiteering on the part of real estate men in the District of Columbia, whom we were told were profiteering to the extent of 100 per cent. Strange to say that many of my colleagues whose sense of justice was outraged by the discovery of this profiteering of 100 per cent in rents now favor a profiteering on the part of the wheat farmer to the extent of 150 per cent. The farmers are not asking for this, and the demand for it in their name does them a great injustice. They are opposed to profiteering in all its forms at this time, but the Senate amendment makes the wheat farmer the chief offender.

We will not win the war that way. We will win the war when all of us commence to think of sacrifices and cease to seriously consider the demands of unreasonable profiteers, for these excessive profits only add to the problem of our Government and to the burdens occasioned by the increasing high cost of living. [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

[From Monthly Crop Report published by authority of Secretary of Agriculture, March, 1918.]

A special telegraphic inquiry was made under date of March 2 to the field agents of the Bureau of Crop Estimates in the 15 leading wheat-producing States concerning the amount of the 1917 wheat crop fed to live stock.

The responses show that the amount of wheat fed to live stock is less than in former years, except in a few States or sections where there was difficulty in obtaining other feedstuffs.

The highest figure reported, 7 per cent, was from Montana, where in some sections feeding of wheat was necessary to prevent live stock from starving. In Oregon 6 per cent was fed. These two States together account for about 2,000,000 bushels thus fed. Washington reports 4.5 per cent, being 1,500,000 bushels against 2,300,000 usually fed. Moderately heavy feeding in western and west central Texas and Oklahoma, in sections where other crops were almost a total failure, in order to save live stock, has required about 800,000 bushels in the former State and 900,000 in the latter, being 5 per cent and 2½ per cent of the total crops of those States. Something over 1,000,000 bushels has been fed in North Dakota, about 2 per cent of the crop. Ohio has fed less than a million bushels, and less than 2 per cent of its crop. Pennsylvania reports almost 1,500,000 bushels, or about 6 per cent of the crop.

The remaining States report very small quantities of wheat being fed. It appears that the total quantity of wheat fed to live stock will not exceed 2 per cent, and that the sound wheat fed is probably within 1 per cent of the crop. A large part of the wheat fed is inferior or musty grain unfit for milling. A considerable amount of it represents the screenings from seed wheat. In Ohio it is reported that 49 per cent of the wheat fed was of grades 1 and 2, 15 per cent of grade 3, and 36 per cent of grade 4—screenings and spoiled wheat. Sixty-four per cent of that was fed to poultry, 26 per cent to hogs, and 10 per cent to other animals.

Except in some of the Western States named, the principal consumption of wheat fed has been to poultry.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I do not like the element of speculation in this proposition. I do not like the element of price fixing, because if price fixing is to prevail we must go to other extremes with it.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman join with me in a motion to prevent anybody fixing the price of wheat in this country? We will have a unanimous vote in this House and the farmers will have much more for their wheat.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not in favor of price fixing as a policy. I do not see how we can fix the price of wheat without fixing the price of cotton. [Applause.] I do not see how we can fix the price of wheat without also fixing the price of labor; and I venture to say that no friend of labor in this House will stand for a legislative enactment fixing the price of labor. Organized labor would not stand for that.

Why should we make the situation worse than it is? Congress has not yet fixed prices. It has authorized the President to do so, and he has done so as to wheat. But this ought to be the first and the last of it. Instantly we begin this scheme of price fixing the element of speculation steps in, and the man who gets so much this year will demand of the legislature that he shall get so much more next year and so much more the next. There will be no stopping when this proposition gets in full swing.

People who are skillful in the manipulation of prices and markets take advantage of the opportunity to make money under the price-fixing system. This price fixing was done for war purposes; but, even so, there is speculation in it. It necessitates the Government sending agents out to find out whether or not the law against hoarding is being enforced, resulting in reports that the law is being evaded.

I have in my hand a number of clippings on this subject. There are so many of them that I will not attempt to read them to you, but they show just how the human element of speculation crops out. Here is a paper published in my own State, announcing that large quantities of wheat are found stored on the farms. For what reason? To get higher prices. They will not sell now, because, perchance, sooner or later, the Government will fix the price higher and the producer will get more for his wheat. Therefore he does not sell now. Meanwhile the war is going on. The demands from the allies are coming in. Our own people are suffering from high prices, although there is plenty of food. Here is an article from the Evening Star of Friday, March 8, headed:

Farmers holding vast wheat stocks—10,622,000 bushels more on farms than for same time last year. Corn also held back. Speculators waiting for a rise in prices.

Yet people suffer for want of food on the other side and consumers suffer for food here. It is higher prices we are after.

March 31 appears this in one of the Washington papers:

Farmers pay little heed to appeal made for wheat. Mr. Hoover's appeals to the farmers in vain.

Human nature. I am not inveighing against the farmer; but he knows that the price of wheat is fixed, and he knows that if he has plenty of wheat and he can prevail upon his Member of Congress to get the price of wheat advanced he will get a higher price for his wheat, and he does not sell. Those of us who are consumers in the large cities of the country go without the wheat and our allies over yonder go without it.

The spring wheat crop will be the biggest since 1911 record—

Says one of the papers here in Washington the other evening.

Reports from all over the Nation show farmers responding to appeal for increased acreage.

I hope that is so. And then comes this:

North Dakota. Wheat ordered sold in a month.

Why? Are they holding their wheat?

Announced by the State food administrator to-day in an official order—

And this is dated April 13—that wheat will be seized if not sold before a certain date.

In other words, there is wheat, but those who have it will not let it go. The Government actually proposes to seize the wheat if those who have it will not sell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have but 10 minutes left, and I have four requests for time. I ought to give those 10 minutes to the other four Members.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much time will the gentleman give me?

Mr. HAUGEN. I have just 10 minutes left against the proposition, and I have four more requests for time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask for two minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is much information like this coming to the front all the time. I have taken the trouble to make some inquiries in my own State with regard to the price of wheat. I find the Commercial Exchange, with which I would like to agree, favors the fixing of the price. These are the business men who deal with the producers. One of our leading flour concerns, however, writes me against the fixing of the price. They are in touch with the consumers—and I also hear from the consumers. They see the retail price of flour going to $14 a barrel. This letter is so pertinent that I insert it here in full:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., April 16, 1918.

HON. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand discussion of the advance of price of wheat from present $2.20 per bushel to $2.50 per bushel basis price will take place at an early date.

We believe that such an advance is unwise and would ask you to vote against it, because—

(1) It will discredit and hamper the work of the Food Administration.

(2) It will result in the hoarding of whatever wheat now remains upon the farms.

(3) It will make the retail price of flour to the consumer about $14 per barrel

The present outlook for the wheat crop is excellent. With 42,170,000 acres of winter wheat sown, the indicated yield is 560,000,000 bushels winter wheat. (Government crop report, April 8, 1918.) Reports from the Northwest state seeding there practically completed to large acreage. With only fair and average conditions, this should add not less than 250,000,000 bushels spring wheat, or a total of 810,000,000 bushels.

This wheat crop was undertaken and planted by the farmers under the guarantee of $2 per bushel price for the 1918 crop.

Can not see why it is necessary to turn over to the farmers now a subsidy of over $400,000,000 for supposed purpose of increasing a crop that is already planted and can not be greatly increased at this late date.

Further believe the price of wheat was impartially fixed by a representative committee of the consumers, laboring men, and farmers. Why should the consumer be so heavily taxed at this late date?

We hope for your favorable consideration of this question.

Yours, truly,

SAMUEL BELL & SONS,
By C. HERBERT BELL.

What are we to understand from this testimony? Is there plenty of wheat? Was it planted this season with the understanding that the farmer was to stand pat on prices? Is the farmer holding out now against his own agreement with the President. If so, the consumer must be taken into consideration. My constituents are consumers of wheat and they are paying heavily for what little they get of it. I do not want to put heavier burdens on them except it be to win this war. I am not persuaded at present that this increase in the grain price is a war measure. I do not believe the President thinks it is.

I am told the President is not for this proposition. I am told the Secretary of Agriculture, who ought to know the facts, is not for it, and I am quite sure the consumers are not for it. I want to treat the wheat producer fairly, but I do not think he should have an undue advantage over those who consume his products, whether in this land or in our service across the seas. [Applause.]

Mr. LESHER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER].

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Iowa and others who have expressed the idea that this war time is a time for rigorous sacrifice upon the part of the people; but we who are from those sections that produce the wheat, we from those sections that are agricultural, contend that we should not be the only ones to be required to make sacrifices. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] read that much wheat was being held in the hands of the farmers. The Department of Agriculture states that the amount in elevators is lower than for years. The claim that large amounts are in farmers' hands has no foundation in fact. On the contrary, farmers are forbidden to hold wheat, and they obey the law and regulations of the Food Administration. I will say that no product in the United States except wheat is being required to be sold by those who hold it, or else subject them to punishment. In the State of Nebraska the farmers are being notified, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania referred to the fact that also in South Dakota the farmers are being notified by the Federal Food Administrator that they must sell their store of wheat immediately, retaining only that which they require for seed next year, or subject themselves to punishment. Men who have been holding crops are being haled into court and subjected to the law and to punishment because they have refused to sell the products of their labor. There is no other product that is produced in America that is subject to that sort of penalty. Great profits are being made by other men in other lines of business. The cotton producer is not being told that if he does not sell his crop, the product of his labor, he will be put in jail, and he is not being told that he must retain only enough for seed for next year. Tremendous profits are being made by people in the State of Pennsylvania out of this war, but they are not being threatened with prosecution if they do not sell at once at a fixed price the product of their labor.

Mr. AYRES. The corn producers of Illinois and Iowa are not subjected to that either, are they?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No. There are two things that the farmer has to sell to this Nation, upon which the price is being fixed. Those two things are the wheat, and the mules and horses that he has to sell. The farmer is receiving no benefit from the fact that the United States Government is purchasing 500,000 horses and mules. The only market he has is the Government, and the Government has fixed the price arbitrarily. Prices have been fixed on wheat. The only thing upon which the price has been arbitrarily reduced since war was declared is wheat. Everything else has been advanced.

The price of leather has advanced 200 per cent and nobody threatens prosecution. Locomotives have advanced 200 per cent in price to the Government, and enormous profits made upon them by the people in the gentleman's own city in Pennsylvania. Rifles have advanced 300 per cent in price to the Government, and nobody threatens prosecution. Cotton has advanced 200 per cent; harness, 200 per cent; wool and woolens, 300 per cent. Farm machinery has been advanced 100 per cent and nobody is threatening prosecution because of that fact.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I can not yield. I have here a letter from a merchant in Nebraska calling attention to the fact that the Federal Trade Commission states that the packers of the United States are hoarding 147,780,271 pounds of hides, holding up the price and the public. The price of hides to the farmer is reduced 300 per cent, and shoes advanced 200 per cent because the Government will not purchase any leather except from the packers' hides. The public is being held up and no one is punished for that monopoly.

I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] who says that interference should only be had when a monopoly exists. No monopoly is possible upon the part of wheat farmers. When I asked the gentleman from Ohio who it was that fixed the price of wheat he replied the President. Everyone knows the President only acts upon the advice and information furnished him by the Food Administration. I am willing to take the gentleman's definition of the intelligence of the men on the Food Administration and the ones who advised the fixing of the price. The only reason that could be given for it was to stimulate production and at the same time to reduce the price to the consumer. As the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] stated, that is an impossible thing to do. We have not stimulated production. The report of the Agricultural Department claims there is 1,000,000 acres increase in winter wheat, but when the returns come in it will result that with the losses from weather and other conditions there will be an actual decrease in production. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] stated, because of the advance in the prices of the substitutes which the Food Administration requires us to purchase, the flour price to the consumer is higher now than before it was regulated.

The letter which I will include in my remarks shows that the man in town, the laboring man, has to pay an advanced price of 100 per cent for his flour because he has to buy substitutes, that have gone up 200 per cent, that are not regulated. The final result of all this regulation has been to diminish the production of wheat flour and to impose a sacrifice upon the farmer that nobody else is asked to make.

It has been said that this price is only the price for the next year. Gentlemen, when we began to buy money for the war we started out to buy it at 3½ per cent per annum. It did not come fast enough and we raised it to 4 per cent. Then we raised it to 4¼ per cent. Does anybody think that if we have to buy money next year that it will be any cheaper than it is now? Does anybody think that if we fix the price at $2.50 a bushel it will be any cheaper next year? You will never lower the price of wheat during the period of the war. You fix the price at $2.50 and you fix it for the war and every farmer knows it.

The report of the Federal Trade Commission which is just published shows who is getting the increase of profits out of the flour produced in this country. This report states in its summary of conditions:

The average cost of production of flour increased somewhat during 1917, due chiefly to the advanced cost of wheat, while operating profits per barrel increased 175 per cent. Expenses of flour distributors and middlemen increased somewhat, while their profits, both gross and net, show a very large increase, several large car jobbers showing an increase of more than 125 per cent. The average net profits of small-lot jobbers showed a similar increase.

This report shows that middlemen and millers are permitted to make largely increased profits, while the farmer, the producer of the raw material, is permitted no increase in price over that received in 1917, although his expenses have greatly increased.

We give everybody else the inspiration of war profits upon war material and deny it to the farmer and say he must perform his part for patriotism alone. Why should we require him to take a lower price for his product than the market before regulation was established and require it of no one else? The farmer is patriotic always, and only asks a square deal with every other business. [Applause.]

GUIDE ROCK, NEBR., April 1, 1918.

Hon. A. C. SHALLENBERGER,
Representative of Fifth District of Nebraska, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I take this opportunity to write you in reference to the flour and substitutes, of which there is a great deal of complaint. It is costing the most of us around $8 to get a sack of flour. The 48-pound sack of flour costs $3; corn flour and barley flour sells over our counters at 10 cents per pound; corn meal, 6 pounds, 40 cents; 12 pounds, 75 cents; oatmeal, 9 cents per pound. The farmer can take 2 bushels of corn to the mill and get it ground and bolted for 30 cents; so he gets his meal at about 3 cents per pound. He gets a statement from the mill of his having the meal made and can present this at the stores and get 2 sacks of flour, at a total cost of about $9 for 200 pounds of flour and meal. The average laboring man and common folks in town can not do this. A number of my customers have told me that it cost them $8, as above stated.

Last week two farmers of Nebraska were indicted at Lincoln, Nebr., for allowing 500 or 600 bushels of grain to spoil. Then, how about the distillers, who rot a million bushels of grain each year to make liquor? Our Federal Trade Commission recently made a report to Congress finding that the packers of the country were hoarding 147,780,271 pounds of hides, which is a gain of about 60 per cent of this holding of hides. Now, at the same time, imports of hides was 70 per cent greater in 1917 than in 1912. There is a great deal of complaint along these lines. It looks as if there should be more price fixing than on wheat alone, and that our Government should confiscate these hoarded hides and make shoes for your boy and mine.

Yours, truly,

JOHN S. MARSH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LESHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, there could have been but one reason and one reason alone for fixing the price of wheat—to reduce the cost of bread to the consumer. When wheat was selling at $2.65 to $3.46 a bushel the price of bread was 5 to 6 cents a loaf, possibly some places 8 cents. To-day it is 10 cents a loaf and not two-thirds of it is wheat. The price of bread is higher to-day than it was when wheat was selling at $3.46 a bushel. The way to reduce the price of bread is to increase the amount of wheat that is produced in the country. And you can not increase the production of wheat by reducing the price to the producer. You can not increase the zeal of the farmer to produce wheat by reducing the price of wheat below the cost of production or below the cost of producing oats, corn, barley, and other farm products.

Let me give you an illustration. A year ago potatoes were very high, beyond the pocket of the average consumer. The price was not fixed by the Food Administrator or by the President. It was left to the law of supply and demand. The farmers proceeded to take advantage of the high price of potatoes and produced potatoes, and to-day potatoes are within the reach of all. There was a large production because of the attractive prices offered for potatoes. Do the same thing with wheat, and you will increase the production of wheat and reduce the cost of bread to the consumer, just as the farmers by increasing the production of potatoes have reduced the cost of potatoes to the consumer. [Applause.]

But aside from the question of increasing wheat production by stimulating it, there is no more reason for fixing the price of wheat, which is a daily necessity in every family, than there is for fixing the price of cotton, which is a daily necessity in every family—not a bit. No one here says that cotton shall be 18 cents a pound. There would be a revolution on the Democratic side of the House if we were to undertake to fix the price of cotton. Many of you are in favor of fixing the price of wheat, however, and why?

Mr. AYRES. There would be a revolution on the Republican side of the House if we were to undertake to fix the price of corn, too.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. I am in favor of fixing the price of both cotton and corn.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am not in favor of fixing the price of either. I am in favor of giving the farmers who produce cotton and corn and wheat the benefit of the law of supply and demand.

Mr. AYRES. I mean to say that if we fix the price of anything, we should fix the price of all things.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes; I understand my colleague now. If we fix the price of one thing, then we should fix the price of all farm products. [Applause.] I agree with my colleague from Kansas. There is no reason why wheat should be selected and an arbitrary price fixed upon that. I shall vote for this amendment if I can not have an opportunity to vote to give the farmer the opportunity of getting all that his wheat will bring upon the market, just as he gets for his corn and barley and oats and potatoes all that they will bring, just as the southern farmer gets all that his cotton will bring. I do not understand why the farmer who produces wheat should have been selected and the price fixed and nothing said about the price of cotton and oats and other farm products or the hundred and one things the farmer buys. There is absolutely no hope to the consumer of reducing the price of bread by fixing the price of wheat at $2.20 or $2.50 while you leave the price of everything else as it is. When the price of wheat was fixed at $2.20 it was selling at $2.65 to $3.46. At that time, as I have said, white-flour bread was selling at 5 to 8 cents a loaf; shorts, a wheat product, was selling for $2.25 a hundred. Now the price of shorts is $2.75 to $3 a hundred, and bran is more than that. As no one can show any good purpose that has been served by reducing the price of wheat and fixing it at $2.20, the price should be increased or, better, wheat put along with other products where the law of supply and demand fixes the price.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER].

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I have carefully listened to the arguments presented on the proposition before us, namely, whether we shall agree to the Senate amendment fixing the price of wheat at $2.50 per bushel or leave the matter as it now is in the hands of the President and allow him to fix the price as he may see fit. I wish to say that, in my judgment, it is a mistake to fix the price at all; I believe that it is a mistake and will not result in increased production.

This whole price-fixing proposition is based on the fact that the Government desires to stimulate the production of wheat, so we may raise not only enough for our own use, but enough to supply our allies.

The raising of a sufficient amount of food products is a gigantic and far-reaching proposition, affecting both producer and consumer; in fact, it affects every man, woman, and child in this country, as well as the countries of our allies who are depending at least in part on us for their food supplies, and is therefore worthy of our most careful and serious consideration.

In my judgment, the proposition to fix the selling price on any article, whether it be a food product, grown on the farm, or an article manufactured, when it is impossible to ascertain the cost, is fundamentally unsound, and only leads to disappointment and confusion.

Mr. Speaker, I contend that if the Government wants to go into price fixing on farm products, on one commodity, it should fix the price on all products of the farm, but before this is done—in fact, before it can be done intelligently—we must first ascertain the cost of production and, unfortunately, it so happens that the cost of production of farm products can not be ascertained until after the crops are harvested for the simple reason that we have no way of knowing what the yield will be per acre. It may be in the case of wheat that we will have a yield of 5, 10, 20, 30, or even 40 bushels per acre. We all know that should the yield be less than 10 bushels per acre the cost of production will be over three times as high as it will be if the yield is over 30 bushels per acre. In addition to this, we do not know what the labor cost will be; nor the cost of fertilizer, binder twine, nor any other expense connected with the raising of wheat. The cost of production, as I have said before, is determined entirely by the yield.

Again, I am firmly convinced that it is a mistake for the Government to attempt to control prices or values by legislation, and I seriously question whether this bill, regardless of whether the amendment is agreed to or not, will have the desired effect, namely, that of stimulating production of wheat. In fact, in my opinion it will have directly the opposite effect. It is true that we are depending upon the patriotism of the farmer to raise wheat, because we need it to prosecute the war, but when he figures out and knows by experience that he can make more money by raising corn, barley, oats, or rye, it is only reasonable to suppose that he will cut down his acreage of wheat and raise more of the other cereals.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KREIDER. Yes; for a question.

Mr. GOOD. Is not the gentleman aware that it was the Senator from North Dakota who, in the interest of a wheat grower, secured the adoption of the amendment guaranteeing the price of $2 last year?

Mr. KREIDER. I think that is true, but that does not prove that the Senator from North Dakota may not have been in error and made a mistake when he did so. I believe that the Congress was justified in the passing of the food-control bill last year upon the basis that it prevented the allies going into the open market and bidding up the price of American products. In that regard, and in that only, it was justified. However, the fixing of the price of any one farm product without fixing the price of others, especially those used in wheat productions as well as those that might be used as substitutes, is a very unfortunate blunder. It is unscientific and can not be justified upon economic grounds. The fixing of the price of wheat last year was done because it was believed that unless the grower could be assured a stable price he would not increase the acreage. The Government therefore fixed the price for this year's crop in order to secure the planting or seeding of a larger acreage. When this price was fixed, it was fixed on a comparative basis, and it was thought that the price was sufficiently high to guarantee a maximum amount of acreage. We have now one year's experience. The result is that the prices of other crops have advanced, so that it is more profitable now for the farmer to raise other crops rather than wheat, and this, in my judgment, will unquestionably result in a decreased acreage for wheat when seeding time comes in the fall of 1918.

It is perfectly foolish for men to stand on the floor of this House and appeal to the patriotism of the farmer and insist that he shall grow wheat, when he can raise other crops that in his judgment are far more profitable. There is no question about the good intention of the Government; but, unfortunately, good intentions do not always bring results, nor will they solve our problems. Possibly six or eight months ago the Government told the farmers of the country and the people that they should raise all the beef and pork possible. They inaugurated meatless days, and advised the conserving of fats, oils, and so forth. This request was complied with to a very large extent. Many farmers bought large quantities of steers last fall that were thin in flesh and fattened them during the winter months, and added from 300 to 500 pounds to the weight of each steer. When they came to sell them this spring, however, they found the market glutted with cattle and beef, and the result was that when they had sold their cattle and took account of the cost of the cattle, the cost of the feed, they found that they had received less than one-half for their corn and other feed than they could have realized by selling the grain. No sane man will contend that farmers will continue to do this year in and year out. The same is true of hogs. There is practically nothing that the farmer can buy or feed to his hogs which will enable him to get his money back when the hogs are sold. In fact, the price of the coarser cereals has advanced to such a point where many farmers, especially in isolated districts, have found it more economical to feed wheat to their live stock than to buy other grains or feed. The Government reports would indicate that the feeding of wheat has been practiced rather extensively and that millions of bushels of wheat have been fed to live stock and have not been conserved for human food.

I know there are those who contend that the fixing of the price of wheat is absolutely essential in order to protect our workingmen and wage earners from paying abnormally high prices. I think this is a mistaken idea, which can also be proven by present conditions. We all know that the Food Administration has restricted the sale of flour and no householder can buy flour unless they buy an equal amount of so-called substitutes and these substitutes have been advanced so that the price on those is out of all proportion to the price of flour, and yet they are compelled to buy them or do without flour. My contention is that it would be cheaper for the consumer to buy what he wants and needs, even though the price on that one commodity was a little higher than to be compelled to buy, at an exorbitant price, the things he does not need and does not want. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the truth is that we have no settled program; we are drifting about in a slip-shod manner with no definite object. In my judgment, the Government should now give the agriculturists of the country an idea of the crop requirements for 1919—it is too late for 1918; should give the requirements for beef for 1920 and 1921, and dairy requirements for 1922. To follow the policy we have been following, a hand-to-mouth, makeshift proposition, is a mistake. We must have a program consistent, thought out, and with a vision of the future. We have passed through the first year, the second year's campaign is already either won or lost, and the campaign for the third year opens with this fall's plowing and planting of winter wheat and crop planting for 1919. If the Government and the country are satisfied with the results and with the sidestepping, cross-firing advice, illy digested council, and so forth, we, of course, have nothing further to say; but in my judgment the time has come when this program should be replaced by a program that is plain, clear, and straightforward; and in order to have such a program we must have men to formulate this program who are not only patriotic and who can be trusted, but they must be men who know the problems they are supposed to solve. Men who can see and have a true vision beyond the narrow limits of one growing season; men who can realize the need of a far-reaching program; men who have the strength of heart to call the farmers of America into council and let them share in the preparation, even as they must and shall share in the final victory which we all hope and believe we shall achieve.

Lawyers, statisticians, and college professors and college presidents are no doubt patriotic men, but they lack the essential qualifications and actual business experience to outline a program such as I have referred to.

When I see statements made by men high in official positions and articles written on the subject of farming in which they give advice and make suggestions, I am tempted to believe that all that they know about farming they learned by looking out of a Pullman-car window when they were riding upon a train going to Florida for their winter vacations and then, added to this valuable knowledge thus gained, by repeating the performance when they went to Maine or the seashore to spend the hot summer months, at the very time when the farmers to whom they were giving their valuable advice were harvesting the crops and were providing for the Nation's requirements. If, in conversation with some of these men and speaking of a well-known strain of live stock, you should mention the word "Holstein," they would not know whether you were referring to a breed of horses, cattle, hogs, or chickens; and should you speak of "Berkshires," they would probably think you were talking of a breed of dogs, sheep, or geese, or possibly cats. [Applause.]

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KREIDER. I will.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I understand the gentleman represents a district which is largely a consuming district, and yet, I assume, he is now speaking from a national viewpoint.

Mr. KREIDER. I wish to say to the gentleman that I represent a district which contains a large consuming population; some of the largest manufacturing interests in the country, are located in my district; the greatest railroad on earth has its division headquarters in my district, and yet, at the same time, my district contains the richest agricultural lands in the United States. The Lebanon Valley, the Cumberland Valley, and the Lykens Valley are known throughout the State and even throughout the United States for their fertility of soil, but more particularly because of the scientific, up-to-date farming that is carried on. However, I am not viewing this matter from a sectional viewpoint, nor from a political viewpoint; my desire is to do what I can to assist in perfecting legislation which will produce the best results for the Nation as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come when we need to sink all political or sectional pride and everyone of us throughout the entire country stand together shoulder to shoulder for the winning of this war. I believe that we have been entirely too optimistic; I believe the attitude of the Government has been too optimistic; there are too many people in the country to-day who are taking it as a matter of course that we are going to win this war. The idea that there is a possibility of losing the war has never entered their minds. They simply feel that it is unthinkable, and no matter how many blunders are being made the war is going to be won just the same.

I, too, believe that we are going to win this war, but I also believe that by standing together and all interests standing by the Nation and every individual doing his utmost will result in winning the war in the quickest possible time, with the least possible loss in life and treasure.

In short, we simply must stand together, and the quicker we realize this the better it will be. We have to-day too many slackers—yes, I may say traitors—in this country. In my judgment the time has come when any individual who for private gain will hold up or in any way retard the production, the manufacture, the mining, or the transportation of those things needed by the Government for the prosecution of the war should be regarded as a traitor to the country, and any individual, firm, or corporation who will refuse to manufacture goods needed by the Government simply because the profit is not satisfactory is a traitor and should be prosecuted as such and made to pay the penalty prescribed for treason. [Applause.]

I do not desire to say a single thing against the Government, but I do say that we must become more efficient, and the authorities must sooner or later come to the point where they will call to their aid men with experience and practical knowledge of the things they are to control. College presidents, professors, and theorists and scientists have all, no doubt, their missions to fulfill and duties to perform, but why they should be called to handle gigantic business propositions without an atom of practical experience or a scintilla of evidence that they know anything at all about it is more than I can understand.

It is, however, very gratifying indeed that we can see signs of awakening along this line, and the appointment of Charles M. Schwab as the Director General of the Emergency Fleet Corporation and Shipping Board a few days ago is one of the signs. It happens to be my good fortune to be personally acquainted with Mr. Schwab, and I want to say in my judgment it will be hard to find a man with a clearer mind or one more energetic and resourceful or one who has had more experience in handling propositions of gigantic proportions. I want to assure every Member of Congress from now on we are going to have an intelligent administration in the Shipping Board, and we are going to have results. In other words, we are going to have ships, and if we do not we will know the reason why. Would to God we had a Schwab to put at the head of every department, especially where the results have been so extremely distressing and disappointing. We must have these men if we want to win the war in the quickest possible time.

As I have said, politics must be relegated to the rear. I am proud to say that every bill that has been presented to this Congress since we are in this war and before we were in the war that has had for its object the speeding up of the war program has had my unqualified support, notwithstanding the fact that many of them might have been improved. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who speak on this subject may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this subject. That will save time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Well, for how long?

Mr. LEVER. For five days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this subject have the privilege of extending their remarks on the subject under debate for five calendar days. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman ask unanimous consent to make it all Members?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I will modify the request by making it that all gentlemen have five days to speak on this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the modified request?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman object? Some gentlemen can not get time and others can. If the gentleman does that, I shall object to all extensions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would not object to the gentleman——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am not asking for time.

Mr. HAUGEN. I trust the gentleman will withdraw the objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. In view of the fact that I have so many requests for time——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I withdraw it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I renew the request, the objection having been withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the modified request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I want to amend the request of the gentleman from South Carolina by making it all Members instead of all gentlemen.

Mr. LEVER. I do not accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in order that the matter may be settled, the rules provide that Members of the House shall be regarded as gentlemen, and I make the point of order against the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman should bear in mind that we have a lady in the House, and every time that request is made that question is raised.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman puts it upon that ground, I have no objection.

Mr. FIELDS. That is exactly the ground. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks and the attitude of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. The gentleman from Iowa, of course, can vote on the side which he thinks has the most votes if he wants to, but I hope this House will consider this question from the standpoint of giving to the country and to those who raise wheat that measure of even-handed justice which all the circumstances and conditions under which we are now legislating justify.

I was also interested in the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON]. He started out with the proposition that price fixing has been a failure the world over, and he proposes to correct this failure by more price fixing, and although he claims to be a modern Socialist, he seeks to enact into the law as a corrective of the ills and evils of this day the policy and the code of Diocletian.

If we had this year a crop of 850,000,000 bushels of wheat, which would give us an export surplus of 350,000,000 bushels; if we had an assured prospect of such a crop now, I venture to say there is not a man in this House who would not willingly, who would not gladly vote to repeal every section of the food-control law which authorizes the fixing of either maximum or minimum prices. [Applause.] We do not, however, confront that situation. We have dealt this year with a short crop. We are confronted with the possibility of having to deal next year with a short crop, and we must consider this question upon that basis.

I intend to support the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]. That amendment reduces the proposition involved here to the single question of whether the minimum price for wheat shall be not less than $2.50 per bushel at the principal primary markets instead of $2 per bushel as now fixed by the law, which would require an increase of 30 cents per bushel over the absolute price fixed by the President. I think that the questions involved here are debatable, because no man and no set of men can determine absolutely that $2 or $2.20 or $2.50 or $2.65 represents the absolute of impartial justice touching the price which should be paid for this year's crop of wheat which every citizen everywhere in the United States would accept as such. But in determining that question—and we must determine it, for the question of wiping out the fixed price altogether is not here for consideration—we have a right to take into consideration that the price of wheat fixed last August was fixed at $2.20 a bushel, when the average price of wheat in the United States in the open market was $2.78 per bushel; we have a right to consider that the price of $2.20 was fixed at a time when there was the greatest demand for wheat, backed by the imperative necessity of war, that the world had even seen; we have a right to consider that when the price of $2.20 was fixed by the President, in August, corn and barley were both selling at a relatively higher price than wheat would represent at $2.20; we have a right to take into consideration the fact that the fixing of this price, or of any price, deprived the farmer of an open market for the commodity at a time when an open market would have given him a price far in excess of $2.20 per bushel; we have a right to consider that no action has been taken fixing or in any way controlling the prices of commodities which the producer of wheat must buy and use in raising his crop.

But, for the purpose of the argument which I propose to make here, I intend to assume that $2.20 was a fair price for wheat when it was fixed last August by the board established by the Food Administration under the President's direction, in view of all of the circumstances which then surrounded the question.

Now, then, that reduces the question to this: Has anything occurred since the price of $2.20 was fixed, last August, which justifies us now in enacting into law a provision which will require that price to be increased? In order to get at that proposition I want to submit some statistics which I have taken from the report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor. I take their statistics because no one can claim that the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor is interested in this question from the standpoint of increasing the price of wheat, and because these statistics must be recognized by everyone as impartial, so far as they relate to the question under consideration.

These statistics show that while the price of wheat has remained stationary since it was fixed at $2.20 last August, the price of other commodities has steadily increased. In order to get at this relative increase it is necessary to take figures representing relative increases rather than absolute price figures, and in the quotations I am going to make I shall quote figures representing relative increases rather than actual and absolute price figures. In other words, the table from which I quote takes the different commodities and represents the then existing price by the figure 100 and subsequent prices are represented by figures either higher or lower than 100 in the proportion in which there has been an actual increase or decrease.

The table shows that in August, 1917, the price of wheat was represented by the figure 310, and that in December, as a result of the fixing of the absolute price, the price of wheat was represented by the figure 241, a reduction of 50 points. During the same period, from August to December, 1917, the price index figure for oats increased from 161 to 204, barley from 244 to 276, rice from 133 to 146. During the same period, while the price of cattle and hogs remained practically stationary, the price index figure for beef increased from 126 to 137, on bacon from 186 to 223, on ham from 136 to 170, and on lard from 222 to 249.

These figures indicate that while during that period the farmer sold his cattle and hogs at a uniform price, he bought back the beef, the ham, the pork, and the lard made from the cattle and hogs at a relatively high price.

We now come to some of the articles in which many of the gentlemen who so insistently oppose an increase in the price of wheat are especially interested. During the period to which I have already referred, from August to December, 1917, the price of cotton increased, as shown by the index figures, from 197 to 233, cotton yarn from 204 to 230, cotton sheeting from 200 to 235, bleached muslin from 188 to 211, worsted yarn from 253 to 307, clay worsted suitings from 274 to 302, leather from 164 to 180, and sole leather from 296 to 303.

Relative index figures could be quoted almost indefinitely during the period I have referred to, showing by impartial authority that since August, when the price was fixed upon wheat at $2.20 and at which price it has remained stationary, there has been a relative increase in practically every article which the farmer has to consume, and that this increase has been equivalent to a percentage greater than is represented by the increase of 30 cents a bushel proposed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

If these figures could be projected into the months following December, 1917, they would show a still greater relative increase in the price of these commodities. I have some figures gotten up by the Food Administration which show the relative price of wheat and certain farm implements. These figures show that the price of wheat in May, 1917, as compared with 1911, is represented by the figure 291, and that the price of wheat in October, after it had been fixed by the Food Administration, is represented by the figure 237, and it will be represented by the same figure in May, 1918.

In the case of farm implements these statistics show that in May, 1917, the price of the selected farm implements was represented by the figure 126; in October that price was represented by the figure 151; and that in May, 1918, it will be represented by the figure 170. In other words, that while there will be during the period from May, 1917, to May, 1918, a reduction in the price of wheat equivalent to 54 points, there will be a relative increase in the price of farm implements of 44 points, and the implements selected have not been selected with a view of making a basis for an increase in the price of wheat.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Granted that the price of farm implements has gone up, is it not a fact that the farmer does not buy his implements with the regularity that he sells his products?

Mr. ANDERSON. I suppose that is true; but taking the country over, that statement, which only applies to individuals, has no bearing on the general argument I am attempting to make.

I intend to append to my remarks a statement showing the absolute average farm price of oats, corn, barley, rye, and wheat by 10-year periods from 1870 to 1913, during the period of the war prior to our entering it, and in 1917, and a second table showing the relation of the prices of other farm grains to corn represented by the figure 100 for each of these periods. The latter table shows that the price of wheat as compared with corn, represented by 100, during the 10-year period from 1870 to 1879 is represented by the figure 245; in the 10-year period from 1880 to 1889 the price of wheat in the same ratio is represented by the figure 205; during the following 10-year period by the figure 189, and in the following 10-year period by the figure 161; from 1909 to 1913, by the figure 151; from 1914 to 1916, the war period, by the figure 169; and in 1917, by the figure 142. To express the conclusions of those figures in general terms, they show that wheat was worth less in comparison with corn in 1917 than at any time since 1870, and this despite the fact that wheat has a certain and a peculiar value in time of war.

These figures show that wheat was worth less in 1917, in comparison with corn, than it was in the three preceding years of the war before we entered it, although during a part of the year 1917 the price of wheat was higher than it has ever been in the history of the country and the world's available crop so short that wheat rationing is resorted to over half of the entire world.

The conclusion is inevitable from the facts I have stated that the price of $2.20 fixed last August for last year's crop is not a fair price for this year's crop, everything considered.

It is argued that this whole matter should be left to the administration, and in the same breath the administration is lauded because in August last year the President increased the minimum guaranty of $2 established by Congress by fixing an absolute price of $2.20 per bushel, based upon Chicago. If it was a praiseworthy act for the administration to increase the price to $2.20 per bushel last August, how can it be a crime for Congress to increase the price to $2.50 per bushel when it is shown that no effort has been made to keep the price of other commodities which the farmer must buy and use upon an even level with the price so fixed on wheat?

Wheat is the most precarious of all staple grains to raise. On the basis of present prices it is less profitable than any other. The farmer is patriotic, and, notwithstanding this fact, he has put in a crop this year larger in acreage than any in the history of the country. Ought he to be penalized because of this patriotism in comparison with other industries and other fields of endeavor, whose commodities seek an unrestricted market and have increased in price during a period when the price of wheat has been kept stationary by law?

I append hereto the statistical tables upon which my argument is based:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman already has that right.

Mr. LESHER. Mr Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL].

Mr. HAUGEN. Later, Mr. Speaker, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Speaker, if the prices of the things which the farmer must buy and which he uses were fixed on a basis in proportion to the price of wheat at $2, I should be opposed to raising the price of wheat. But when the prices of everything else that the farmer uses, including the wages that he must pay the help with which to harvest his crop, not only have gone up but are going up and will continue to go up until this crop is harvested, it seems to me but proper and right that we should increase the price of wheat by the small amount of 30 cents a bushel, as is proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

The farmers are a more important factor in this war to-day than ever before. If they produce enough wheat for our own people and the peoples of the European allies, Germany will be whipped. If they fail to produce enough wheat, our people will be as bad off as the people of Germany and her allies. In short, the production of wheat is a military necessity.

Some Members here have said $2.50 wheat means profit to the farmer. I do not think so; but, even if it does, if it will bring about a larger production of wheat, why draw the line on farmers' profits? We do not hesitate to pay prices which mean big profits for more ships, more guns, more airplanes, more ammunition, and more war supplies. Why? Because we want enough of these military necessities with which to win the war.

It has been argued here that the fixing of the price of wheat at this time will not affect the amount of wheat for this year. I do not know whether that is true or not; but granting that it is, I believe it will affect the amount of wheat that will be put upon the market for the purpose of making bread, because with the price of meat-producing stock continually rising it becomes a question of a farmer making his expenses. Oftentimes it is a question whether he will feed his wheat to some meat-producing animal or whether he will sell it in the market, in order to make enough to pay expenses.

Why, Mr. Speaker, wheat to-day is one of the cheapest articles of food on the market. It is cheaper than corn, cheaper than rye, cheaper than oats, and cheaper than barley. Thus the very situation is an encouragement for farmers to feed wheat to their stock rather than the higher-priced foods. Either we should raise the price of wheat or let it be free on the market or regulate the price of other grains to a similar level.

Another point that it seems to me it is well to remember is that in fixing the price of wheat now we are really fixing the price of wheat for the farmers who are to sow in the fall. Congress will adjourn and will not meet until after all the fall wheat is planted, and there is little probability that any new price of wheat will be fixed next year. As the gentleman from Minnesota has so well shown, $2.50 for wheat during the coming fall, with all prices going up, will in the end be no more, if even as much as $2 when the price was fixed last year. In the light of these facts and conditions, with everything going up and no limit being put on the prices that do go up and with no proposition to put a price limit on those things, it seems to me the proposition of $2.50 wheat is proper, and I shall support it. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON].

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, to be consistent in this matter—and I am—the greatest thing this House could do to-day would be to eliminate price fixing. [Applause.] I was opposed to it in the framing of the bill in reference to food control. When that matter was brought before us the entire object was to increase production. Certain conditions were proposed, whereby the President had to give public notice and the farmer had to sign certain agreements in order to get the benefit of the law. Unfortunately the $2 amendment of the Senate last year was adopted, and that is something that is going to run away with the people. In the short time I have I want to explain just what this means, and I think we ought to be fair. This does not mean an increase of 30 cents only, but it means 80 cents for the people in the East. It costs 50 cents a bushel for freight and elevator charges to get a bushel of wheat from the far West over to New York, and this will increase the price of flour about $3.50 a barrel. Now, if we can take the estimates of the Government, we are going to have in the neighborhood of 850,000,000 bushels of wheat, and the millers in Chicago on last Friday estimated that we will have a crop of 1,000,000,000 bushels. If we have 850,000,000 bushels, we can have food for our allies, food for ourselves, and the Government will have 200,000,000 or 300,000,000 bushels left.

I feel confident that the Food Administration has been a great help to this country. It has kept the price of flour down; and while probably the farmer would have gotten a great deal more for his wheat, it has been a great benefit to the entire country. The next three months is going to be the crisis in food conditions. When we get the new crop we can handle the price, but we have not very much wheat now except what is in the hands of the farmers, because the millers and the dealers are selling it just as fast as it comes in. If we can regulate the supply for the next three months, and keep the price of flour down, we shall then have passed the most critical time. This provision affects the 1918 crop. It has nothing to do with the crop of last year.

The consequence is that if we are not careful we are going to have $15 or $16 flour and 200,000,000 or 300,000,000 bushels of wheat on hand. We want to consider this very carefully and try to avoid such a condition as that.

To give you an idea how farmers regard this proposition, I would like to read a letter in part received from a man who knows his business, and which, to my mind, expresses the feeling among farmers generally in my district.

The following is a copy in part of a letter received from Mr. Ward O. Collins, of Brookvale Farm, Califon, N. J., dated March 24, 1918:

Hon. E. C. HUTCHINSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to express my views regarding the proposed legislation in reference to $2.50 wheat. While I raise about 200 bushels of wheat, along with a large amount of other grains, I am opposed to a further artificial increase in the price of wheat for the following reasons:

First. At this date the amount of wheat to be planted this spring could not be materially increased, as all the farmers have made their plans for spring crops, and with the present inefficient transportation seeds could not be secured in time.

Second. The present price of $2.20 would give good returns if the crop is good; if the crop is bad, no amount of legislation could make it pay.

Third. An increase in price for the next crop will cause all wheat now in farmers' hands and in country dealers' hands to be held until the new crop is harvested.

Fourth. An increase in the price of wheat means an even greater increase in the price of unregulated grains, which means that no poultry or stock of any kind can be kept or raised at a profit.

My experience during the last year has shown that more money can be made by selling grains. As a consequence there will soon be a shortage of milk, poultry, and eggs, as the cost of production of these things, with grain prices as they are now, has actually exceeded the prices received.

Yours, truly,

WARD O. COLLINS,
Califon, N. J.

Producers have not asked for legislation of this character, but are perfectly willing to prove their patriotism and loyalty and give to the Nation a maximum crop regardless of the sacrifice involved, and they can not be fooled by the mere passage of a bill that pretends one thing and has absolutely no meaning in fact.

This section provides that the President must first find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of production of wheat; he is then to give public notice from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, that under specified conditions a guaranteed price will be paid to producers of wheat who comply with the specified conditions. Yet later on in the same section this arrangement is annulled by the positive statement which provides that—

This guaranty shall not be dependent upon the action of the President under the first part of this section, but is hereby made absolute and shall be binding until May 1, 1919.

For my personal benefit I would like to know how it is possible to stimulate production under specified conditions if there are no conditions specified.

No better evidence of the loyalty of the American farmer can be found than the statement published within the last few days by authority of the Department of Agriculture, which indicates that, as a result of increased acreage and intensive methods, the 1918 crop of winter wheat will be 142,000,000 bushels more than last year, and the prediction was unofficially made that if the spring wheat crop maintained the same ratio the total wheat crop will be 850,000,000 bushels, or enough to take care of the needs of this country and the allies next year. Last year the wheat crop was estimated at 651,000,000 bushels.

In addition, there is an increase of 26,000,000 bushels in the prospective rye crop, making an estimated increase of about 225,000,000 bushels of bread grain.

The bill also provides that the basis for grading wheat shall be the same as that established under the United States grain-standards act, which means that, in justice to both seller and buyer, it will be necessary to have an inspector at every local buying point, and, instead of appropriating $456,580, as provided for on page 84 of this bill, that amount will have to be increased to several million dollars.

The act approved August 10, 1917, provided that the guaranteed price of not less than $2 should be based on No. 1 northern spring wheat or its equivalent, delivered at the principal interior primary market, while this bill provides that the price shall be based on No. 2 northern spring wheat or its equivalent at not less than $2.50 per bushel, delivered at the local elevator or local railway market where such wheat is delivered from the farm where produced.

What this means to the consumer I do not feel free to predict; but when you take into consideration the fact that most of the wheat grown must pass through the hands of several parties before it reaches the mill, and each handling involves additional expense, it will be seen that flour prices must be figured on the basis of the total of these charges, or about $3 per bushel. The freight rate from the local elevator to the mill or terminal elevator, plus the elevator charges and commissions, will, no doubt, equal 30 cents per bushel, and if the wheat is then to be moved east the cost will be increased by an additional 20 cents. This will figure just 80 cents per bushel more than the present market price, or $3.52 more as the actual cost of wheat alone in a barrel of flour; and bread now costing 8 cents a loaf will be advanced to 10 cents, or just 25 per cent.

Therefore it will be seen that the bill not only fails to increase production but complicates the situation more by providing expensive and impracticable methods of handling what we do produce.

Mr. LESHER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the observations made by the gentleman from New Jersey are pertinent and rather convincing. He always speaks from personal investigation, and informs the House whenever he addresses it. However, I think the suggestion that we may have over 300,000,000 bushels of wheat unsold, under the stress of the demand in Europe, is hardly warranted. The demand from that quarter must increase with the continuance of the world war. Also I fear that the estimate of this year's crop which he has just announced is too high and that we will not have anything like the amount he suggests. We had better not proceed upon the basis of a surplus of wheat for the coming year.

I believe that the Congress was justified in the passing of the food control bill of last year, upon the basis that it prevented the allies going into the open market and bidding up the price of American products. In that regard, and in that only, it was justified. Price fixing by the Government when all the world was bidding for our products seemed necessary. I think, however, that the fixing of the price of any one farm product, such as wheat, without fixing the price of others, especially those used in wheat production as well as those that might be used as substitutes, is a very unfortunate blunder for the country. The fixing of a product of sale without fixing the product and articles needed for said production is unscientific and not justified from economic grounds. The fixing of the price of wheat was done because it was believed that unless the grower could be assured a stable price he would not increase the acreage. We therefore fixed a price for this year's crop to insure a greater acreage of planting, since the farmer would know that he would get a certain price if he planted it, no matter what the contingencies growing out of a world war might be. That was all right last year for this year's crop, but it will not do for next year, since the range of prices is not the same. This year, instead of his getting as good a price as last year in comparison with other products, which are not fixed by law, he finds wheat his least profitable crop. At the price of other farm products, which are the result of the law of supply and demand rather than legal enactment, there is no advantage at all in his sowing wheat, because he can get so much more for the substitutes for wheat. He will most certainly raise the crops which will yield the greatest profit at least risk and labor. I think it is perfectly foolish to talk about the raising of wheat if you can raise twice the amount of something else, like corn, and sell each bushel for as much or more than you can sell the wheat for. There is no doubt about that. It will not suffice to charge a lack of patriotism to the agriculturist if the Government, by its interference with the law of prices, makes wheat the least profitable crop the farmer raises. There is always great risk in the final outcome of a wheat crop. It must pass through the March period, when a good crop may be ruined by freezing. It must run the risk of the wheat pests. The farmer can never be sure of his wheat crop until he has it ready for the elevator. It must not be discouraged by a price below its comparative range with other products.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a single question?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that any legislation fixing the price of wheat or any other of these commodities now will add one bushel to the output this year?

Mr. FESS. It would add very little if anything this year. I admit that. It is too late to increase the yield. But a price fixed now will be a suggestion for another year, and if increase is necessary it will stimulate another year provided the price comparative will make wheat raising profitable. If it is not done then, wheat land will most certainly be abandoned for other crops more profitable. Instead of increasing the yield the Government has discouraged it.

My own opinion is that price fixing is an economic blunder. The year's experience has shown conclusively that it has been a palpable failure. The Food Administration, however sincere and arduous its labors, has completely broken down in the matter of prices.

Mr. OVERMYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. OVERMYER. Following the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], if that is true, as the gentleman from Ohio answered it, is it not a fact that the patriot who sold his wheat for what he could get is going to be the loser if this amendment is adopted, while the slacker who kept back his wheat will be the one who will make a profit on it?

Mr. FESS. The difficulty is here, that if the price is fixed by the Government as the minimum price, that minimum price becomes the maximum price to the producer. This is an economic principle so apparent that I need not press it. It is not the maximum price to the consumer, but it is the maximum price to the producer, because immediately the price announced becomes fixed whether the crop is purchased by the warehouseman or the Government becomes the buyer, the man selling it sells it for the price that is fixed by the Government. When that statement was made last year that the minimum price would become the maximum price many Members said it would not occur, but it certainly has occurred.

The wheat farmer for years past has followed the plan of thrashing his wheat from the field and taking it at once to the elevator. If the Government states a price, of course, the elevator will not offer more. The bulk of the wheat will be sold, and at the price named. It therefore becomes the maximum price to the grower. But before it is made into flour it passes through other hands, who may demand more than the grower's price. So the consumer of flour will find the minimum price to grower is not the maximum price to him. There is something in what my colleague says, if there is any interruption between the grower of wheat and the consumer of flour, as there generally is. In our fixing this price, if we pursue this policy, the wisdom of which I am greatly in doubt, we must fix it high enough in comparison with other articles to insure a profit in its growth, else we will be disappointed in the future wheat yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman might further answer his colleague from Ohio [Mr. OVERMYER] by saying that a farmer can not sell the crop of 1917 for this price without perjuring himself. This applies to the crop of 1918 only. When gentlemen talk about holding wheat they should remember that.

Mr. FESS. Now, let me give you some figures which were given to the Senate some days ago when this question was discussed. They are very suggestive as to the average yield and price of farm products for the 50 years preceding 1916. They include five standard articles, including wheat, corn, oats, barley, and rye. The average yield per acre of wheat was 12.94 bushels, realizing $11.34. The average yield per acre of corn, 25.4 bushels, realizing $11.28; that of oats was 28.22 bushels, yielding $9.54; that of barley was 23.53 bushels, yielding $13.66; while that of rye was 14.37 bushels, realizing $9.43.

It will here be noted that of these five articles the farmer realized as an average per acre about the same amount of money. When compared with wheat as the standard, they stood as 1 to 2 in the yield of corn. In other words, it was necessary for an acre to produce twice as many bushels of corn to make it as profitable as wheat. This was the comparison until we fixed the price of wheat. After that wheat stood stationary in price while corn doubled. This made it unprofitable to raise wheat. The increase of the other articles was due to an artificial legal demand for substitutes of wheat since the food-control authorities required the purchase of quantities of substitutes in order to secure flour.

The price of corn, for example, ranges so high that it will reach the market directly instead of the usual hog route. The farmer can not afford to feed his corn when he can get a better price for it when sold as corn rather than as live stock. There can be only one result of this situation, namely, a shortage of meat. This leads me to note the inevitable effect of such legislation upon the meat supply as a food. If we stimulate the price of feed by making it a food—in other words, if we require our people to substitute corn for wheat—we withdraw the feed for stock in the degree of the substitute. If the price of corn is thus shoved beyond that of wheat, as was the case this year, two things must follow: Farmers will either cease to raise hogs or will substitute wheat as a feed for corn. In this case the wheat supply for Europe must be lessened and the price of meat must be greatly increased. No farmer can afford to feed $2 corn to hogs unless he can secure an abnormal price for his pork. If it takes from 12 to 15 bushels of corn to produce 100 pounds of pork on the foot, that pork must be sold at prices prohibitive.

The cattle situation is similarly affected. The cattle feeders were assured that they could purchase safely stock for winter feeding and realize upon their corn and labor, but now they find, after having fed their corn into cattle for the corn-fed market, they are faced with competition that sees the corn-fed product sold at the same price that feeders are sold for. This discourages the cattlemen against corn feeding. It must be admitted that the Food Administration problem is stupendous. I have much sympathy for those attempting to work it out. Candor compels an admission that thus far it has been far from a success. The hit-and-miss method of price fixing, with the inevitable consequences, so palpable to anyone who is willing to observe, has been a serious procedure. I am in grave doubt about the wisdom of price fixing at all. I am sure that if it is justified at all, we should not single out one article and leave all others to be determined in the open market. I shall vote for the price of $2.50 on wheat, since if we omit all other articles wheat must be high enough to make it profitable to produce. If I followed my own judgment, I would leave the prices to the open market, and proceed to punish the speculator who hoarded any articles of food for speculative purposes. In this way we would secure the needed food products and maintain a reasonable price scale.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON].

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the statements of some of my colleagues that what little we have attempted to do in price fixing has not been very advantageous to the general welfare of the country. I am not much of a believer in the fixing of prices on every article in the market by a bureau in Washington or by a public official located in Washington or elsewhere. I believe that the underlying natural principles of commerce will fix the prices of commodities in the markets much better than the judgment of one man or the judgment of a collection of men, especially if that collection of men or that individual has not the highest experienced minds or mind that there are or is in the Nation.

Much has been said about the Government fixing the price of wheat. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture I did not understand that we were reporting a bill to fix the price of wheat. I understood that we were reporting a bill and asking Congress to enact into law a minimum guaranteed price to the agricultural producer of wheat. [Applause.] A price that would guarantee him his harvested crop against loss. And yet a little over one year after that law was passed, and as demonstrated by actual application, we find to our surprise, or to mine, at least, that by manipulation and by misinterpretation which no man expected, the minimum guaranteed price thus established by that act became not only the minimum but the maximum price also.

I say to you, my colleagues, that the honest intent of the act, as I understood it, was that we were helping the American farmer, guaranteeing him against loss of his wheat crop that he might raise and harvest. [Applause.]

Now, what has been done? Under that act the President of the United States was authorized, as you all know, to create and use such agency, and so forth, as he saw fit to put into effect the provisions of that law. That being so, I suppose he created the agency and appointed a Food Administrator. And yet I do not know that such branch of this Government was actually created, although we have seen considerable of its work. The reason I say that is shown by the following correspondence:

NASHUA, N. H., February 16, 1918.

Hon. E. H. WASON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

BROTHER WASON: Mr. Spaulding, our New Hampshire Food Administrator, has asked me to act as his personal representative in Nashua, and I have been doing so for a week or 10 days. Although I am sure I am receiving from the Concord office all the information relative to food-administration work that the present working machinery allows, I find I am not getting all the information that is necessary to enable me to be as helpful locally or even as intelligent as I would like to be in this important and interesting matter.

If possible to get it, I want a copy of the law authorizing the President to create the food commission and a copy of the Executive order of the President appointing Mr. Hoover. Do you suppose I could also get all circulars or pamphlets issued from Mr. Hoover's office, including those relating to licenses of food dealers, hoarding of food, and methods of securing compliance with the orders of the State food administrators?

Truly, yours,

H. P. GREELEY.

SIR: In response to your request of March 2, I have the honor to advise you that the Executive order of August 10, 1917, appointing Mr. Hoover as United States Food Administrator has not been made public, and for that reason I regret to say that your request can not be complied with.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 9, 1918.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your letter of March 6 is at hand and contents noted, and I am surprised to learn that you can not furnish me with a copy of the Executive order appointing Mr. Hoover United States Food Administrator.

Mr. Hoover is a public official of this country. The law was passed by Congress creating this position. I desire to ascertain just what responsibilities and authority the order appointing him conferred upon him. As a Member of Congress I am unable to receive that information.

Can I be permitted to read this Executive order if I personally call at your office?

Your early attention is respectfully solicited.

Respectfully, yours,

EDWARD H. WASON.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 18, 1918.

The Hon. E. H. WASON,
Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of March 9, asking permission to read the Executive order of August 10, 1917, appointing Mr. Hoover as United States Food Administrator.

In reply I wish to say that inasmuch as the order is confidential, and as I have no authority to show it to you, it is regretted that I can not comply with your request.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

ROBERT LANSING.

The author of the letter addressed me is a young lawyer residing in the city in which I live, a man of ability, of integrity, and solicitor of that city. He is also a personal representative of the State Food Administrator, and in connection with his duties as the local representative of the Food Administrator of the Nation and of my State, he evidently desired to ascertain the scope and power of his position in order that he might discharge the duties of his office properly. Being unable to obtain a copy of the Executive order appointing Herbert Hoover Food Administrator for Mr. Greeley for the reasons stated in the letter of the Department of State, signed by the Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing, I was surprised at such secrecy and began to wonder why, hence I turned to the act of Congress, dated August 10, 1917, and found that section 2 of the act provided as follows:

SEC. 2. That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to enter into any voluntary arrangements or agreements, to create and use any agency or agencies, to accept the services of any person without compensation, to cooperate with any agency or person, to utilize any department or agency of the Government, and to coordinate their activities so as to avoid any preventable loss or duplication of efforts or funds.

Knowing that the President had created a Fuel Administrator and appointed a distinguished citizen to that place, and that he had clothed him with certain powers and duties and had assigned certain other powers and duties authorized by that act to the Secretary of Agriculture, I wondered just what power and duty had been assigned to the Food Administrator to which, according to report and newspaper information, the President had appointed Herbert Hoover. His appointment, if made, the creation of that office, if created, became a matter of doubt in my mind; yet it seemed impossible that with such a large organization and as much advertising of the activities of the Food Administrator could be related in the press, in circulars, and in other ways, including the weekly page in the Literary Digest, with the picture of Mr. Hoover and sayings accredited to him relating to food conservation, that he was not exercising the duties of a legally created office or that he had not been legally appointed; and in order to understand clearly and comprehensively his powers and duties, I made the request personally for a certified copy, offering to pay the expense thereof, and later made the request for an opportunity to call at the office of the Secretary of State and read this heavily guarded, precious, secret document.

Mr. Speaker, for over a century our people have lived under a democratic form of government. Such a government has been our pride and the pride of our ancestors. In the early dawn of the twentieth century one can hardly understand and appreciate my amazement that a Member of a legislative branch of this Government is refused the opportunity of perusing an official document authorized by Congress. What subtle magic does this order contain? What secret that the American people or a Member of Congress should not know is therein? Is there anything in that document if made public would lend aid and comfort to our enemies? Is there anything in that document which, if made public, would be prejudicial to the administration or to our people or the peoples of our allies? And if that document does not contain some important secret above indicated, why should it be a confidential communication between the Executive of our people, the Department of State, and the man who is conserving the food resources of this Nation? There are no secrets in that act that Congress passed, and Congress intended no secrets in the administration of that act that the American people should not comprehend and know.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that that document contains no word, power, instruction, or prohibition that the loyal American citizen of this country can not be informed about, and I ask in all candor that the finger of suspicion may be dismissed by pitiless publicity and printing in full, or at least allowing Members of the legislative branch of this Government to be informed or read the contents thereof.

All over this broad land, in every State and in every community, are representatives of this Food Administrator. He is dealing directly with a hundred million souls to-day, and each of his subordinates and agents is entitled to know the powers, the duties, and the responsibilities of himself and his representatives; and I ask that the mantle of secrecy that enshrouds this sacred and important order be raised, thereby allaying and quieting any thought of suspicion or distrust of this important function of our Government at this time.

The proposition before the House relates to the modification or changing of the order of the President establishing a minimum guaranteed price of wheat for the 1918 harvest. The Senate amendment to this bill proposes the raising of that guaranteed minimum price of $2.20 per bushel at the primary markets to $2.50 per bushel at the local elevator or local railway market, where such wheat is delivered from the farm. The section of the country producing winter and spring wheat is the Northwest and Middle West. Here we find the great areas devoted to this important crop. We are told by some that it is essential to stimulate and encourage production to adopt this increased price. The winter wheat for 1918 was seeded long since, and is now nearing maturity, and the acreage thereof can not be affected by the proposed increase. Most of the area for the spring wheat is ready for seeding, and much of it has been seeded. Hence that argument is of no avail for this year's crop. Are our wheat areas limited in scope for the present crop? Statistics collected show that the winter wheat is about 67 per cent of our wheat production, and that the acreage planted last fall was 7,000,000 acres more than the average for the five years before the outbreak of the European war. With good climatic conditions there is no reason why this year's crop should not be a record-breaking crop. With unfavorable climatic conditions it will be otherwise, and a higher or lower minimum guaranteed price will not give us a greater or less production.

As bearing upon minimum guaranty affecting acreage planted, let me call your attention to the statistics of three States from the Northwest. For the five-year period from 1912 to 1916, inclusive, the States of Idaho, Oregon, and Washington averaged, for winter wheat, 1,950,000 acres, without any minimum guaranteed price. With a minimum guaranteed price of more than twice the average price of wheat prior to the establishment of the minimum price for this year's crop these same States seeded last fall only 1,286,000 acres. The American farmer is not satisfied with the minimum guaranteed price as provided in the act of 1917, for the reason that by interpretation and manipulation the Food Administration has arranged conditions surrounding the wheat crop so that the guranteed minimum price is the maximum price. It is one price. The Food Administration, by the license system and orders, control all the buyers of wheat, and those purchasers so controlled can not pay the market price of wheat, because if the market price of wheat exceeded the minimum guaranteed price these purchasers so licensed will lose their respective licenses. The theory, of course, in establishing a minimum guaranteed price was that it would induce the agriculturist to increase acreage and increase production of wheat and to protect that producer from overproduction or importation from other countries into our own.

The producer of wheat under the principle laid down by Congress was secure of a minimum price, which was much higher than the average price of wheat, against competition, overproduction, speculation, and manipulation. The farmer or producer had to take his chances only with the climatic or season's conditions with his crop. Once the crop was harvested and matured he was safe and secure against loss. How have that theory and that understanding and that act of Congress been administered? First, has the Food Administration been legally created? Do we know what its powers and duties are, and can we ascertain those powers and duties until the darkness and the mantle of secrecy is raised that now enshrouds it in safety in a Cabinet office? Second, what has the Food Administration done? They have licensed every miller in the country. They have prohibited and prevented competition by foreign countries from bidding for our wheat—and I do not complain about that. They have established the minimum guaranteed price as the maximum price of wheat by means of licensing the millers and others who buy wheat. A miller who pays more than the minimum guaranteed price loses his license. They being the great purchasers of this food product, when they are controlled it controls the price per bushel of the entire season's crop.

Under the law as passed by Congress every grower of wheat in this land is entitled to such price for his wheat as market conditions may regulate, free from manipulation and speculation. Under the administration of Mr. Hoover, by circumvention and manipulation and control of the purchasers of wheat, the act of Congress thus administered does not mean what Congress intended it should mean. Let this act be administered according to the purpose and intent of the lawmakers and the feeling of discrimination among the tillers of the soil will be dispelled. Let us assume the authority, or let us provide authority, for fixing the price of all articles of food, of raiment, and machinery needed for agricultural production and industrial essentials that are vital for war purposes. Let us have one rule for all. Let us not fix prices for one class for their protection and leave that class to the mercy of all other classes without price fixing for products that this class may have to buy from the others. Let this Congress follow the golden rule and fix a price on every commodity or abandon any price fixing by the Government. Let us oblige the Food Administration to administer this act fairly, and not allow it to change that act to price-fixing legislation by limiting the purchasing market by means of a license system. Let the Food Administration give all a "square deal"—the producer, the consumer, and Congress who enacts the law.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, when the food-control bill was before this House I favored its passage. I thought food regulation was a war necessity. I did not, however, favor the fixing of the prices of farm products, and I so stated in my remarks made at that time. I did not think that it was wise to attempt to control artificially the prices of wheat, corn, and other farm products. However, the majority of the Members of the House disagreed with me, and the bill as it was passed contained a provision to the effect that there should be a guaranteed minimum price for the 1918 crop of wheat of $2 per bushel at the principal interior primary markets. This act became effective August 10, 1917. Following the passage of this act, on August 30, 1917, the President issued an order to the Food Administration that the Government price to be paid for wheat would be $2.20 per bushel. The Government price, of course, fixed the price of wheat at Chicago at $2.20 per bushel. That price has secured to the wheat grower an average price of about $1.90 per bushel, and that price will continue unless some change is made in the law or by rule or order of the President.

The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan is to incorporate into the food-control act a provision that the farmer shall receive, at the principal interior primary markets, a minimum price of $2.50 a bushel for his 1918 crop of wheat.

As I have said, I do not think it advisable to fix the price of farm products, but if the law is that a guaranteed price shall be fixed for wheat, then I believe this amendment to the law should be adopted. This view of the matter, I think, can be sustained by good and sufficient reasons.

The principal object of the passage of the food-control act was conservation of our food supplies. We early appreciated that food was to be a mighty factor in this contest, and that if we were to win the war and at the same time protect our people against the exactions of the profiteers, we must establish a control of food products. Wheat and wheat flour, it was known, were prime factors in the problem. For this reason a majority of the Congress thought it best to establish a minimum price on this product. From that time to this, every effort of our Government has been to conserve wheat and increase its production. We are told the allies must have a considerable, perhaps a major portion, of our wheat. The people of Italy, England, and France, not accustomed to the use of corn, demand and require wheat flour for their sustenance. Also, the corn products, which we have in abundance, do not stand shipment across the waters. Therefore we have saved and economized and cut down our use of wheat and are shipping every pound of wheat and wheat flour we can spare to our soldiers and allies across the seas. This is as it should be. No one objects to it. I have yet to hear the first American grumble at his deprivation. [Applause.] The Food Administration has issued order after order intended to conserve wheat. On April 14 every baker in the country, under orders from the Food Administration, began to use substitutes for wheat flour in his bakery products, varying from 15 per cent in crackers to 66⅔ per cent in such products as quick breads and waffles.

The average percentage of substitutes under that order is 33⅓ per cent. The amount of bread to be served to any one person at a meal at any public eating house was fixed at 2 ounces. Under rule 25, after February 24, 1918, a miller can not sell wheat flour to a baker unless the baker buys 1 pound of wheat-flour substitutes for every 4 pounds of wheat flour purchased. Under rule 31 of the same orders retailers must not sell wheat flour to any person unless such person buys at the same time an equal amount of wheat-flour substitutes. It will thus be seen that in one year's time the people of the United States have been artificially restricted to the purchase of one-third of the normal amount of wheat flour purchased by them. This has been done to conserve wheat. It is universally conceded that we must save and raise every pound of wheat we possibly can. It is claimed by our Food Administration that we must raise 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat this year to maintain ourselves and our allies. This will necessitate an increase about 40 per cent over the past year's crop. I have no doubt the statement made is correct.

Conceding, therefore, that it is necessary to stimulate the production of wheat, the inquiry is whether the increase of the price of wheat to $2.50 a bushel will promote that object. It is not so much an object whether the wheat flour will thereby be increased in price to us as it is to produce more wheat. We can afford to pay a little more if we can thereby get something which will make it easier to win the war. I have no doubt this increase of price will produce the desired result of an increase in the supply of wheat.

I think I am stating an axiom when I say that nothing will so stimulate production as high prices. Fix a good price for a certain farm product and the farmer will naturally raise all he can of it. Fix a poor price and he will turn his attention to some other crop or product. What is true on the farm is true anywhere. It is a universal rule. If banking is more profitable than anything else, every man who can will be a banker. If the practice of criminal law is more remunerative than any other branch, every lawyer who can will practice in that field. If prices are to be fixed on wheat by law, if we would stimulate production to its highest, we must fix a high price for it to the producer.

Wherever you select any particular farm crop and discriminate against it by legislation, you automatically decrease production in that crop. The very fact that wheat is selected as an object of legislation, and a fixed return is established for the labor and means employed in making such a crop, discourages those who may be engaged in raising it, unless you place such a high price upon it that there is no chance of other crops being so profitable. So long as there is a chance of something else being more profitable, the ordinary man will, under ordinary circumstances, usually raise that other crop.

Another proposition I make, which I think must be conceded, is this: In order to make the maximum production of wheat, you must fix such a price that it is manifest the wheat crop will be more valuable to the producer than some other crop would be on the same land. I have said that about the average price paid to the farmer for the 1917 crop of wheat was $1.90 per bushel. At present prices of other farm products, wheat at this price is not as profitable a crop as is almost any other farm crop. Let me illustrate by some concrete examples from my own State. I live in the military tract of Illinois, where our farm lands are very productive and range from $100 to $300 per acre; I presume $175 per acre is about a fair average. It is not strictly a wheat country, but good wheat can be and is raised there. We also raise corn and oats, and some barley, but not much of the latter. An average crop of the farm products, at present prices, would produce the following results:

Wheat, 20 bushels per acre, at $1.90	$38.00
Corn, 50 bushels per acre, at $1.15	57.50
Oats, 50 bushels per acre, at $0.85	42.50
Barley, 40 bushels per acre, at $1.50	60.00

The slightest consideration of this statement will immediately convince anyone that the farmer who engages in wheat growing is not using his land to the best financial advantage. You must put wheat on equal grounds with other cereal crops, and to do so you must raise the price. No one can expect land to be used for the production of crops at a loss from its real money-producing value. In addition, to make the difference more pronounced, the farmer with his oats crop in my latitude usually starts a crop of clover with his oats, and thus accomplishes a double purpose. It will be understood, furthermore, that there are very large tracts of land in this country where spring wheat can be raised, but where its raising is a somewhat precarious proposition.

All through my section of the country, where an average crop of 20 bushels of wheat can be raised, we have learned to fear the chinch bug in connection with spring wheat. I remember to have seen them sweep through our country like a devouring demon and lay waste everything in their path. So serious was the blow to wheat raising in Illinois, that for many years, no spring wheat was raised in the greater part of the central Mississippi Valley. Just now, some return to spring wheat has taken place, and if this bill passes, in my judgment, it will have a tendency to stimulate more spring-wheat production in the central Mississippi Valley. However, the Illinois farmer knows when he embarks in the raising of spring wheat on a large scale, the chinch bug pest will return. There is no such discouraging prospect when he raises corn and oats.

The cost of raising and harvesting a crop of corn is not much more than the raising of a crop of wheat. During the years 1908–1912 the agricultural department of the University of Minnesota conducted a series of researches to ascertain the respective costs of producing cereal grains of various kinds. Their work is detailed in Bulletin 145 of that institution. The cost of producing and harvesting an acre of spring wheat was found to be $13.038; of corn, $16.207; and of oats, $13.07. A similar set of experiments was conducted by the College of Agriculture of the University of Missouri in 1913–14, a statement of which is found in Bulletin 125 of that institution. The respective cost is given as: Corn, $13.522; wheat, $12.30; and oats, $10.87. These results, of course, were obtained from medium-priced lands of a value of about $50 to $60 per acre.

It is manifest that there is not enough difference in expense to justify a farmer in raising wheat at $1.90 when he can produce corn at $1.25 or more, if it is entirely a question of financial return. Wheat must be put on a competing basis with corn and oats. I am speaking now of the general rule. I have no doubt that many farmers are this year raising wheat from patriotic motives, where something else will pay better, and that this will continue in the future.

I have recently received from Prof. W. J. Spillman, of the Bureau of Farm Management, a letter which is illuminating and which illustrates the proposition I have just been speaking of. It reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF FARM MANAGEMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 3, 1918.

Hon. W. J. GRAHAM,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GRAHAM: Replying to your communication of March 6 concerning the cost of production of wheat, particularly of grade No. 2 of northern spring wheat, I will say that while we have considerable data on the cost of wheat production, very little of it is from the northern spring wheat area.

We find the cost varies so widely from farm to farm and from locality to locality—in fact, there is wide variation even on the same farm in different fields—we feel that the figures we have are not a sufficient basis for drawing conclusions. Under the circumstances, therefore, it is not believed to be desirable for the department to make public the fragmentary data it possesses on the subject. We could, of course, give you some data in confidence, which would make it of little value to you.

It may be of interest to you to know that in reports just received from our survey in West Virginia the farmers of that State report an increase of 28,000 acres of wheat, or 8 per cent of the acreage of last year, and of 20,000 acres of corn, an increase of 25 per cent over last year's acreage. We attribute this difference to the stronger economic position of corn at the present time.

These figures bear out an opinion which has been forced upon us by our study of this subject, that the cost of producing a single farm product is not the only, or even the most important, factor in determining the price of that product. If the price of a single product is fixed at a lower relative level than the price of other products, farmers, most of whom are free to choose between a number of crops, will naturally gravitate toward those crops that are most profitable. We believe, therefore, that very serious consideration should be given to factors other than cost of production when arbitrary price fixation is undertaken by governmental agency.

Yours, very truly,

W. J. SPILLMAN, Chief.

(Dictated by Prof. Spillman and signed after he left the office.)

But it is said that the amendment, concerning only the crop of 1918, will not increase the production of wheat for this year. I do not agree with this. Thousands of acres in the Northern States can still be seeded to spring wheat, if this bill promptly passes. I believe that those who are opposed to this amendment have attempted to delay its passage with this argument in mind. I believe, in the northern part of my own State of Illinois even, there are many areas that can yet be seeded to wheat. Again, there are thousands of acres of winter wheat, which for one reason or another may appear to promise only a meager yield of perhaps 5 or 10 bushels per acre, which will be plowed up and planted in corn unless this amendment is adopted. Two years ago I knew of one tract of 800 acres of wheat in my district which was treated exactly this way. The farmer is not apt to raise 10 bushels of $1.90 wheat if he can raise on the same ground 50 bushels of $1.25 or $1.75 corn. An increased price for wheat will save a great deal of this wheat acreage. An increased price also will prevent the feeding of wheat to live stock. How much of this has been done I do not know, but probably considerable. A price of $2.50 for wheat will promise conservation of every bushel of wheat. It is also no doubt true that if Congress passes this amendment it will be considered that the attitude of the Government is to favor a reasonable profit for wheat growing. This will induce farmers to plant a greater area to fall wheat than heretofore, and while the price fixed by the amendment immediately affects only the crop of 1918, it will have the effect to greatly increase the crop of 1919. Fail to pass it, however, and the farmer, believing the attitude of Congress is unfriendly to wheat, will be inclined to decrease his 1919 acreage.

It is generally thought that the farmers of the country are making untold profits out of their farming operations. We judge that to be true from the immense prices we pay for all farm products when converted into food and sold to us. But, as a matter of fact, it is not the farmer who makes the profit. The bulk of it is made by middlemen and jobbers.

Take a few concrete instances: Corn is selling at $1.25 or more per bushel of 56 pounds. One of the substitutes for wheat flour that is prescribed by the Food Administration is corn meal. Corn meal sells at 7 cents per pound; and while 56 pounds of corn is worth $1.25, 56 pounds of corn meal is worth $3.92. Who gets the difference of $2.67? Who gets two-thirds of the price? It is not the farmer. Hominy, another substitute, sells for 7½ cents per pound; while 56 pounds of corn sells for $1.25, 56 pounds of hominy sells for $4.20. A pound of corn will make a pound of hominy. Who gets the difference—$2.95? Again, who gets two-thirds of the profit? It is not the farmer. Oats sells for 85 cents per bushel of 32 pounds. Rolled oats, however, sells for 7½ cents a pound, and rolled oats is nothing but oats run through rollers. While 32 pounds of oats sells for 85 cents, 32 pounds of rolled oats sells for $2.40. Who gets the difference of $1.55? Who takes two-thirds of the profits? It is not the farmer. Barley sells for $1.50 a bushel of 48 pounds. Barley flour, another substitute, sells for 9 cents a pound. While 48 pounds of barley brings $1.50, 48 pounds of barley flour brings $4.32. Who gets the difference of $2.82? Who, again, makes two-thirds of the profit? It is not the farmer. Many other products might be thus compared.

I respectfully submit to the Food Administration that these are matters that present food for thought. By the order of the Food Administration, wheat alone is limited in price, and as a result wheat flour is cheaper than it otherwise would be, but at the same time our consumption of wheat flour is reduced to one-third of the normal, while we use two-thirds of substitutes. And these substitutes, which constitute two-thirds of our consumption, soar to the skies, and the profiteer plies his trade and imposes such burdens as he pleases upon the people. What does it profit our people to save money on wheat flour and spend vastly more on something else? Thereby they suffer a double privation—they deprive themselves of wheat flour and pay more because of it. The people are willing to go without wheat flour absolutely if it will help the country. But the point I make is that you should not place the blame for the high cost of living on the farmer. He is not responsible, nor does he make the profit.

Finally, I am certain in my own mind that the farmer can not under present conditions make a profit at wheat raising in many parts of the country. It is probably true that in the northern wheat countries, where large tracts are planted to wheat, the business may be profitable; but in the central Mississippi Valley, where diversified farming on smaller farms is practiced, wheat raising is not now profitable. A price of $1.90 a bushel for wheat five years ago would have promised great returns; now it does not. The difference arises from the difference in the cost of producing the crop. There are three factors in the problem that affect the high cost of production. They are labor, conscription, and the cost of machinery and living.

I presume the section of the country I live in is fairly typical of the balance of the farming country. The labor situation there is critical. Farm hands are almost unobtainable at any price. Three years ago farm hands received from $30 to $35 a month. Now, they are demanding and receiving $75 a month, their board, and a horse kept. One hand I know of specified $75 a month, his board, and gasoline for his Ford. He got it, and the farmer was glad to get him. Anyone who has been through that country knows the dire need of farm labor. It is not to be had. Recently we passed a bill for the mobilization of labor for the farms. The plan is to go into the cities and pick up men or go to the high schools and get boys and take them to the farms and let them farm. The gentlemen who preside over some of our departments evidently think that all you need to do is to take a man or boy to a farm and let him farm. To one who knows something of farming this is a joke. Farming to-day is a science. The successful farmer must understand the chemistry of the soil; he must be somewhat of a veterinarian; he must unders and animal husbandry; he must understand the art of surface and deep cultivation. He must have an intimate knowledge of a thousand things which the city worker or the schoolboy never heard of. Most of these mobilized city or high-school workers will require a man each to watch them and tell them what to do. I have a mental vision of one of these mobilized workers pu ting in a crop or officiating as midwife at the birth of a litter of pigs or a colt some squally spring night. Somebody somewhere must enlarge his mental vision and appreciate that you can only farm successful with farmers.

I do not believe the general public appreciate how much the selective draft has affected the farmers of the country. The intention of the act and the intention of Congress was to keep farmers on the farms, where they could be more useful than in the field. Otherwise the provision would not have been inserted in that act permitting rules to be promulgated extending special exemptions to agricultural workers. But no such exemptions have been granted, except in very exceptional cases. I think the proportion of agricultural workers taken into the military service has been as great as that from any other walk of life. Recently I inquired of the Provost Marshal General as to the situation in my district. The district is mixed urban and country. In this district 18,159 men were registered; of these, 5,834 were agricultural registrants. From the district 1,417 men have been accepted for military service and of these 485 are agricultural workers. Thus it will be seen that only 0.321 of the total registrants are farmers, while 0.335 of those taken are farmers, a difference of 0.014 against the farmers.

Understand me, the farmers are not complaining. If the Nation needs their boys in the Army, the farmers are ready to give them willingly and ungrudgingly. Whatever is best for the Nation they want to do. But if we want our farms to run at full capacity, it would be wise to leave as many genuine farmers on the farms as is possible. The recent agricultural furlough act will help a great deal if properly administered.

Finally, the cost of farming operations is more than doubled over the days before the European war began. Farm labor has more than doubled. Everything the farmer buys has more than doubled. On February 27, 1918, the farm implements committee, representing the industry, made a report to the Secretary of Agriculture presenting the necessity of increased prices for their products. On page 9 of this report the following table is given, which is interesting in this connection:

Percentage of increase, 1918 over 1914.

14-inch walking plow	80 to 87½
16-inch sulky plow	85 to 92½
14-inch gang plow, 2 bottom	85 to 93
14-inch engine plow, 3 bottom	80 to 84
Riding cultivators	90 to 98
5-foot mowers	70 to 76
7-foot binders	65 to 71
70-bushel spreader	60 to 68
Farm tractor	45 to 60

The food that he eats, the clothes he wears, almost everything he uses has more than doubled. None of these prices are regulated by law. Thus the farmer finds that while he is restricted in the price he may get for his wheat, the people who sell to him are not restricted in their charges. This makes farming to-day a much more expensive and precarious business. In the early part of my remarks I alluded to certain estimates of crop costs made as a result of experiments in Minnesota and Missouri. I believe to-day, with our higher-priced lands, these estimates might be doubled. I feel certain this is true in my section. If so, instead of $13.038 as the cost of an acre of wheat and $16.207 for corn, and $13.07 for oats, the estimate would be $26.06 per acre for wheat, $32.40 for corn, and $26.14 for oats. Taking into account the chances a farmer takes with drought and storms and insect plagues, the business of farming under war conditions is not the bed of roses it is supposed to be.

These are my reasons, substantially, for supporting this amendment. I believe, if adopted, it will greatly increase our supply of wheat and help win the war.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER].

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to represent a State whose chief and fundamental industry is farming. My constituency includes a large proportion of people who live in the cities as well as farmers. I do not believe, however, that in supporting this measure for $2.50 wheat that I am voting against the interests of anyone in my district or any group of citizens in the United States. It is not a sectional matter with me. It is the principle of a square deal. The farmers want a fair field and no favor. Farming is the basis of our national credit and prosperity, and when the farmers prosper the people in cities also prosper.

Let us take this matter up from the standpoint of the increased cost of flour to the consumer. The average consumption of flour per capita in the United States is one barrel a year. If we raise the price of wheat 30 cents at the terminal markets, it will only be an increase of $1.35 a barrel for each citizen. Each consumer then would only have to pay an additional 11¼ cents a month for his flour. This is a small amount for the consumer and it means millions to the producer. On the other hand, if the Government will take the millers under control by eliminating their excess profits, the price of a barrel of flour would not be increased one cent. If we eliminate bread profiteering in all branches, the loaf can be sold for less than it is now.

Let me give you comparative prices for bread in the different countries which are now at war. In France and Italy one can buy from the Government about 4¼ ounces of bread for 1 cent. In England one can obtain 3 ounces for a cent, and poor, starving Belgium, after passing through three years of ruthless warfare, sells bread to its consumers at the rate of 3¼ ounces for 1 cent. Here in the city of Washington we are compelled to pay 1 cent for 2 ounces. Think of it! You can buy over twice as much bread with the same money in France and Italy as you can in the United States to-day. Yes, some one says that the Government pays part of this, but that only applies to England, and the amount which the Government pays in furnishing bread to its people is less than the additional cost of shipping in the wheat, most of which it imports from the United States. Accurate figures prove that there are 345 12-ounce loaves of bread in a barrel of flour. At 6 cents a loaf this means $20.70. I shall take bread in this case at the lowest price it has been sold for during war times. I understand, however, that a 14-ounce loaf is being sold for 10 cents in many communities. Figuring the loss of feed, the farmer only receives $7.44 out of each barrel of flour. Somebody else receives $13.26. The fact in the matter is that if we will eliminate the excess profits of the millers and those who handle the bread, a 12-ounce loaf could be sold for less than it is to-day, providing we do pay the farmers $2.50 for their wheat. Let us look for a minute at the profit the millers have been making. It has been as high as 175 per cent in one year. The flour millers' net profits increased from 11 cents a barrel in the crop year of 1912–13 to 52 cents a barrel in 1916–17; operating profits per barrel in 1916–17 increased nearly 175 per cent over the preceding year, and the rate of profit on investment increased more than 100 per cent it was pointed out in the first installment of the report of the Federal Trade Commission's general food investigation.

The investigation was a part of the general food inquiry made by the commission by direction of the President. The section made public to-day deals only with wheat flour milling and jobbing, but further installments will take up the packing industry and other branches of profiteering in food. Not only have the millers made big profits but prices were fixed on cattle and hogs, and as a result the packers made big profits also. In looking over Swift & Co.'s financial statement I find that its balance sheet, September 30, 1917, published on page 56 of its yearbook, reports a profit of dividends paid of $10,000,000; added to surplus, $24,650,000; profits for the year, $34,650,000; on a capital stock of $100,000,000 and a surplus of $59,965,000. In looking over the report for former years I find that Swift & Co.'s profits for 1913 were reported to be $9,250,000; for 1914, $9,450,000. According to the reports, profits have increased more than 300 per cent over those years.

If we are going to fix the price of the farmers' wheat, let us cut out the excess profits that the millers are still making. Let us fix the price of bran and shorts. Let us fix the price on implements, on harness, on clothing, shoes, and all the other commodities which the farmer and consumer are compelled to buy at extortionate prices. According to a statement made two or three years ago before the committee by Dr. Spillman, Chief of the Office of Farm Management, Department of Agriculture, one who has made a life study of the subject, the farmer, with his family, with an average of 4.6 persons, gets $142 in cash every year as the earnings of the family, in addition to $260 for food, fuel, and house rent. According to Dr. Spillman's statement, an average of $30.87 cash for a year's work to provide themselves with groceries, clothing, and other necessaries to maintain life.

In view of the liberal profits allowed the miller, the packer, the implement manufacturer, the munition manufacturer, and in view of the compensation guaranteed to railroads and the increased price in farm machinery, in wages paid farm labor, and the expenses all along the line incident to production, is it asking too much to allow the producer to sell in open, unrestricted markets and to give him the benefit of the law of supply and demand or that accorded to others; and if price fixing is to be resorted to, if he is to be singled out, can we not afford to grant this slight increase?

In North Dakota to-day they are selling hides for 7 cents a pound; a new harness costs $100. The farmer raises the leather and sells the 80 pounds in the harness for $5.60. He pays $94.40 for labor and profits—mostly profits. Similar injustices prevail in everything that the farmer and the consumer must buy.

From our own experience in buying we know how rapidly everything but flour has increased in price.

Mr. Speaker, this price fixing should be determined by the cost of production. I have mentioned the name of Dr. Spillman, of the United States Department of Agriculture, and read a letter from him in regard to the cost of production. Dr. Spillman appeared before the price-fixing committee last year and made the statement that in 1917 it cost $2.11 on the average to raise a bushel of wheat in the United States. Dr. Ladd, president of the North Dakota Agricultural College, showed figures before the price-fixing board proving that it cost $2.08 to raise a bushel of wheat in the Northwest. Senator Pendray, from North Dakota, made a statement that it cost $1.92 a bushel on his farm, and, by the way, this is a fair average price for what the farmer receives now for his wheat in North Dakota. Farm experts have shown that it costs $16.50 to raise an acre of wheat—this is from the time you put the seed in the ground until you dump the grain into the elevator, and, mind you, this does not include the loss of soil fertility, which is $4.50 on a 10-bushel crop.

I want to say here that in North Dakota we have an agricultural college which has better machinery for determining the cost of production and the milling value of wheat than we have in Washington. Dr. E. F. Ladd, the president of the college, has a flour mill on the campus and determines the milling of all grades of wheat. I can obtain more information from our agricultural college at Fargo than I can from the great Agricultural Department here in Washington, which costs the people of this country over $25,000,000 a year.

In 1916 we raised an average of 5½ bushels of wheat in North Dakota and in 1917 it was 7½. You can plainly see that with $2 or less at local elevator and a yield of 7½ bushels of wheat the farmer's gross receipts would be about $15. The cost of production is $16.50, and consequently the average farmer is losing money raising wheat at the price of $2.20. I admit, however, that the gentlemen from Kansas and Nebraska, where they raise 20 and 30 bushels of wheat each year, can make a profit out of $2.20 wheat, and so as not to reflect on my own State I want to say that with the average yield of 11 bushels, prior to the European war, the average farmer broke even in this wheat-raising game. But in spite of this loss I want to say that the farmers of the Northwest are ready and willing to patriotically serve their country and do their utmost to raise a bumper crop, and take $2.20 a bushel for it, if we go down the line and fix the price on everything they as consumers have to buy. In doing this the farmer is not only doing his bit but his all. If you do not fix the price of shoes, clothing, implements, fertilizer, and everything else that the farmer must buy, then I believe the Government should assure the farmer a better price for what he has to raise.

At the beginning of this Congress the President appeared before this body and delivered the following words, which I quote from his message:

> Recent experience has convinced me that Congress must go further in authorizing the Government to set limits to the prices. The law of supply and demand, I am sorry to say, has been replaced by the law of unrestrained selfishness.
>
> While we have eliminated profiteering in several branches of industry it still runs impudently rampant in others.
> The farmers, for example, complain with a great deal of justice that while regulation of food products restricts their incomes no restraints are placed upon the prices of most of the things they themselves must purchase, and similar iniquities obtain on all sides.

The President is right, and I thoroughly agree with him. When an effort has been made to fix the price of all other commodities in accord with his request, I shall be the first one to see that wheat is put on the same basis it is now.

Let me cite you a few prices on April 12. Take corn, which is selling at $1.70 a bushel—and you all know that corn has been much higher than this. Corn always brought about half as much as wheat on the open market; therefore wheat would be worth $3.40. In the corn belt they raise an average of 75 bushels of corn per acre, while wheat averaged 14 bushels per acre. Take it also from the standpoint of nutrition. Twelve bushels of wheat are equivalent to 20 bushels of corn in its feeding value; consequently wheat would be worth $2.83, as compared to corn. Barley sold for $1.78 a bushel. In North Dakota we can raise 3 bushels of barley to 1 of wheat; therefore wheat, at the same proportional price, would be worth $5.34. Rye sold on that day for $2.65. We can raise 2 bushels of rye to 1 of wheat; consequently, in the same ratio, wheat would bring $5.30 a bushel.

If we are to fix the price on wheat, why, then we should fix the price on all the substitutes also. The consumer goes to the market to-day and he pays a certain price for flour, and then he pays a higher price for every substitute that he is compelled to buy through the order of the Food Administration. Corn meal, oatmeal, barley flour, and all the substitutes are much higher than wheat flour. The consumer when he pays for his flour and his substitutes is required to pay more than he would for the equivalent in pure flour.

Cotton sold for 5 and 6 cents before the war. It is now selling as high as 31 cents. A short time ago it brought 40 cents. I would vote against $2.50 wheat with the same reluctance as the gentlemen who raise cotton would vote for 15-cent cotton in preference to 25-cent cotton, but if conditions were reversed and the farmers were receiving a high price for wheat and the price had been fixed on cotton at 15 cents, in all justice to the farmers of the South I would vote for higher-priced cotton.

It is unnecessary for me to call your attention to the enormous profits that are being made off of steel, off of guns, ammunition, and all the things, except flour, that the Government is buying. It would only be a repetition of the Hog Island incident, and Congress is well acquainted with these facts. One thing can be said though, even if we fix the price of wheat at $2.50, the farmers can not be classed as "profiteers." We must be consistent. We can not have a semiprice-fixing program, but it must be applied to all things alike. We should not discriminate against the wheat grower and penalize him for the product that is most needed to win the war. I would rather see the price of wheat stay at $2.20, providing that all other things were fixed in accord for the sake of the thousands of people in the cities whose salaries are already too small to reach the high cost of living, which is ever increasing. I spent the first six weeks of my official life in Washington trying to obtain a fair price for wheat.

If I can be assured right now by the committee that prices of all products will be fixed on the same basis as wheat, I shall not vote for $2.50 wheat. I feel that if we raise wheat 30 cents and do not curb the profiteers, the farmer will have to pay back the 30-cent raise with interest. In other words, the profiteers will get it if we do not restrain their uncurbed selfishness, to protect the farmers and consumers alike.

The farmer, however, is tired of reading in the reactionary newspapers that he is making all the money out of the cost of living. Just the other day I read that the New York department of foods and markets stated that out of the average dollar paid by the ultimate consumer the farmer receives 35 cents and the distribution system 65 cents. Think that over. For the farmer's produce the middlemen receive two-thirds of the consumer's dollar and the farmer only receives one-third for producing it. I do not claim it is illegitimately handled, but I do claim that it is legitimately mishandled. Our Government will be compelled to work out a plan before this war is over to eliminate all the unnecessary middlemen in the great marketing centers, as it has eliminated the gamblers in the wheat pits. In so doing it will carry out the program that the Nonpartisan League has been advocating for the past three years. The object of the Nonpartisan League is to bring the producer and consumer closer together, thereby giving the farmer a fair profit for what he produces and also reducing the price to the men who must buy the food that he raises. Two-thirds of the dollar gives plenty of margin for both adjustments.

Other industries do not take the chances that the farmer does. As you know, farming is one of the biggest gambles there is. He puts his time, labor, and money into his business in the spring, and then he takes the chances of hail, drought, rust, and other elements that may destroy his entire crop, while interest plus a generous profit is the worst that can happen to the profiteer. When the munition makers, the shipbuilders, and the manufacturers come down to Washington, the Government says to them, "How much money do you want to borrow? How much profit do you desire on your produce? Have you a labor shortage? Is there anything else we can do?" We guarantee them everything, including money, labor, and profits. But what do you say to the farmer? Nothing.

Our enormous exports for the last few years have been the wonder of the civilized world. We have surprised ourselves with their magnitude. Ships loaded with gold come from all nations to our shores. These things have contributed largely to the present prosperous conditions of certain sections of our country. It is well to pause and reflect upon the sources from which these exports come. Nearly 80 per cent of the products that have produced these vast sums have been wrung from the soil by the producers. In faith the farmer has sown and planted. He has with industry cultivated and with rejoicing harvested the grain and cotton that has gone abroad to feed and clothe the people of other nations. He has reared, watched, cared for, and fed the herds and flocks which, together with the grain and cotton, have brought twice their value to the distributors and carriers of farm products.

To-day, with his products, the farmer stands as a breastwork against the possibility of the rule of autocracy. In the considerations of questions that affect the welfare of the Nation no group of citizens are entitled to greater or more candid attention, and yet, during all our deliberations here, the farmer, with his vast contributions to the general welfare, receives comparatively little consideration. His interests have not been directly attacked, but quietly ignored. I do not say this to complain. I realize that in an advanced state of civilization society will always be divided into groups. We have our business men, farmers, bankers, mechanics, and professional men. It is the function of government to see that no group is favored to the injury of other groups; that much government should do; the farmer does not expect it to do more. Nothing short of united, determined public opinion will bring the necessary relief. Because of their general isolated condition and want of organization, they have failed in the past to contribute their share toward molding public opinion in proportion to their numbers and magnitude of their contributions to society.

To-day the farmer is awake to the things that pertain to his own interests. The farmers' movement is inspired by patriotism, based on truth and justice, organized by reason, propagated by education, and perpetuated through sheer necessity. He has learned that the ballot box is the natural place for the American people to fight their economic troubles. They ask for no special favors, but demand even-handed justice and exemption from threatened dangers. They desire to live and let live. Their purpose is not to tear down but to build up. Their demands are not made solely for themselves, but in behalf of all the great interests of the Republic. Without a reasonably prosperous agriculture other interests can not prosper.

The farmer has ever been the mainstay of the Nation in times of peace and war. While he is a peace-loving citizen, he would rather fight than sacrifice principle. Since the time the Minute Man of Concord left his plow standing in the furrow, the farmers have been the vanguard in every movement for democracy. He has not and he will not fail the Nation in this crisis. He has increased his acreage this year in spite of discouragement and price fixing. The farming districts have met their quota of the third liberty loan with quicker response than in other sections of the country. I am proud to say that North Dakota oversubscribed the second liberty loan by 72 per cent, which was the greatest additional subscription for any State in the Union. This year the State legislature passed a law and have loaned the farmers over $4,000,000 to plant a large crop in order to feed ourselves and our allies. While he does not hold his views on public questions loosely, he does not question the loyalty or patriotism of those who simply differ with him on economic questions. The farmer fired the first shot in the great conflict that gave us liberty, independence, and power. That liberty they still prize, and to-day you will find the aged farmer, with his wife, daughters, and boys of tender years, toiling from early morn until late at night to help feed and clothe the world, while his first born, to whom he looked to be the stay and comfort of his old age, is in the trenches "somewhere in France" fighting to make the world safe for democracy and democracy safe for the world.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I come from that part of the country where we can raise wheat and corn each with success. But if we raise wheat at $2.20 a bushel and corn, as we ordinarily produce it, we will make at least $2 from our corn where we make $1 from our wheat. That is true in our part of the country. I thought it was true over in eastern Iowa, where I was born and raised, the State from which the gentleman hails, who was talking about the rapacity of the wheat raisers trying to boost the prices, and how corn should be left immune—that old fifth district, where they raise 4 bushels of corn to 1 of wheat.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. They did that then, and they do it now, and hence the magnanimity of the good gentleman from Iowa who comes from a corn district.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. I have only three minutes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman does not want to be unfair.

Mr. SLOAN. I never was and am not now. I have not given it half as hard to the gentleman as he deserves. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Not just now. I have only three minutes. I desire to say this: You must keep faith with the folks at home just as nations are required to keep faith with other nations. The one power in this country this year that sought until recently to adjust the price of wheat for the purpose of increasing the yield of wheat, not in our neighborhood but throughout the great spring-wheat areas of the country, was the body at the other end of this Capitol. There were frequent hearings by various farmer bodies here. They went before Mr. Hoover and others, endeavoring to obtain justice. They obtained nothing until they went before the Senate of the United States. That was over a month ago. It was determined, although not voted on until the 21st day of last month, that there should be granted to the farmers of the United States $2.50 for the wheat that they should raise and market. I think it is up to the Congress of the United States to say that we will redeem that promise which has been held out for more than 30 days now, not from the date of the vote but from when it was determined it should be so voted. During that time all over the great spring-wheat raising belt of the United States the farmers have been exerting every power they have to plow every additional acre they could and sow it to wheat, in response to the Senate of the United States guarantee to them of $2.50 per bushel. The question now is, Will the American Congress make good on that pledge, or will it repudiate it? The Senate made the pledge. Shall we keep it, or shall we repudiate it?

Wheat is the only product of the soil or factory for which the Government has named a price. It has denied opportunity of a supply-and-demand market, and this in utter disregard of production cost. Wheat is sowed and harvested by labor more than doubled in cost, on land enhanced in value by the production of other products whose prices are not fixed; it is bound with twine trebled in cost and controlled by a trust the Government is doing nothing to control; and the ground is prepared, harvesting conducted, and thrashing done with tools and machinery the height of whose prices are limited only by the blue arching dome.

If you would be fair, make the price correspond with other things which the farmer could raise instead of wheat, or take away the control of price altogether and let the farmers' wheat take its chances on a market thrown into governmental straitjackets. Let all crops be bond or all free. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the big question before us is not the particular percentage of profit that some certain class shall receive, but the extent to which we can increase the production of such a vital necessity in our food supplies as wheat.

Gentlemen speak of the fixing of the price of wheat as if thereby a special favor had been conferred upon the wheat producer. Far from it. The wheat producer has been discriminated against as compared with producers generally. Inspired by a desire to encourage the production of wheat and by a realization of its vital importance as a food staple for ourselves and our allies, Congress last year passed the law guaranteeing a minimum price for wheat, guaranteeing the wheat producer against loss except by crop failure. The Food Administration has, in violation of positive assurances made to Congress, fixed a maximum price upon wheat, but has done nothing to regulate other agricultural products. The gentlemen from nonwheat producing States, parading the favoritism they allege is shown the wheat producers by that kind of price fixing, refer to the fact that corn growers and cotton growers are not asking similar action. Certainly not. The southern grower of cotton, with the sky the limit upon the price of raw cotton, with the wheat producer paying unheard-of prices for cotton goods for clothing or farm use, would certainly object to a guaranteed maximum price of 12 or 14 cents for raw cotton. The guaranty would not be objectionable, but the placing of such a maximum, one at which cotton can be profitably produced, would take all the pleasure out of the guaranty.

The question is not one of showing favor to the farmer, and it matters not whether 6 or 50 per cent of the farmers are wheat growers. We want this year and next the biggest possible acreage of wheat, because our people need the wheat and our allies need it, every bushel we can possibly raise. We should give the farmer more encouragement to increase his wheat acreage rather than his corn acreage, for it is wheat we want primarily. But we are doing the contrary. We limit the price of wheat, force the people to use many new and strange substitutes, place no limit on the price thereof, run the price of such substitutes up out of reason by such new demand, and thereby encourage the farmer to increase his corn acreage and not the wheat.

Some gentlemen seem to fear that the consumers are going to be damaged by an increase in the guaranteed price of wheat to $2.50 a bushel, because of a possible increase in the price of flour. As a matter of fact, the consumer is interested at the present time not only in the price of flour but also in the price of substitutes, and in the extent to which he is obliged to buy substitutes that he does not want or does not know how to use in order to get enough flour. By reason of the unrestricted price of those substitutes, and because of the rise in the price of corn and other wheat substitutes, the farmer is led to plant more corn and less wheat, and thereby the fate of the consumer is a more or less critical one.

I will ask the Clerk to read in my time an expression from certain consumers as to the way they view this present unrestricted rise in the cost of substitutes, and to remind you that if we are able to encourage the farmers by way of a proper guaranteed price to increase their wheat acreage rather than their corn acreage, then the consumers will not be required to buy so much of substitutes. They can well afford the trifling increase in the cost of wheat flour if they do not have to buy as many pounds of high-priced substitutes which they do not want. I will ask the Clerk to read it in my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the letter in the time of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

PORT HURON TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL,
Port Huron, Mich., April 12, 1918.

(Copy—Original to Food Administrator H. C. Hoover.)

DEAR SIR: At a recent meeting of the Port Huron Trades and Labor Council the ever-ready subject of food and food substitutes was brought up. To the wage earner the substitute proposition is one of no small account. A sack of flour in this city, together with the necessary amount of substitutes, costs the consumer in the neighborhood of $4, and this fact, together with other high prices charged for every-day necessities, prompted the writing of a request that the price of substitutes be put within reasonable reach.

To the ordinary observer it would seem that the farmer is going to raise corn at the present price before he will wheat, as he can, in most cases, double his yield per acre; and as has been shown by recent reports that there is grave danger of a wheat shortage, we are of the opinion that if the farmer was given to understand that he was expected to raise wheat instead of wheat substitutes, there would be a much larger yield and the need for such substitutes materially lessened and the price of these things forced down to a reasonable price.

The Food Administration has our hearty support in all that they are at present trying to bring about, but we do ask a reduction in the price of substitutes, if such a thing can be brought about.

Cordially, yours,

PORT HURON TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL,
GEO. VAN NORMAN, Recording Secretary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended 15 minutes. I dislike very much to make that request, but I have a number of requests here for time, and I would like to accommodate them to the extent of two or three minutes each.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be extended for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. HAUGEN. Let me say to the gentleman I would not make this request if it were not for the fact there are such urgent requests for time and this is a very important proposition, and I do not think that 4 hours and 15 minutes is too much time to give to a question of this importance.

Mr. COX. I may state to the gentleman that every Member has a right to insert in the RECORD his remarks.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, they have the right; but they would like——

Mr. COX. In view of the fact that all have the right to insert their remarks in the RECORD, I hate to object, but I think in the interest of time I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, South Dakota in 1917 produced 97,150,000 bushels of corn, 52,024,000 bushels of wheat, 65,450,000 bushels of oats, 26,520,000 bushels of barley, and 5,600,000 bushels of rye. It is needless to say that the farmers of my State are deeply interested in this price-fixing movement.

I maintain that Congress never intended that the price of wheat should be absolutely fixed by congressional law. The food-control law was enacted as a war measure. There were not sufficient ships to carry the Argentine wheat to our allies in Europe. The Russian wheat supply was cut off by the armies of the central powers. Congress foresaw the shortage in food supply, and no one could tell how long the war would last. Wheat is an uncertain crop, and the object of Congress was to stimulate the production of wheat by saying to the farmer, "We want you to increase your wheat production, and we will guarantee you a minimum price."

The minimum price fixed for wheat in the food-control act for the 1918 crop was $2 per bushel. Under the powers granted in this law the President fixed the basic price of 1917 wheat at $2.20 per bushel.

The Senate amendment which we are now considering seeks to amend the original act by providing a minimum price of $2.50 per bushel for the 1918 wheat crop. The entire purpose of this legislation was to fix a minimum price for wheat, leaving the law of supply and demand in full operation. The Congress said to the farmer, "If you will increase your wheat acreage, the Government will guarantee you a reasonable minimum price" as an inducement in order to secure increased production and to relieve the farmer of some of the chances of loss.

Under the operation of the food-control act the minimum guaranteed price has become the sole price. The law of supply and demand has been suspended by the administration of this law. The farmer, in good faith, used every effort to increase wheat production, but he did not suppose that the guaranteed minimum price would become the maximum or sole price of wheat.

I shall support the $2.50 wheat proposition, not that I believe it will materially increase the production but rather as an act of justice and fairness to the American farmer. About a year ago, on a hearing before the Agricultural Committee, it was claimed that the Northwestern farmers were losing $340,000,000 a year through the manipulation of the markets. There is much truth in that statement. When wheat was put upon the market in the fall of 1916, it started at $1.50 per bushel; it rapidly increased until it reached $3 per bushel.

The Government being the principal dealer in wheat, making purchases of wheat for our allies, and under the administration of the food-control act by putting into force a system of licensing dealers of the products of wheat, has been able to absolutely fix the price of wheat.

Oats went upon the market in 1917 at a price a little less than 50 cents per bushel. The price gradually increased until it reached 93 cents per bushel. Then the Chicago Board of Trade, under its rules and regulations, undertook to fix a maximum price for oats by providing that the price should not exceed 93 cents per bushel. The grain exchanges have been able through their combinations to arbitrarily fix a maximum price for oats and other products.

When the Government established a fixed price for wheat the grain exchanges ceased their dealings in options, but they are now dealing in options on corn, oats, rye, barley, and other products. Let it be remembered that the Chicago Board of Trade, composed of 1,640 members, prior to the passage of the food-control act was selling 90,000,000,000 bushels of phantom wheat per year—wheat that was never owned or grown—and when the entire shipment of wheat to Chicago was about 36,000,000 bushels per year.

If we allow every bushel of wheat that went into the Chicago market to be hedged 25 times there would still be over 89,000,000,000 bushels of wind sold on the Chicago market. No wonder Chicago is called the "Windy City." A similar situation prevailed at the other exchanges. The food-control act gave power to control these exchanges, but according to my information but little has been accomplished toward bringing them under Government control. They are still engaged in speculating in food products. It is said that in 1917 on the Chicago exchange were sold 4,000 carloads of fictitious eggs, and each sale would register an increased cost of actual eggs to the consumer.

The farmer can not sell his own grain in these markets. It is said that a farmer can not personally sell a bushel of his own wheat to a miller in Minneapolis. He must employ a member of the grain exchange and pay a commission on every bushel sold. The commission charged for selling other grain has been raised since the price of wheat was fixed.

Twenty years ago South Dakota had 130 flour mills, but they have been practically driven out of business, as we now have not to exceed 30 in the State. The millers at the terminals and the boards of trade are still manipulating the markets. The profiteers are not on the farms; they are at the terminals.

I believe the farmers of my State are opposed to the fixing of the price of wheat, especially so when the price of everything the farmer must buy is governed by the law of supply and demand. The Government can not compel a farmer to raise wheat or to sell the wheat he has produced. If the price is too low the producer will not sell. Again, if the Government maintains a price that is too low the farmer will not produce wheat.

When the price of wheat is high, production will be increased. When the price is low, production will be decreased. Overproduction brings down the price, underproduction raises the price. Fixing the price is wrong in theory, and it can not be maintained for any great length of time. The farmer will produce the grain that brings him the best returns.

The cost of labor has trebled, and the cost of farm machinery has more than doubled. These products are subject to the law of supply and demand, yet the finished product is to be regulated by law without taking into consideration the price of other cereals. Corn yields about three times as much per acre as wheat, while rye and barley bring better returns per acre at present prices than wheat will at even $2.50 per bushel.

The farmer should not be expected to raise wheat at a loss. Farm labor is being employed at $60 to $100 per month; other labor at from $5 to $12 per day. The increase in the price of wheat should be in keeping with the increase in the cost of living. It is my belief that the open, honest market, from which speculators and manipulators are barred, will do more to produce fair and stable prices than any price-fixing device. Profiteering and gambling should be eliminated in favor of an open, honest market.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, whether or not wheat at $1 per bushel is high and wheat at $2.20 per bushel is low depends entirely upon the purchasing power of the dollar. If barb wire could be bought at $2.10 per hundred pounds, as it could not many years ago; if shoes that you pay $10 for could be purchased for $5; if farm implements could be purchased at the price for which they could be bought before the European war; if farm labor could be employed at the prices that were current in this country prior to four years ago; and if the prices of everything else that enters into the production of wheat occupied a similar ratio, then $1 would represent a good price for that commodity.

On the other hand, with the prices of everything that the farmer has to buy raised enormously, wheat at $2.20 does not appeal to him as attractive as the production of other crops.

We may doubt the wisdom entirely of attempting by legislation to fix the price of any commodity; we may doubt it especially when at the same time we do not fix the price of all essential commodities; but that is not the question that is before the House at this time. The problem that we face is whether or not we owe it to the wheat grower to guarantee that he shall receive $2.20 per bushel for wheat, measured by prices fixed at certain markets and based upon almost a mythical standard, No. 1, or whether he shall be entitled to our guaranty of a price more nearly in harmony with the prices of other commodities.

In studying this question, I desire to call attention briefly to the following propositions:

First, the price of wheat when compared with the price of other grains.

Second, the comparative profitableness of growing wheat and other grains.

Third, the price of commodities the farmer must buy.

PRICE OF WHEAT COMPARED WITH THE PRICE OF OTHER GRAINS.

Now, let us consider for a moment the price of wheat when compared with the price of other grains. That this may be clearly before us, I have prepared a table which indicates the Chicago December prices for the past several years, and I am quoting only the highest price for each grain, and I am also comparing the price of wheat with the price of another great staple agricultural product—cotton. The wheat is No. 1 northern spring, with the exception of the quotation for 1917, which is for No. 2 red winter. The price of wheat for that year is that fixed by the market in August prior to the taking effect of the $2.20 price:

	Corn.	Barley.	Oats.	Wheat.	Cotton.
	Per bushel.	Per bushel.	Per bushel.	Per bushel.	Per pound.
1913	$0.73½	$0.79	$0.40⅜	[1] $0.93	$0.122
1914	.68¼	.75	.49½	[1] 1.31	.068
1915	.75	.77	.44	[1] 1.28½	.113
1916	.96	1.25	.54	[1] 1.90	.193
1917	1.90	1.40	.80⅜	[2] 2.60 to 2.75	.277
1917, September				[3] 2.20
CHICAGO—FEBRUARY 15, 1918.
1918	[4] $2.00 to $2.05	$1.80 to $1.92	[5] $0.89¼	[3] 2.20	[6] $0.3033

[1] No. 1 northern spring.
[2] No. 2 red winter (in August).
[3] Price fixed by Government.
[4] No. 2 yellow.
[5] White.
[6] New Orleans Cardam.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the farmer who had corn to sell received 98 per cent more for his corn in 1917 than he received in 1916 and 142½ per cent more than he received in 1915.

The grower of barley received almost double in 1917 what he received for his barley in 1915.

The grower of oats received practically double in 1917 what he received in 1915.

The grower of wheat received $1.90 a bushel in 1916, while in 1917, under the price fixed, he received an increase of 16 per cent. In comparison with the price received in either 1915 or 1914, he received a far less increase than did either the grower of corn or barley or oats.

The comparison is likewise striking when an examination is made of the price received by the cotton grower for his cotton. The crop of 1917 commanded 27.7 cents per pound; the crop of 1916 commanded 19.36 cents; 1915, 11.3 cents. The other day the price of cotton was quoted, New Orleans, Cardam (middling), at 30.63 cents per pound.

It will at once be seen from the foregoing that, generally speaking, the farmer who raises wheat—which, it would seem, is the most essential of all these commodities I have mentioned—is receiving the least encouragement instead of the greatest.

Again, remember that if $2.20 represents a fair value for wheat in September, 1917, the ratio of increase in cost of other commodities since that time abundantly argues in favor of $2.50 to-day.

Consider the question from another point of view—the relative value for food purposes of oats, corn, and wheat:

In 1915 oats were worth 44 cents per bushel, while wheat was worth $1.28½—almost three times the price of oats. In 1916 oats were worth 54 cents and wheat $1.90; or, in other words, between three and four times the price of oats. Last year oats were worth 80⅝ cents, while the price of wheat was fixed at $2.20.

From the foregoing it will readily appear that the price of wheat, with relation to the price of oats, should be from $2.50 to $3.

Again, making a similar comparison with corn, in 1915 corn was worth 75 cents per bushel; wheat, $1.28½, or about 50 per cent more than corn. In 1916 corn was worth 96 cents, as against $1.90 for wheat, or nearly twice the value of corn. Last year corn was worth $1.90, and you can readily see that with wheat arbitrarily fixed in price at $2.20 the arbitrary price was far below that which food values would suggest. From this comparison the price that could reasonably be fixed for wheat would be even upward from $3 per bushel.

Again, let me ask you to take the prices received for corn, barley, and oats for the years 1914, 1915, and 1916, which are the years immediately preceding the year in which the Government fixed a guaranteed price, and compute therefrom the price that wheat would have commanded in 1917. You will observe that, with the exception of years that are unusual, as where there is tremendous underproduction or overproduction of one of the grains that I have mentioned, the ratio of the price of wheat to the price of these other grains is almost constant. Upon the ratio of price that appears for wheat for each of the years 1914, 1915, and 1916 the price of wheat for 1917 would have been about $2.68 per bushel, instead of $2.20.

But some one says the price that we are guaranteeing is the minimum price. If the war should come to an end to-day the price of other commodities might fall however low, but the price of wheat to the farmer would remain fixed. In theory that is true, but the farmer would much prefer to carry his own risk and trust to the market for the price of his commodity than to be required to sell it at the price that is guaranteed.

THE COMPARATIVE PROFITABLENESS OF WHEAT AND OTHER GRAINS.

We are asking the farmers to grow wheat, and then more wheat. We have fixed a price as a guaranteed price that I think is clearly below the price of other grains that are in competition more or less with wheat. Let us consider the question from the standpoint of the yield per acre of wheat and other grains, of the prices paid per bushel for wheat and other grains, and the income per acre received by the farmer from growing corn or wheat or barley or some other crop. Take rye; the average yield of rye throughout the United States for a period of 10 years prior to 1917 was 16.3 bushels per acre. The average production of flax was 8.6 bushels per acre; of oats, 29.9 bushels; of barley, 25.2 bushels; of corn, 26 bushels; and of wheat, 14.7 bushels. Last year the average yield of these commodities was much the same; oats being somewhat larger, or 36.4 bushels per acre, while the yield of corn was 26.4 bushels, and wheat 14.2.

Now, if you will take the yield per acre that I have indicated and multiply the yield by the price for each particular grain you will arrive at the gross income per acre to the farmer for the production of each of the commodities indicated: Corn, at 26 bushels per acre, at the rate of $1.90 per bushel, means $49.40 per acre to the farmer; rye, at 16.3 bushels per acre, upon the basis of $2.20 per bushel, means $35.86 per acre; barley, with a production of 25.2 bushels, at $1.40 per bushel, means $35.21 per acre; oats, on the basis of a production of 36.4 bushels, at 80§ cents per bushel, means $29.35 per acre, gross-receipt returns for the United States; wheat, upon the basis of 14.7 production, at $2.20 per bushel, means $32.34 gross returns to the farmer.

This is rather a rough analysis, but it seems to indicate that the farmer who is asked to produce wheat is asked to do so at a price that guarantees to him returns considerably lower than the returns that the market guarantees to the farmer who produces rye or barley or corn. Upon the theory that we need to encourage the production of wheat it would seem that the price fixed by the Senate amendment is not unreasonable.

THE PRICE OF COMMODITIES THE FARMER MUST BUY.

Now, let us consider the price of commodities the farmer must buy. I shall not dwell long upon this feature of the subject. It is perfectly obvious. A farm paper that I hold in my hand contains in an advertisement in red ink the cancellation of the words "50 cents per year." and in lieu thereof the substitution of the words "75 cents per year." The papers that you bought upon the streets of Washington last year for 1 cent you are paying 2 cents for to-day. You are paying more for all the commodities that you have to buy, and I want to call to your attention that this phenomenon is not limited to everybody else excepting the farmers; but he, too, is sharing the burden of paying high prices for that which he would buy in order to carry on his farm work.

During the five years preceding 1918 grain bags in the Pacific Northwest have sold as low as between 7 and 8 cents, while to-day they are about 25 cents each.

Binding twine likewise has increased in cost. Last year it was sold at 14 cents, to-day it is 25 cents.

Drills that could be purchased in 1917 for $180 have increased to $250.

Discs that could be purchased in 1916 for $75 and in 1917 for $100 have increased to $180.

Plows that could be purchased in 1917 at $135 have increased to $180. A pull binder that was sold in 1917 for $220, now commands from $260 to $325. A push binder that in 1916 sold for some $275 or $295, sold last year for $350, and this year the price is from $475 to $500.

Barb wire that a few years ago was sold for $2.10 per hundred pounds has increased more than 400 per cent.

Labor cost also has increased enormously. Under normal conditions in the Pacific Northwest, for spring work, farmers were accustomed to paying $1.25 to $1.50 per day, in addition to board. This continued up to 1916. Last year they were required to pay $2 per day, and this year it will be far more than that.

In the harvest season, up to 1916, our farmers were accustomed to paying from $2.50 to $3 per day for common labor, while last year they had to pay from $4 to $5 per day, and for some kinds of work as high as $8 and $10. This year in all probability the minimum price will be not far from $5.

CONCLUSION.

In the limited time that I have had I have tried to call attention to the condition that surrounds the farmer who is asked to produce wheat in comparison with the condition that would have been his if no minimum guaranteed price had been established. I have contrasted the returns to the farmer who is producing wheat with the returns to the farmer who is producing other of the great commodities that enter into the necessities of life. I believe that it must be apparent that the farmer who produces wheat is called upon to sell his wheat at a price lower than that which would be fixed in the market place if the law of supply and demand could control. If this is true, it means that the farmer is asked to bear a loss. Whatever that loss may be, it is a loss borne primarily for the Nation. I believe if the price shall be fixed, as indicated by the Senate amendment, the wheat farmer will still bear a loss in comparison with the farmer who produces cotton or corn or barley. However, to the extent of the amount indicated in the Senate amendment, shall not the people as a whole, who make up our country, bear the burden instead of placing it upon the shoulders of the grower of wheat? That is all there is to the proposition.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, time will not permit a discussion in detail. However, I desire to say the question involved in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is, Shall the present price fixed for No. 1 wheat, at $2.20 per bushel at the principal interior primary markets, be increased to $2.50 per bushel for No. 2 northern spring wheat, or its equivalent? Now, gentlemen, what is the situation? A year ago when this question was under consideration wheat was then selling for about $3.42 a bushel. Mr. Hoover expressed the opinion that it might go to $7 a bushel. Nobody wanted it to go to $7. It was suggested that we should enact legislation that would make it possible to depress the price. Mr. Hoover later expressed the opinion that it would be his task to make flour $6.60 a barrel, which would net the wheat grower about $1.10 a bushel. Later he expressed the opinion that wheat might be fixed at $1.50 a bushel. In view of the conflicting reports as to Mr. Hoover's proposition in fixing the price, the Senate took the matter in hand and fixed the price at $2 a bushel. Later the commission fixed it at $2.20 a bushel. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] says that the farmers were compensated for their wheat. What happened? Wheat was worth $3 per bushel. The commission fixed the price at $2.20. The farmers were compensated to the extent of $2.20, less freight and expenses of marketing. But, I submit as to the rest, they have never been compensated.

That price has been determined for 1918 also. What were the results as to the 1917 crop? Certainly not satisfactory. With the low price fixed on wheat and the high prices on other cereals, as a result much of the wheat has been fed to stock instead of being ground for food. Naturally so, though the farmers, generally speaking, are patriotic; their stock has to be fed as well as food provided for their families, and if he has wheat in his bin, and no corn, and has pigs to feed, it means a considerable sacrifice for him to sack and haul his wheat and sell it at less than $2 per bushel and to buy and haul corn to his feed lot, paying $2.25 for a bushel of corn of less value for his purpose than the bushel of wheat which he sold. Hence we are confronted with this situation—the wheat grower has been denied the opportunity to sell in competition, to have the benefit of the law of supply and demand, and has been the loser to the extent of from one to two dollars a bushel, which in the aggregate would amount to several hundred million.

The consumer has and is paying more for bread than ever as a result of the unreasonable and extraordinary profit guaranteed the miller. The millers have been pocketing the millions. Not only have the millers made big profits, but prices were fixed on cattle and hogs, and as a result the packers made big profits also. In looking over Swift & Co.'s financial statement, I find that its balance sheet, September 30, 1917, published on page 56 of its yearbook, reports a profit of dividends paid, $10,000,000; added to surplus, $24,650,000; profits for the year, $34,650,000; on a capital stock of $100,000,000 and a surplus of $59,965,000. In looking over the report for former years I find that Swift & Co.'s profits for 1913 were reported to be $9,250,000; for 1914, $9,450,000. According to the reports profits have increased more than 300 per cent over those years. According to Mr. Cotton, Chief of the Meat Division, United States Food Administration, and assistant to Mr. Hoover, and particularly in charge of the meat and provision buying under the pooling system, who I understand was an attorney for the packers, packers were limited to a profit of from 9 to 15 per cent on their invested capital, including borrowed money. Certainly a satisfactory arrangement so far as the packers were concerned. What a splendid inducement for the packers to borrow money. Under such an arrangement there is, of course, no limit as to its profits. Take for instant, if one's capital stock is $100,000,000 and its profits are $100,000,000, as a 100 per cent on the capital, all that would be necessary to do to bring itself within the requirements would be to borrow a billion dollars, and it would be entitled to $990,000 profit, and by adding $10,000 to salaries and deterioration of the plant, the packer would have complied with every requirement of the Food Administration. But why stop at borrowing a billion when money can be borrowed at, say 4½ per cent with a guaranty of 9 per cent or 100 per cent profit? One hundred per cent profit may not attract the packer, but to the average business man it would appear as a profitable investment. Compare it, if you will, with the net income of the farmer. According to a statement made two or three years ago before the committee by Dr. Spillman, Chief of the Office of Farm Management, Department of Agriculture, one who has made a life study of the subject, the farmer with his family, with an average of 4.6 persons, gets $142 in cash every year as the earnings of the family or 4.6 persons in addition to $260 for food, fuel, and house rent. According to Dr. Spillman's statement, an average of $30.87 cash for a year's work to provide themselves with groceries, clothing, and other necessaries to maintain life.

In view of the liberal profits allowed the miller, the packer, the implement manufacturer, the munition manufacturer, and all along the line, in view of the compensation guaranteed to railroads, and in view of the increased price in farm machinery, in wages paid farm labor, and the expenses all along the line incident to production, is it asking too much to allow the producer to sell in open unrestricted markets and to give him the benefit of the law of supply and demand or that accorded to others, and if price fixing is to be resorted to, if he is to be singled out, can we not afford to grant this slight increase? What does it amount to? To the farmer in the aggregate it amounts, as I have before stated, to a few hundred million; to the consumer it is less than one-fourth cent per loaf of bread.

The American people consume about a barrel of flour per capita. Five bushels of wheat make a barrel of flour, including the miller's expense of grinding and sacking, and loading it for shipment. Thirty cents increase on 5 bushels equals $1.50 per barrel. The $1.50 will neither make or break anybody. If we are concerned about the consumer, there is a way of protecting and benefitting him; that is, by regulating charges and prices of combinations and price-fixing concerns. We now have laws upon our statute books which will make that possible, but so far no one seems to be concerned about them, and until laws are enforced, and profits restricted by the manipulators and the so-called profiteers, the consumer can, of course, look for no relief. The question of a quarter of a cent on a loaf of bread is, of course, a question that should be taken into consideration. But, gentlemen, it sinks into insignificance when compared with the importance of supplying our people and our allies with food. Owing to our proximity to the field of activity, our source of supplies, with that of Canada's, is practically the only supply available. Our wheat crop for 1917 was estimated by the Department of Agriculture at about 668,000,000 bushels. It is now believed to have been less than 600,000,000. Compare it with the average for five years, 1911–16, of 806,000,000, we had less than 75 per cent as compared with those years, and less than 60 per cent as compared with 1915. I have no desire to sound an undue alarm as to the food situation or disclose any secrets, but having given the matter considerable consideration, and having come in contact with a number of people who are familiar with our supply, as well as the conditions in general, it seems clear that special consideration should be given to questions of production, and encouragement.

I quote from the Washington Star:

GYPSY SMITH THRILLS THOUSANDS WITH APPEAL FOR BONDS TO WIN THE WAR.

The war is being fought in France, but it must be won right here in America. You can strike your blow for American freedom by supporting the third liberty loan.

DEPICTS CONDITIONS ABROAD.

The manner in which England is meeting its sorrows, its sacrifices, and its hardships was touched upon by the evangelist in a graphic manner. He told of the scarcity of food among the allies, and of the bread lines. He stated that in England an adult is allowed only 4 ounces of fat each week, three-fourths of a pound of meat each week, and 2 ounces of bread at a meal.

"The world is looking to us for salvation," he said. "Thank God this country is beginning to realize the gravity of the situation, and that its peoples will do everything to aid. We are fighting for the safety of all mankind—for our children, and our homes. No price is too great to pay for victory."

Gypsy Smith is fresh from the field and his statement is worthy of consideration and credit. With such a situation before us, this is no time to discuss or delay. Rather than to discuss the question of 30 cents a bushel on wheat, or a quarter of a cent on a loaf of bread, we had better devote our time to production and how to successfully prosecute this war.

Now, that we are at war, no matter what one's views as to our entering it, our President and a majority of Congress, the highest authority of our land, in a regular way, have declared war, and in so doing have pledged our national resources, blood, treasure, and credit, and our national honor is at stake.

Now, that our boys are on the firing line, all will, I am sure, do their duty in helping to redeem that solemn obligation in sustaining our national honor and our boys who have willingly taken their lives in their hands and are willing to lay them on their country's altar as a sacrifice defending it. Will we desert them? A thousand times, no.

There were honest differences of opinion as to our entering this war. There was a time when it was everyone's duty to voice his honest sentiments about entering the war, but that time has passed. That question has been settled for all time. Congress and the President have pledged the best that is in us; in fact, all that we have.

There is only one course to pursue and that is to uphold our national honor and dignity, our grand and glorious Government with its splendid and magnificent institutions, our boys going to the front and exposing themselves to shot and shell, the boys for whom every heart is filled with joy, hope, and aspirations. Rest assured that wherever they go, whoever they may encounter, they will acquit themselves like men, as did their fathers and their grandfathers some 50 years ago, who now part from their sons and grandsons that the work for which they rendered such valorous service may be carried into its fullest fruition.

This war can not be fought by debating societies, by boasting, or criticizing. No; it will require courage, statesmanship, patriotism of the highest type, money, and the united endeavor of all to win it.

If so, and with the profits which others are permitted to earn and with the sacrifices our allies are making, it is up to us to act and not quarrel about a quarter of a cent on a loaf of bread.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for one minute.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the increased price for wheat suggested will increase the production of wheat. It will increase the price of flour; it will increase the price of bread; it will increase the price of eggs; it will increase the price of milk; it will increase the price of meat and every other food commodity that the consumer needs, and four-fifths of the farmers will suffer as the rest of the public do, because only about one-fifth of the farmers of this country grow wheat. In fact, only one-sixteenth of the farmers grow wheat as a principal crop. Wheat at $2.50 a bushel rather than at $2.20, the present price, would add about $1.50 to the price of a barrel of flour and increase the cost of all the products of wheat, so largely used in our billion-dollar poultry business and our vast dairy interests.

It is conceded that the 30-cent proposed increase per bushel to the producer will not have any bearing on this year's production. Under existing legislation the President has the authority to grant an increase to the wheat growers. The President did authorize an advance of the price from $2 to $2.20 per bushel, and if conditions later developed that made another increase necessary to stimulate production he would have the power to do so.

Startling instances of the injury to children because of the higher cost of milk due to the increased cost of feeding have been disclosed by an investigation made in Baltimore by the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, and I call the attention of the Members to the distressing facts presented in yesterday's Washington Times:

BABIES MENACED BY INCREASE IN PRICE FOR MILK.

That babies and little children are directly affected by decreased milk sales in American cities reported by dealers is shown by a study made by the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor in Baltimore.

Of 756 children between 2 and 7 years old included in the study only 29 per cent are having fresh milk as a part of their daily diet this year as compared with 60 per cent a year ago.

This situation is serious from the standpoint of infant health and welfare, according to the Government authorities. Fresh milk, it is declared, is an essential part of the diet of the small child for healthy growth and development. Despite this, fewer and fewer children are getting milk as a result of rising prices.

One of the striking developments of the Baltimore inquiry was that foreign-born mothers, with a less income than native American mothers, continued to buy milk for their babies, while a large percentage of native American mothers bought none or else used the canned variety.

In cities all over the country these deplorable conditions exist, and in considering a further increase for a commodity which would aggravate them we should have regard for the health of the children. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized for one minute.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, something has been said here to-day in respect to farmers feeding wheat to stock. I do not know of a single instance where wheat has been fed to stock in North Dakota, though I have made careful inquiry. Our farmers are patriotic and would not do such a thing.

It seems to me that some of the excellent gentlemen who represent eastern districts are taking a short-sighted view of the proposal to increase the price of wheat. They are penny wise and pound foolish. One of these gentlemen had the truth forced home when he bought some flour last week. The first item in his bill was "Flour, $1.65," which was followed by certain other items for flour substitutes and which swelled the total to $5.44. In other words, in order to buy $1.65 worth of flour he had to buy so-called flour substitutes of doubtful value which cost him $3.79. He is now convinced that it is unwise to oppose a small advance in the price of flour in order to encourage a larger production of wheat. Justice to the wheat growers will react to the advantage of the consumers of flour.

Mr. Speaker, the course which events have taken in respect to the supply of wheat were plain to thoughtful people of the West long, long ago when the price was first considered. Gen. A. P. Peake, of North Dakota, when he appeared before the wheat price-fixing committee last year, predicted that the bins in public elevators would be practically empty by May 1 of this year. He was a good prophet. Minneapolis, the greatest wheat market in the world, had at the end of the first week in April in its public elevators 278,000 bushels, as against 9,500,000 bushels the same date of last year. Again, the visible supply of wheat for the United States at the end of the first week of April, 1917, was 47,363,000 bushels, which dropped to 4,695,000 bushels the same date this year. In spite of the rosy, optimistic views of the Secretary of Agriculture, the visible supply of wheat is constantly decreasing. As explained by other speakers here to-day, the situation is serious and may become more so.

Mr. Speaker, when the price of wheat was fixed at $2.20 for the year 1918, I think it was understood that there was to be further price fixing of the things that the farmers buy. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture what progress has been made in respect to the fixing of the prices of farm machinery and other things that the farmers buy?

Mr. LEVER. I would prefer not to answer that question, because I can not give the gentleman those facts. I stated to the committee some time ago that the matter was under consideration, but the bill has not been prepared as yet.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. It has been considered by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. And probably by the administration?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. I can say this to the gentleman: Whatever position may be taken by the administration on the proposition of freezing out the profiteering on farm machinery and the like will make no difference to me, as far as I am concerned. I propose to see to it that a bill of that character is introduced and passed, if I can secure its passage. [Applause.]

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I commend the gentleman. As I understand it, our Committee on Agriculture, as far as the chairman of that committee is concerned, will go ahead with legislation of this kind, whether we get a recommendation from the administration or not?

Mr. LEVER. That is true. I can make that assurance to the gentleman.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LESHER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum. I should like to have a quorum here to hear the gentleman from Alabama. They will have to come here anyhow sooner or later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will not do that I will waive the right to speak.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is going to make a good speech and he ought to have a quorum here to listen to him.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman is one of the hardest to convince that I ever struck yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SLOAN. I ask unanimous consent that the point made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. LEVER. I move a call of the House.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 82, noes 28.

Mr. HASTINGS. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Tellers were refused, not a sufficient number seconding the demand.

Accordingly a call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 293 Members, a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with further proceedings under the call. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LESHER. Mr. Speaker, I have taken but very little time of the House since I have been a Member, but I think this is a very important question. I think we have to solve a problem before us to-day almost as serious as the battle that is being waged across the water. You see in all the advertisements that it will take food to win the war. Now, if food is needed let us have the food, and let us have that policy which will produce the food. The question has been asked how will this increase the crop of 1918. I will tell you how it will increase the crop of 1918. There is many an acre that will produce 2 to 4 bushels, and if the price is right that will be gathered. If the price is not right, they will let it go, and so in every little area if they can gather a bushel, they will do so.

My friend from Kansas referred to potatoes. Last year potatoes were $4 a bushel. It was not necessary to guarantee any price whatever to the farmer. They produced a great crop, and to-day you can buy potatoes for 75 cents a bushel. I think that will be the case with wheat if you give them the right price. That is all, gentlemen, that I wish to say at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, how does the time stand?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina has 32 minutes, and all other time has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, the question which confronts the House this afternoon is an important question and ought to be decided as nearly as possible without regard to self-interest or sectionalism. I desire in the time I have remaining to me to present, as nearly as I can, an unbroken statement of the facts touching wheat.

When this country entered the war, a year ago, we faced an abnormal situation with reference to wheat and flour. The average production of wheat in this country from 1910 to 1917 was 728,000,000 bushels. The crop of 1916, however, was only 630,000,000 bushels, while the crop for 1917 was 650,000,000 bushels. We therefore had had two years of abnormally low production.

Following upon that there was an abnormal demand for wheat to feed the armies of Europe, their civilian population, and our own population. The subnormally low yield coupled with the abnormally great demand, inevitably high prices followed. We faced this situation also; there was no unification of buying on the part of the allies. Italy was buying wheat wherever it could get it regardless of price. France was buying wheat wherever she could get it. England was buying wheat wherever she could get it. It was not a question with these nations of price; it was a question of bread and the feeding of their armies and civilian populations. It might be compared to that of the condition of a father going out and undertaking to buy food for his little starving ones. If he has the money it is not a question of the price of food; it is a question of getting the food.

With this unrestrained competition in bidding on the part of the allies which gave rise, of course, to unrestrained speculation in our own market, the price of wheat in the spring of 1917 did rise to abnormal and unheard-of prices.

The fact of this abnormal condition made it absolutely imperative upon the part of the Government in behalf of its 90,000,000 consumers to undertake to do something to rid the country of these highly speculative values in wheat and flour, and I stand here to declare that if the Government had not stepped in and, by this unusual procedure—and it is unjustifiable in 99 cases out of 100—if the Government had not stepped in, the price of wheat would have gone to $5 or $6 a bushel and the price of flour would have gone to $30 or $35 a barrel. Those who criticize the Food Administration for its little mistakes should bear in mind its larger work in stabilizing the prices of this great war necessity, wheat and flour.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I desire not to be interrupted until I have finished my general statement. I would ordinarily yield, I would state to the gentleman, but I have only a few minutes. In addition to that, if there had not been some regulation of wheat and flour in this country, the strong probability is that the wealthy operator, the big man with unlimited funds, would have absolutely controlled the supply of wheat during the spring of 1917, and you would have had your bread famines in certain localities, while on the other hand you would have had a surplus of bread in other sections. Something had to be done. The situation was desperate. The food-control act was passed to meet the emergency, and it has to a great extent measured up to the expectation of its proponents.

Acting under section 11 of the food-control act the President on August 30, 1917, issued his proclamation fixing the price of wheat for the 1917 crop at $2.20 per bushel at Chicago, for the basic grade of northern No. 1. I call your attention to the fact that the President acted through a commission composed of men representing the producer, the consumer, the distributor, and every element in society. That commission after many weeks of deliberation unanimously agreed upon the price of $2.20 fixed by the proclamation of the President.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I can not yield.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman is mistaken. There was no proclamation.

Mr. LEVER. What was it?

Mr. STEENERSON. It was simply fixing the price of what the Government had to buy.

Mr. LEVER. That is the difference between tweedledee and tweedledum. I shall correct my statement if it was not a proclamation, but I am sure that it was a proclamation. Acting under section 14 of the food-control act, on February 21, this year, the President issued his proclamation fixing, not a price on the 1918 crop—bear that in mind—not a price of $2.20, based on northern No. 1, but a guaranty to the farmer that if he produced the wheat, if he produced the wheat in the millions or billions of bushels, or if this war should cease to-morrow and the hundreds of millions of bushels of wheat stored in Australia, India, and Argentina should be turned loose into this country for sale in competition with his wheat, nevertheless out of the Federal Treasury he would be guaranteed $2.20 per bushel for every bushel he produced. That is the effect of the President's proclamation, and yet throughout this debate we have been going upon the theory that the President had fixed a basic price of $2.20 for the crop year of 1918. He has done no such thing. He has not fixed the price at all. It is certainly within the President's power under the law to fix a price on the 1918 crop above the $2.50 per bushel as proposed in the Senate amendment. I do not know that he will do it; I would rather think that he will not; but he has the power if he desires to exercise it.

What he has done is this: He has guaranteed the wheat producer, representing 22 per cent of the agricultural population—but only 6 per cent of this grow wheat as a principal crop—against any possible loss.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to emphasize two things in this connection. The first is this: Just a year ago the Congress of the United States, after months and months of deliberation and, I fear, unnecessary delay, wrote into the law a guaranty of only $2 a bushel. This represented the deliberate judgment of Congress as being a price that would guarantee the farmer a fair and reasonable profit.

The President, however, fixed the price at $2.20 a bushel at Chicago for the 1917 crop, which is 20 cents more per bushel than the congressional guaranty for the 1918 crop. The other point I desire to emphasize is that in fixing these prices, and in fixing these guaranties, the President acted under the full warrant of the law. He fixed this guaranty of $2.20 on February 21 for the crop to be harvested in 1918, and about that time this congressional agitation for a higher guaranty began. What was the result? I have the figures here to show. There was immediately a dangerous falling off in the marketing of wheat by the farmers. There was being held out to them this bait of $2.50 as against $2.20, and they did the very human thing of waiting to get the $2.50. They began to have visions of their congressional leaders shedding tears upon the floor of this House and pleading for this higher price for wheat. They had a vision of the transference of the wheat pit from Chicago, Ill., to the Capitol of the United States at Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I can not yield now. A Senator introduced a bill on the 13th of February, 1918, in which he fixed the guaranty at $2.50 per bushel. Let us see what happens. Let us see how they get into action. Ah, you can not take a southern Senator and outdo a northwestern Senator—not much. On that same day another Senator introduced a bill and he made the price not $2.50—oh, no; he raised the ante a little bit—he made it $2.75 a bushel. But that was not all. No Senator can get the better of the House of Representative, I am glad to say. We lick them every time we go up against them; and, when this Senator introduced this bill making it $2.75, an athletic gentleman on this side, with flashing eye, with a heart throbbing for the downtrodden farmers of his State, introduced a bill, and he made it $3 a bushel! [Laughter and applause.] Oh, yes; and so on down the line, I hold in my hand a half dozen or more of these bills. Let us be serious with this big question, gentlemen. Are you willing to make the Congress of the United States the wheat pit of Chicago?

Are you willing to make this great war necessity the football of ambitious gentlemen of this body and out of it? [Applause.] Are you willing to do it? I represent an agricultural district. It does not raise a great deal of wheat, that is true; but I do not think any man can stand on the floor of this House and accuse me and my acts of ever being sectional. I think you will agree to that, and I do not want to be placed in the attitude of having week after week to take up again the question of whether or not we fixed the price of wheat too low, never too high.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I have said to the gentleman that I am sorry I can not yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LEVER. Now, gentlemen, let us analyze this claim for a higher guaranteed price than that fixed by the President's proclamation. There are only two reasons that can be suggested for raising the limit. One is that you will increase the production of wheat in this country for the crop of 1918. Will you do it? Every acre of fall wheat has already been sown. Will you increase the acreage in the spring wheat area? The highest increase that anyone thinks possible under any conditions is 5 per cent. The consensus of opinion is that if you should make the price of wheat $5 a bushel, you would not increase the production of spring wheat 2 per cent, which would amount to a matter of 40,000 acres and that would be in a section of the country where the production is ordinarily low per acre. Oh, no; you will have to dismiss that argument. But somebody said you may increase the acreage for 1919. Let us see about that claim.

Under a guaranty of $2 per bushel we seeded to wheat this last fall the largest area of winter wheat that has even been sown in this country. [Applause.] We seeded an area of 42,170,000 acres, as against 42,012,000 acres for the crop year of 1915, when we produced the bumper crop of this country—more than a billion bushels. So, then, if a guaranty of $2 a bushel will give the largest winter-wheat area ever seeded, does not it follow inevitably that a guaranty of $2.20 a bushel at Chicago and $2.28 at New York and $2.27 at Philadelphia will still further increase your planting of winter wheat this fall? My information is, reading the commercial reports and having other information, that the seeding of spring wheat promises to be the largest in our history. All things point to the fact that the area to be sown in wheat this year will be about 63,000,000 as against 60,000,000 acres in 1915, when we produced over 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat. There are your facts. What, then, is the other claim for this higher guaranty? It is that the guaranteed price fixed by the President does not furnish to the producer thereof a reasonable profit. Let us analyze that, if you please. Let us compare the increase in the price of wheat under the guaranty with the price of wheat under prewar conditions, and then again compare the increase in the price of wheat under the guaranty with the price of some of the principal things that go into the production of wheat, and let us see where we come out. The average price of wheat from the 1st of March, 1910, to the 1st of March, 1914, was 88⅜ cents per bushel. The 10-year average from 1908 to 1917, inclusive, was $1.05½ per bushel, and this included the high prices resulting from the war. The increase in price from April 1, 1914, to April 1, 1918, is 140.6 per cent.

The guaranteed prices, therefore, were a little over 100 per cent greater than the 10-year average, and nearly 150 per cent greater than the 5-year average immediately preceding the war, and an increase of about 140 per cent since the outbreak of the war. And yet gentlemen stand here and tell this House—in dead earnest, too—that the producer of wheat has been singled out for slaughter by giving him an absolute guaranty against loss. The argument is ridiculous. You have taken his product out of the realm of speculation; you have given it a credit standing. It is the only farm product upon which this country does guarantee a profit. It does not guarantee a profit on corn, nor on rye, nor on barley, nor on cotton; it guarantees it only upon wheat. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON rose.

Mr. LEVER. I am sorry, but I can not yield. Now, let us compare these later increases in the price of wheat with the increase in the prices of some of the more important elements that go into the cost of producing wheat. That is a fair comparison, is it not? Now, let us see. Take labor. Labor is a very important element in the production of wheat, and yet wheat, I may say as a practical man, is one of the cheapest crops to raise, and no wheat producer can deny that fact.

A MEMBER. Oh, yes.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think you could prove it; you might deny it. Take the increase in the price of labor. Since the outbreak of the war it has increased 35 per cent for the United States, but only 33 per cent in the Northwestern Central States. Take binder twine, and there is an increase of 111 per cent in the North Central West and an average of 106 per cent in the United States.

Cultivators have increased 54 per cent in the United States and 45 per cent in the North Central West. Fertilizer has increased 33 per cent in the United States and 23 per cent for the North Central West. Mowers have increased in the United States 40 per cent and in the North Central West 35 per cent. Wagons have increased 52 per cent for the United States and 26 per cent for the North Central West. Plows have increased 61 per cent in the United States and 47 per cent in the North Central West. Grain sacks have increased 84 per cent in the United States and 76 per cent for the North Central West. Gasoline has increased less than 100 per cent. Harrows have increased 69 per cent. Mules have increased scarcely at all, not over 10 per cent. Land values, average increase for the United States, 63.8 per cent.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does the gentleman——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that gentlemen must not interrupt the gentleman on the floor without his permission.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. But these are most astounding statements.

Mr. LEVER. I take that in all good spirit, as the gentleman knows.

These figures demonstrate that the increase in the price of wheat since the outbreak of the war has been about twice the increase in the price of the principal articles which go into the production of wheat. They show further that an acre of wheat will buy more of these things under the guaranteed price than this same acre would have bought in 1914, before the war. [Applause.]

It must also be borne in my mind, when you are talking about the increase in the price of machinery, and the like of that, that the average life of farm machinery is five years, and you must divide your increased cost by four or five in order to get your actual increase to the farmer. The guaranteed price for wheat is an annual proposition.

More than that, if you can not make a profit under the guaranteed price of wheat, then it is certain that the wheat farmer of this country was headed into the jaws of bankruptcy before the war. There is no question about that.

Now, let us make another comparison. I want to compare the guaranteed price of wheat with certain other principal farm products. Corn, since the beginning of the war, has increased 117.3 per cent, oats 125 per cent, barley 229 per cent, rye 273 per cent. And barley and rye, you will understand, have an abnormal price at this time because they have been heavily called upon as substitutes for wheat. Buckwheat has increased 121 per cent, potatoes 32 per cent, hay 53 per cent, cotton 167 per cent, beef cattle 40 per cent, hogs 99.7 per cent.

On the list of articles enumerated, wheat stands fourth in increase of price since the beginning of the war. If you eliminate barley and rye, which have an abnormal value, as I explained, wheat would stand second from the top. The average increase of all of these products, 10 of them, since the war is 125 per cent plus. The average for wheat is 140 per cent plus. Yet gentlemen tell me that wheat has been singled out for slaughter! The facts and the figures do not prove it.

I am relying upon the Monthly Crop Reporter, issued by the Department of Agriculture from time to time. Their figures may be wrong; I do not know. But I am relying upon an official document.

Now, let me say this to you: If we are going to fix a price, or permit anyone else to fix a price, that price must be stable. If we are going to have fluctuations from time to time; if we are going to have wheat at $2.50 to-day and $2.60 to-morrow and $2.75 next month you will make it absolutely impossible for the 90,000,000 consumers of this country to know where they are from day to day. You will upset wage scales and disjoint the machinery of industry. You will do more than that; you will cause the Government of the United States to break its pledged word to the allies.

I say to you that the President has given his word, the word of the people of this country, to the allies that "If you will help me maintain this price, if you take over any surplus that may be on my hands at the end of a crop year, I will see to it that the people of this country will keep their faith with you." That is what the President has said. Our ally at the north, gallant little Canada, has already fixed the price on wheat—last week or week before—at $2.21, the exact ratio of $2.20 at Chicago for American wheat. She is following our lead. She regards that as a reasonable guaranty to the producers of wheat in Canada. Shall Congress upset this obligation? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. My amendment is to amend the McLaughlin amendment. I think the vote should be taken on that first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct. The first vote is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I believe a point of order was made on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, that it was beyond the power of the House to increase the price.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That point was reserved. Does the gentleman make that point?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I make that point.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to be heard on that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. KREIDER. Let us have that amendment read again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MORGAN moves to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. McLAUGHLIN, by striking out in the proviso thereof the figures "$2.50" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$2.65."

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have an amendment pending, with a point of order reserved against it.

Mr. LEVER. I ask that that amendment be reported, and I make the point of order on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McKENZIE: Amend by adding at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any miller, wholesaler, jobber, retailer, or other person to sell or offer for sale any rye flour, barley meal, barley flour, oatmeal, corn meal, or corn flour at a higher price than the price asked by such miller, wholesaler, jobber, retailer, or other person for wheat flour.

"Any person violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than $1,000 or imprisoned not to exceed one year."

Mr. LEVER. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan moves to concur in Senate amendment No. 44, with an amendment as follows:

"Page 99, line 10, strike out all of Senate amendment No. 44 and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"'That section 14 of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel,' approved August 10, 1917, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat and that it is essential that the producers of wheat, produced within the United States, shall have the benefits of the guaranty provided for in this section, he is authorized, from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit. The President shall thereupon fix such guaranteed price for each of the official grain standards for wheat as established under the United States grain-standards act, approved August 11, 1916. The President shall from time to time establish and promulgate such regulations as he shall deem wise in connection with such guaranteed prices, and in particular governing conditions of delivery and payment, and differences in price for the several standard grades in the principal primary markets of the United States, adopting No. 1 northern spring or its equivalent at the principal interior primary markets as the basis. Thereupon, the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of wheat produced within the United States, that, upon compliance by him with the regulations prescribed, he shall receive for any wheat produced in reliance upon this guarantee within the period, not exceeding 18 months, prescribed in the notice, a price not less than the guaranteed price therefor a fixed pursuant to this section. In such regulations the President shall prescribe the terms and conditions upon which any such producer shall be entitled to the benefits of such guaranty. When the President finds that the importation into the United States of any wheat produced outside of the United States materially enhances or is likely materially to enhance the liabilities of the United States under guaranties of prices therefor made pursuant to this section, and ascertains what rate of duty, added to the then existing rate of duty on wheat and to the value of what at the time of importation, would be sufficient to bring the price thereof at which imported up to the price fixed therefor pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this section, he shall proclaim such facts, and thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon wheat when imported in addition to the then existing rate of duty, the rate of duty so ascertained; but in no case shall any such rate of duty be fixed at an amount which will effect a reduction of the rate of duty upon wheat under any then existing tariff law of the United States. For the purpose of making any guaranteed price effective under this section, or whenever he deems it essential in order to protect the Government of the United States against material enhancement of its liabilities arising out of any guaranty under this section, the President is authorized also, in his discretion, to purchase any wheat for which a guaranteed price shall be fixed under this section, and to hold, transport, or store it, or to sell, dispose of, and deliver the same to any citizen of the United States or to any Government engaged in war with any country with which the Government of the United States is or may be at war or to use the same as supplies for any department or agency of the Government of the United States. Any moneys received by the United States from or in connection with the sale or disposal of wheat under this section may, in the discretion of the President, be used as a revolving fund for further carrying out the purposes of this section. Any balance of such moneys not used as part of such revolving fund shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided, however, That the guaranteed prices for the several standard grades of wheat for the crop of 1918 shall be based upon No. 2 northern spring or its equivalent at not less than $2.50 per bushel at the principal interior primary markets, and this guaranty of prices shall not be dependent upon the action of the President, but is hereby made absolute and shall be binding until May 1, 1919."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair state that a vote "yea" means a vote to concur in the Senate amendment with this amendment, and that a vote "nay" is a vote not to concur with the amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment will answer "yea" as their names are called, and those opposed will answer "nay." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 180, answered "present" 3, not voting 120, as follows:

YEAS—127.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He did not.

Mr. EMERSON. I am paired with Mr. FLOOD. I answered "no," but I withdraw that and answer "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FERRIS: To concur in the Senate amendment No. 44, with the following amendment: Page 100, line 22, after the word "eighteen," insert "and ninteen hundred and nineteen."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma to concur in Senate amendment No. 44.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORGAN) there were 98 ayes and 167 noes.

So the motion was lost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a further conference.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the House having voted to nonconcur, is not that tantamount to a disagreement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is right.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that a further conference be asked for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, Mr. HAUGEN, and Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WRIGHT, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely, on account of the death of his wife.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this morning the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] asked unanimous consent that on Monday next the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] might proceed for 45 minutes. I objected, because I felt compelled to protect District day, but I now ask unanimous consent that on next Monday, when the first bill for the District Committee is being considered, general debate be limited to two hours, and that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] have 45 minutes of that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that on next Monday, on the first bill to be considered from the District Committee, general debate shall be limited to two hours, of which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] shall have 45 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me that that is not a wise agreement to make at this time. A motion might be made to suspend business on District day, or the question of consideration might arise. If the first bill is on the Union Calendar, there will be no difficulty about yielding time. It seems to me it is tying the House up so that the gentleman might not get the time if the agreement was made, and I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 19, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.
